"Abandoned Luncheonette" and "No Goodbyes" are albums that introduced the pop-soul sound they are now known for. The classic "She's Gone" is contained on both of these albums.

"Beauty on a Back Street" proved that the band is capable of playing hard-rock. "X-Static" had the band adapting with the new wave era.

But Hall and Oates is most comfortable with the pop-soul sound, as "Private Eyes" and now "H2O" have shown.

The theme of "H2O" is relationships between men and the various types of women. "H2O" contains several songs that should be big hits. "Maneater," the opening track is a song about a man who has fallen in love with a girl who lives for money. The woman is wild/a she-cat tamed by the purr of a Jaguar/Money's the matter/If you're in it for love, you ain't gonna get too far. The song is held together by the "neat" bass playing of Tom Wolk.

"One on One" tells the story of a guy who wants to get back with his girl. You can't tell me you don't miss me girl/I think I might know you too well. Like "I Can't Go for That" from "Private Eyes" LP, "One on One" features programmed synthesizers and compu-rhythm drums that give the song it's fullness.

"Family Man" features a guy who reluctantly turns down a proposition from a beautiful call-girl. Leave me alone/I'm a family man and my bark is worse than by bite-/Leave me alone/I'm a family man/but if you push me to far I just might.

"Italian Girls" is "schlock" at its best. Where are the Italian Girls?, the speaker asks. The song is complete with such bubble gum lyrics as I see Sophia on the silver screen — and I drink so much vino rosso/no more amarone. The song is never to be taken seriously and it is obvious that Hall and Oates do not take it as such.

"Guessing Games" is about a guy who is continually teased by his girlfriend. He is tired of not knowing what she feels or thinks. I could see you change from day to day/But you kept me guessing playing for fun.

Overall, the album's lyrics are simple, and at times even weak. But Hall and Oates have never been noted for their lyrics. Hall, who writes most of the band's words and music, has once again composed an album filled with hooks and catchy guitar licks. Oates plays guitar admirably, especially on "Family Man."

Believe it or not, there are other members in Hall and Oates. Although their names go unnoticed, their musicianship does not.

G.E. Smith, the lead guitarist, provides some interesting riffs throughout the album. Smith's guitaring reminds one of Martin Belmont, formerly with Graham Parker. Mickey Cuccy is on drums while Charlie DeChant plays the saxophone. DeChant's playing on "Maneater" is excellent, providing the song with its implied sensuality.

"H2O" will undoubtedly provide Hall and Oates with another smash LP, and even more critical acclaim. But even more importantly, the duo from Temple University seems to have found themselves a "musical home."

Earth's Imminent Danger Escalates

By JOHN F. LYNCH

"The Fate of the Earth," by Jonathan Schell, is a critical analysis of the origins, development and the future use of nuclear weapons.

Schell lays out a thorough overview of how humankind is heading in the wrong direction down a one-way street with the advanced development of nuclear arms. The main point, which is enforced throughout the book, is that if the militaristic policies of the world powers continue, a nuclear holocaust will be inevitable. The time is now to do what we can to stop the further testing and technological advancement in the field of nuclear weapons, for soon it will be too late.

Schell analyzes in the first part of the book the ramifications of a nuclear disaster and makes reference to the Hiroshima-Nagasaki tragedies. His descriptive wording generates an uneasiness within the reader concerning the events which can occur during such an attack. His style confronts the reader with the realities of the imminent danger. The scare tactics he employs are powerfully effective.

The second section of the book deals with the explosive situation which has developed over the years between the two superpowers (the United States and the Soviet Union) and what lies ahead for humankind if the two countries continue in the nuclear arms race.

The development of nuclear arms has perpetuated human beings' detrimental effect on the environment, according to Schell. In the last sections of the book, Schell suggests our morality has been somehow diminished because of the proliferation of nuclear arms.

"The Fate of the Earth" is an extremely pertinent book, dealing with a topic that is foremost in many people's mind. Schell has shed some insight into the situation at hand. Man must realize that nuclear weapons are suicidal and the time, money and technology allocated to their development is ridiculous.

However, Schell feels that the average man on the street neither cares about a nuclear disaster nor understands why people protest it because the average man has no control over it. This attitude, Schell feels, is what could actually cause a disaster to arise. Schell emphatically believes in the need to evaluate the real threat of a nuclear disaster and to do something about it.

Schell obviously has a myopic point of view in believing the public is apathetic and uninformed on the nuclear arms issue. Regardless of this shortcoming, Schell's book is an interesting expose on nuclear apocalypse and he aggressively asserts his position.

More 'Madness' Sure to Follow

By PETER BERKERY

"Shear Madness," a comedy whodunit, and the longest running play in Philadelphia's theatre history, recently celebrated its first anniversary. According to Frank Anzalone, production stage manager, in Philadelphia this "just does not happen." The show has been playing at the Charles II playhouse in Boston for over two years now and is the longest running theatrical production in that city's history. Productions have just opened in Chicago and St. Louis.

Members of the company of "Shear Madness" celebrate the show's success.

Despite all the hoopla over this play, as a whodunit, it is not very convincing, and as a comedy it is often overdone. Dan Schiff plays Tony Whitcomb, the proprieter of "Shear Madness," a unisex hair salon. The role is that of a homosexual, and Schiff does produce some funny moments, but too often he relies on generalizations that are over-exaggerated and become rather trite. The play relies heavily on the spontaneity of both the actors and the audience, which does not make for a very convincing whodunit.

Yet "Shear Madness" does provide some very enjoyable entertainment. Each night's performance is truly unique, which may be a reason for the play's longevity. A distinct local flavor is captured by the show, making things more interesting and enjoyable for the audience. The crowd also actively participates in the show, providing some comic relief for the actors and a much more enthusiastic audience.

The major failing of "Shear Madness" is that too many varibles are out of the actor's control. This often creates an unfavorable response from the audience. The major character in the play, Nick Rosetti, an undercover cop who conducts the investigation, is played by Michael Samreny. He agrees that there is a certain "line" that the actor cannot step over in his participation with the audience. Sometimes, due to the spontaneity of the moment, Samrany admits that he has overstepped this line. He must then work even harder to bring the audience back to where he wants them.

Although "Shear Madness" is not spine-tingling mystery or witty comedy at its best, it does provide an enjoyable evening of light entertainment. One cannot easily imagine such a play on Broadway, but its local popularity cannot be denied.

Aretha Franklin Jumps to It

By JAYNE M. STUART

Awesome; an accurate description of the recent performance of Aretha Franklin at the Valley Forge Music Fair on Oct. 22. The Queen of Soul has presence. Every song rang true with her clear, powerful voice. When Franklin put her all behind her famous yells, the whole audience held its breath. One couldn't help but feel privileged to be there, to be able to see a living legend.

Aretha Franklin

Franklin has been in the limelight for over 20 years. She first auditioned for Columbia Records in 1960 and was immediately recognized as a talented singer. In 1966 Franklin changed labels and there began the career that will reserve her a place in musical history. By the mid '70s Franklin had amassed six gold albums and 14 gold singles. To add to this impressive record, Franklin has been presented with numerous musical awards.

Soul is music from deep within the singer's heart and mind. It is music that expresses common emotions which everyone can relate to. Although the songs often reflect a sad theme, Franklin instilled in them a power that was amazing. Soul music requires a particularly forceful and expressive voice to convey the true feelings and emotions of the songwriter. Franklin has this and more. She sings with emotion and style unparalleled by any singer of today.

Franklin's performance was one of a true professional. She has so much spirit and personal fortitude. She just recently released 'Jump to It," an album which contains a hit single with the same name. The song has been on the top of the soul charts for many weeks. Her performance consisted mainly of her older material from the '60s and '70s. She sang such hits as "Think," which was featured in the movie, "The Blues Brothers," "Respect" and "Try a Little Tenderness."

The performance had all the necessary ingredients for a successful show, and it was just that. Franklin is surely the Queen of Soul and proved she is more than worthy of that name.

One refreshing aspect of this concert was the audience. It was nice to see a crowd that could truly appreciate the talent and professionalism of this performer.

Fassbinder's 'Lola'

By MIKE NOONE

Following the shocking death of Rainer Werner Fassbinder on June 10 of this year, his films have received a great deal of publicity. Although his films have long been favorites of the avante garde crowd, they are now being discovered by a wider audience. Lola, heralded as Fassbinder's masterpiece, proved itself to be just that. The film is set in Germany during the 1950s, while the country is in the midst of an expansionist movement that involves the principle characters. Lola (Barbara Sukowa) is the singing prostitute star of a posh night club who dreams of respect that comes with a traditional wedding and family. She is the favorite of a local corrupt contractor, Schuckert, who enjoys the pleasures of life and laughs off any confrontations. He is brought to life by the superb acting of Mario Adorf. In their life of corruption and hypocracy comes a stoic, honest building comissioner played by Armin Muellar Stahl who falls in love with Lola before he knows of her true profession.

The film is saturated in blunt, crystal clear symbolism which Fassbinder brings to life by bathing his characters in various shades of light. The commissioner, Von Bohm, first appears in soft blue light. Then, after falling in love with Lola, he is engulfed by green tones right down to his suit and tinted glass in his office. In contrast to this Lola, during her performance, is immersed in reds and pinks, but off duty she is rinsed in virgin whites and yellows. In one scene Von Bohm and Lola are sitting in a car with Von Bohm's side completely blue and green and Lola's side contrasting in both pink and white.

When the commissioner proposes to her, Lola climbs into a hayloft to return the favor. Later Lola's illegitimate daughter, innocently climbs to the same loft and ends up in the same spot. After the proposal, Von Bohm is led to the night club by a so-called humanist, and is devastated by Lola's performance.

He is now shown in sharp light for the first time as a result of his confrontation with reality and proceedes to destroy the system. The film is predictable and this is deliberate and heightens the effect. Fassbinder uses peculiar camera angles that allow the audience to view scenes through windows and open doors, keeping the characters at a distance, but still allowing us to feel for them.

The film has an unusually, happy ending for the characters, yet remains bitter. The system triumphs. It engulfs Von Bohm's integrity as well as the moral stands of the humanist

Idealism (in Fassbinder's view of the rebuilding of Germany) is doomed and he places future hope in Lola's daughter Maria. Ironically Lola, who desperately tries to escape her position in life becomes the very person who holds the system together.

Icecats Open Season Undefeated

By TOM KOLON

The Villanova Icecats opened their 1982-83 hockey season with an undefeated weekend at home consisting of an opening day 2-2 tie with Drexel and a 4-2 victory over West Chester State. Yet, the weekend endeavor did not quite turn out the way the Icecats and Head Coach Skip Probst expected.

The hockey team finished up last season with a fine record of 21-10, capping it off by capturing the Hannigan Cup to win the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference (MACHC) for the second straight year. Now in his sixth season as mentor of the Icecats, Probst has turned around a team that totaled a 7-17-2 record in 1977-78 to a combined record of 76-26-7 in the next four years. During this period, Villanova has produced its best teams and the only two league championships in its 28-year history.

Last season, Villanova placed nine men on the All-Star team; however, five of them are not returning. In full, the squad lost the services of seven men who combined for over 70 goals of the Icecat offense and the backbone of the defense.

But will these seemingly large gaps produce too great a barrier for the team to overcome in their drive to the top? No, for they will be aptly filled by returnig junior captain Frank Segreto (18 goals, 19 assists, All-Star) and assistant captains Jeff Beck (15 goals, 18 assists) and Ken Downey (All-Star defenseman). These three men are aiming to lead their team, which consists of eleven rookies, to their third straight Hannigan Cup.

This weekend, the rustiness of the yet untested and fairly young squad showed through. Villanova was only able to come away this weekend with a win and a tie and only outscored their opponents 6-4 when they and their fans had been expecting two blowouts. On Saturday, the Icecats skated to a 2-2 deadlock with a much tougher Drexel team than they had planned to meet.

Drexel broke out on top in the first period, but Tim Curran soon answered back with a goal assisted by Joe Curci and Jamie Huston. Drexel the took the lead in the second period and held on until Bob Giordano notched things up again assisted by Bill McHugh.

At the final tick, the score remained even at 2-2. Assistant Captain Beck commented that there is a lot of good talent on the team, but they need time for things to start to click.

Sunday afternoon, the team was still showing signs of opening day lethargy. After beating West Chester five straight times last year, the Icecats were held to a 2-2 tie after two lackluster periods featuring goals by Paul McDonald and John Canuso. Finally, they broke it open in the third period and rode tallies by Beck and Huston to victory.

Coach Probst felt that with only two weeks of practice on the ice, it was tough to be physically and mentally prepared for teams that already had a few games under their belts. These games were pretty much a warm up for the team since there were many new lines being worked out.

Segreto stated that it was "only a fair performance." These games are something to take in stride and improve on. "We have a lot of work to do and we must correct the mistakes made this weekend because there are some tough games in the near future. Don Clark's performance in the nets was the only thing that prevented two losses."

Last season, the Icecats were 2-1 against Lehigh which is a vastly improved team this year. They will require a total team effort in order to be victorious again.

Wildcats Tourney Bound

By BOB HELLER

Villanova's field hockey squad closed out their regular season with a record of 7-10. During the last two weeks, they lost three games while winning only two.

After losing a squeaker at Rutgers, 1-0, the Cats returned home to face the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame. Sophomores Danine DeBernardi and Gina Roman scored two goals apiece pacing Nova to a 4-2 victory. Sue Lora assisted on two goals and Amy Hutchinson on one. This victory was Villanova's first in regulation time since their home opener against Salem Community College way back in September.

After a rainout against Rider, the Cats took on Widener College. Villanova lost this game in double overtime 3-2. DeBernardi and Hutchinson scored the two Wildcat goals in the loss.

The Wildcats were ready two days later for a game against Philadelphia Textile. Lora opened the scoring four minutes into the first half with her 12th goal of the season, assisted by DeBernardi and Hutchinson. Roman scored the second Wildcat goal six minutes later, with Lora assisting.

Five minutes later the Cats took a 3-0 lead as senior Regina Graham put a shot past the Textile goalie. DeBernardi had another assist on this goal. The Cats took this lead into the locker room at halftime.

Lora scored her second goal of the game eight minutes into the second half, assisted by Bonnie Bell off of a penalty corner. This made the score 4-0. Hutchinson made the score 5-0 with ten minutes left to go. Roman assisted on this goal. The Cats scored their final goal at 28:30 of the second half as Lora pushed a shot past the Textile goalie for her third goal of the game and her 14th of the season.

For Lora, this was her second hat trick this season, her first being against Hofstra. She needs only two more goals to tie Lisa Alderfer's record for most goals in a season (16) set back in 1978. Nova went on to complete a 6-0 rout of Textile. The Cats completely dominated the game, controlling the ball 98 percent of the time.

The Cats played their final regular season game Tuesday, Nov. 2, against Rider College. Lackluster play by Nova gave Rider a 2-1 victory. Roman scored the only Wildcat goal.

The Wildcats will travel to Keene, NH for the EAIAW championship this weekend. They will take on Keene State College on Friday. The winner of this game will face the winner of the C.W. Post-Lowell game on Saturday.

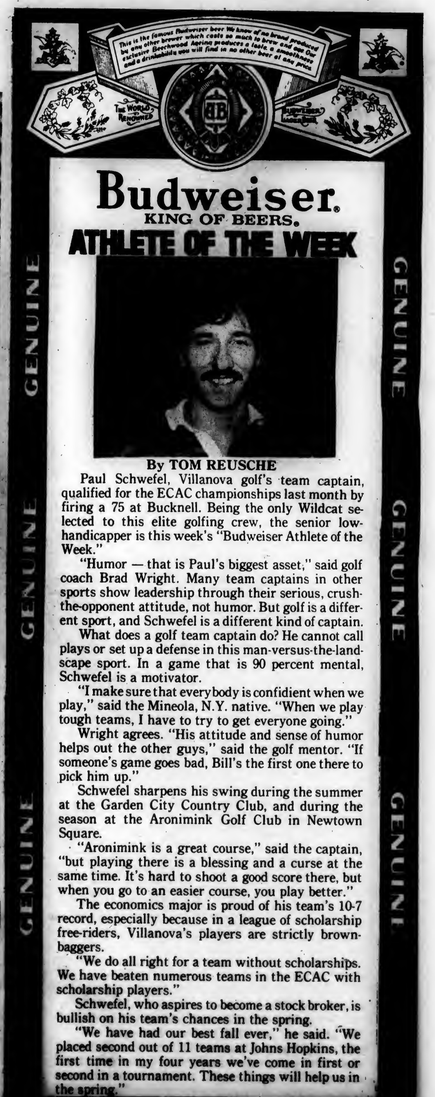
Soccer Sinks Shippensburg

By JOE BAGLEY

The Wildcat soccer team completed its slate of home matches Oct. 27, with a wild 5-4 overtime win over Shippensburg State. Dominating play and swarming over the opposing goalie, Villanova leapt out to a 4-0 lead early in the second half. After switching goalies however, Shippensburg managed to piece together 4 goals to throw the game into overtime. Junior Mike Lombardo rallied for the fifth and deciding goal, his first of the season, to give the Cats the victory. Also scoring for Villanova were seniors Mike Layfield with two goals and one assist, and Ramon Garcia, one goal, one assist. Freshman Steve Maillard scored one goal and had one assist. The sweetness of the win, though, was soured when Brian Barr reinjured his ankle. It appears that he will be unable to play the remainder of the season.

On Oct. 29 the team trooped to West Point and fell to the cadets 2-3, suffering their fourth defeat of the season. Again, Lombardo and Maillard each scored goals, and Layfield picked up the two assists, giving him ten for the season.

The Cats are currently under consideration to compete in the Big East Soccer Championship as they face off three graveling Philadelphia Soccer Seven matches with LaSalle, Nov. 3; Penn, Nov. 5; and Drexel, Nov. 19. Villanova's overall record is currently 7-4-3, and 1-2 in the Soccer Seven.



By TOM REUSCHE

Paul Schwefel, Villanova golf's team captain, qualified for the ECAC championships last month by firing a 75 at Bucknell. Being the only Wildcat selected to this elite golfing crew, the senior low-handicapper is this week's "Budweiser Athlete of the Week."

"Humor — that is Paul's biggest asset," said golf coach Brad Wright. Many team captains in other sports show leadership through their serious, crush-the-opponent attitude, not humor. But golf is a different sport, and Schwefel is a different kind of captain.

What does a golf team captain do? He cannot call plays or set up a defense in this man-versus-the-landscape sport. In a game that is 90 percent mental, Schwefel is a motivator.

"I make sure that everybody is confident when we play," said the Mineola, N.Y. native. "When we play tough teams, I have to try to get everyone going."

Wright agrees. "His attitude and sense of humor helps out the other guys," said the golf mentor. "If someone's game goes bad, Bill's the first one there to pick him up."

Schwefel sharpens his swing during the summer at the Garden City Country Club, and during the season at the Aronimink Golf Club in Newtown Square.

"Aronimink is a great course," said the captain, "but playing there is a blessing and a curse at the same time. It's hard to shoot a good score there, but when you go to an easier course, you play better."

The economics major is proud of his team's 10-7 record, especially because in a league of scholarship free-riders, Villanova's players are strictly brown-baggers.

"We do all right for a team without scholarships. We have beaten numerous teams in the ECAC with scholarship players."

Schwefel, who aspires to become a stock broker, is bullish on his team's chances in the spring.

"We have had our best fall ever," he said. "We placed second out of 11 teams at Johns Hopkins, the first time in my four years we've come in first or second in a tournament. These things will help us in the spring."

Team Expectations High

By MICHAEL BETZ

Four years ago, Harry Perretta took over the reins of the Villanova women's basketball team. Since then, the squad has compiled an 88-23 record and climbed from Division II obscurity to Division I national fame. Last year, the female Cats were 29-4, ranking eleventh in the final Associated Press women's basketball poll. As a result, expectations for the team are high in Perretta's fifth year.

The team this year will undoubtedly feel the loss of graduated seniors Stephanie Vanderslice and Lisa Ortlip. Vanderslice was an Academic All-American, while Ortlip was arguably the best player in Wildcat history. Ortlip holds 20 all-time records, among them the career marks for points, rebounds, blocked shots and games played.

"Having Stephanie and Lisa graduate is a big loss," Perretta admitted, "but I have a lot of confidence in our returners. I have to be cautiously optimistic about the upcoming season."

This optimism is based primarily on the return of two potential All-American guards, Nancy Bernhardt and Kathie Beisel. Bernhardt, a junior, led the team in scoring with a 16.5 points-per-game average last year. Beisel, a senior, averaged 12.0 ppg., and was named Co-Most Valuable Player of the women's Big Five with Ortlip.

The remaining starter from last year's squad is junior guard Andrea Burton. Other returning guards include junior Mimi Coleman and sophomore Tracey Smith. They are joined by senior forwards Rosemarie Burke and Courtney Vanderslice, junior Noreen Kemether, and sophomores Kerry Reilly, Kathy Razler and Sandra Williams. Incoming freshmen forwards Katrina Messenger and Kym Goodnight fill out the 1982-83 roster.

Each year of Perretta's reign has been marked by a steady improvement over the previous one. In order for this year's group to improve on last year's, a near-perfect season is necessary. Last year's team had the best record of any in Villanova history. They won the Dial Women's Basketball Classic and Big East Invitational tournaments. The team ended the regular season with their third consecutive Big Five crown and earned a trip to the final four, where they placed third.

Perretta, who is assisted by Andy McGovern and Mary Scharff, is realistic about the team's chances. "We surprised a lot of people last year," he stated. "This year will be different, we're going to have to work a lot harder; but I have a lot of confidence in the character of our players."

Ruggers Over .500

By JOE MARUSAK

Considering the circumstances, Villanova's rugby team has done quite well for itself.

With three games remaining, the ruggers stand at 4-3. Not too earth-shattering.

But consider a few things. Take, for instance, the squad's relatively loose organization. There are no mandatory practices. If a player misses a game or two, there develops no resentment on the part of teammates.

"There's a problem because it takes at least a season to pick up the sport," said Tom Murphy, a junior member of the squad.

That means there'll be a number of athletes who can't put in the time. These players eventually drop the sport.

But there are also those who do stick it out. George Betzler, the coach, feels fortunate to have them. Thus the lenient policies.

Then there's the problem of VU's schedule. The Wildcats have had to face opponents who are somewhat older. Recent examples: the Villanova Law School and Temple Medical School.

This year's team is also a relatively inexperienced one compared to the opposition.

We lost most of our scrum (to graduation)," Tom Murphy explained. "What we need are more guys to learn the sport." And that takes time.

So far though, the Wildcats have survived. Two of their victims, in fact, have been the Villanova Law School and Temple Medical School.

Part of the reason for VU's success has to be that certain seniors have produced. The captains Jake Cheli and Mike Terlizzi, and the president Mike Engel have been most instrumental in keeping things above .500.

Lax Ready After Workout

By JOE MARUSAK

After five weeks of tryouts, practices and exhibitions, the Villanova laxmen can finally rest.

Those who actually survived can consider themselves fortunate. Back in September, 61 athletes began the journey; 28 now remain. This group will take a respite. Practice won't start up again until Feb. 1.

"We use the fall as a tryout period," said Randy Marks, the first-year head coach. "During this time we worked out three days a week."

And that's not including the exhibition matches. Over the course of the fall session the Wildcats met Penn St., Montclair St., Lehigh and Kutztown, among others.

In those matches, everybody got a chance to play. Some proved themselves; some didn't.

As it turned out, there weren't too many surprising roster changes. "From those who were on the team last year we have a good nucleus," said Randy Marks, who coached Lower Merion H.S. for the past 11 years.

Both goalies from last year — Drew Cunningham and Doug Rich — will be back.

The only basic difference has been caused by the fine performances of several freshmen, "who will challenge some veterans for positions," according to the head coach. John O'Hara and Steve Morfit head the list.

Hoop 'Machine' Tuned for Season

By MIKE HEALEY

If college basketball teams could be likened to automobiles, then this year's model of the Villanova University squad would be an Indy 500 Formula One racer: sleek, fast and with a lot of horsepower.

Head coach and mechanic Rollie Massimino and his assistants in the pit crew have assembled what appears to be one of their most fine-tuned machines ever. Every integral part is in its place and the engine is whining to hit the race circuit.

The main source of horsepower for the racer is found in the 6-8, 225-pound frame of senior tri-captain John Pinone. Pinone, an All-Everything forward-center, enters his last year of collegiate play already as one of Villanova's most prolific scorers and rebounders in history.

Last season, Pinone managed about 17 points and seven rebounds a game, and deftly handled and passed the basketball as well. After a summer of intense international competition, he is ready to get the pistons moving again. When and if the Cats' engine starts sputtering, it is most likely Pinone who will rev it up.

Tri-captain Stewart Granger, 6-2 senior and one of the nation's premier point guards, represents the Wildcatalytic converter. Granger, closing in on Nova's all-time assist mark, is the man responsible for putting the Cats into overdrive, when need be.

An All-Big East selection last year, Granger led the league in assists for the second consecutive year. As his career shooting percentage of roughly 5 1 percent would indicate, he is an outside threat as well. Much of the team's past and future success rests squarely on his shoulders.

Rounding out the captains is senior Mike Mulquin, a bruising 6-7, 220-pound forward. Hustle, intensity and a penchant to mix it up with anybody characterize Mulquin's play. In struggles for rebounds and in pursuits of loose balls, Mulquin is likely to be the first man to hit the deck.

Other key returners to "this year's model" are Frank Dobbs, the Cats' "Mr. Versatlity," and a trio of talented sophomores, Eddie Pinckney, Dwayne McClain and Gary McLain.

Dobbs, a 6-5 junior, can fill in at point or shooting guard and small forward for good measure. The 6-10 Pinckney, one of the nation's top freshmen a year ago, returns as a clutch scorer and rebounder, providing more fuel for the engine to burn on. And then there are the McCLlain boys.

Dwayne, a sky-walking 6-6 swingman, electrified the crowd last year with his brand of slam dunks and superior outside shooting. Gary, a jitterbug of a point guard, more than adequately will fill in for Granger when the time comes.

Lest the road gets bumpy and laden with potholes, Massimino has recruited another banner freshmen class to smooth things out. High School All-American Harold Pressley will make the loss of Aaron Howard a little less painful, while sniping guard Dwight Wilbur makes for a definite outside threat.

Also on the scene is R.C. Massimino, an adept dribbler and defender, and two bruisers: 6-11 Chuck Everson and 6-10 Wyatt Maker.

Coach Massimino's goals for the season are pragmatic enough. "We want to win as many games as we can and get into a tournament," he said. "If we can do that, then to me, it's a successful season."

Blocking the way of a "successful season" is a very trying schedule with teams such as Kentucky, defending NCAA champ North Carolina, as well as traditional Big Five foes and the ever-difficult Big East schedule. As opposed to last year though, this time around the Wildcats are "the hunted rather than the huntee," said Massimino.

Only time will tell how much mileage the chief mechanic gets out of his Formula One, but judging from past seasons and successes, this model looks to go pretty far on a tank of gas.

Spikers Win

By PETE CONTE

The Villanova women's volleyball team concluded their regular season with five wins in their last seven games, giving them an overall record of 23-18.

The women spikers also placed third in the LaSalle Tournament. Victories over Cortland State and Drexel enabled the Cats to advance to the quarterfinal elimination round where they downed Slippery Rock State 15-4 and 16-14.

A setback to Ithaca, 16-14, 4-15 and 9-15 in the semifinals put Villanova in the consolation game against West Chester. There, they copped third place with a 15-5 and 15-9 verdict over the Rams.

The team begins a new season Nov. 12 as they enter post-season play in the hopes of obtaining an NCAA tournament bid. They venture to Providence College for the first-ever Big East Women's Volleyball Tourney, which Pittsburgh is favored to win.

Harriers Second

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Wildcat cross country team competed in the Big East Conference Cross Country Championships on October 23 in Boston, MA. at Franklin Park. The weather was sunny and 55 degrees.

The Wildcats played second with 75 points to Providence's 21 points. Providence has a very strong team with solid depth, as they placed five scorers in the top eight.

Leading the Wildcats through the five-mile course was the Irish Trio of freshman Anthony O'Reilly (9th overall in 23:36.3), juniors Brian O'Keefe (11th, 23:48.8) and Marcus O'Sullivan (13th, 23:51.6) as they finished within 15 seconds of each other.

J.J. Clark (20th, 24:23.1), Dermot Anderson (22nd, 24:24.4), and John Keyworth (23rd, 24:24.7) were the next scorers for the Wildcats as they finished close to each other by a margin of 1.6 seconds. Ken Lucks (41st, 25:14.8) and Mike Deignan (49th, 25:25.9) contributed their talents as well to the team effort.

The Wildcats will now be pointing their efforts and training to the upcoming IC4A Championships and the NCAA District Regional meets which are scheduled to take place on Nov. 13.

Intramural Softball

Last weekend the Intramural Department sponsored a three-day single pitch softball tournament. The single elimination tournament attracted a field of 28 teams, but the finals were dominated by holdovers from last year's tournament. Pi Kappa Phi, Dynasty, S.O.M.F. and the Noogie Patrol entered the semi-finals with Dynasty edging S.O.M.F., 11-10, to win the championship on Sunday.

The president of the Intramural Department, John Lavery, expressed satisfaction with this year's tournament.

Committee Study Favors Football

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

A 14-page study on the development of a rationale to reinstate a football program at Villanova, prepared by the University Senate Athletic Advisory Committee, will be presented by Dr. Joseph DesJardins at today's Senate meeting.

An advance copy of the study obtained by the Villanovan says the report only deals with a potential new football program at Villanova, not the old program or the decision to drop the sport.

According to John J. McGranaghan, chairman of the advisory committee, in a letter of introduction to the report, the committee "evaluated the rationale, issues, problems and potential in a 'forward looking' manner."

At the Oct. 16, 1981 University Senate meeting, the resolution US 8182-3-19 was voted upon and remanded to the advisory committee for further study. The motion reads: "Resolved: that the University Senate strongly recommends to the Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program at Villanova University."

The Senate's Executive Committee later voted to charge the advisory committee to provide "substantiation and a rationale for the motion."

Dr. Joseph Des Jardins John Walsh Photo

Des Jardins is the chairman of the sub-committee charged with providing the work behind the substantiation.

According to the study, the committee followed a two-fold approach in its compilation of facts. First, the committee gathered information from numerous sources, including officials at other schools where football had been restored (Fordham, Georgetown), various alumni groups, President John Driscoll, O.S.A., and the Board of Trustees Ad Hoc Alumni Committee.

"This committee believes that the question of restoring football can be answered independently of making a judgment about the decision to drop the sport," the study reads.

The study also states that the committee adopted an "advocacy role" in the attempt to provide a rationale for the Senate resolution.

"While not ignoring any information, we sought nonetheless to arrange that information in a way which provides the strongest support for the resolution," continues the advisory committee's study.

The study reports that there are three general areas in which intercollegiate football makes a "positive contribution" to a university: benefits to participating students; visibility for the university; a rallying point for student and alumni activities. The study expounds on each of the three points.

"The public exposure generated by an inter-collegiate football program also provides a significant positive contribution to the University . . . the local, regional and national publicity generated by inter-collegiate football likely is unmatched by any other single university activity," reads the study.

"The public exposure generated by an intercollegiate football program also provides a significant positive contribution to the University . . . the local, regional and national publicity likely is unmatched by any other single university activity."

The committee's study claims that the strongest argument against inter-collegiate football is financial. ". . .support for the Senate's resolution should focus on this. Realistically, the issue is not whether football might generate profits but whether or not it is worth the expense," the study explains.

The committee's study concludes with the recommendation that the Board of Trustees reconsider its decision to discontinue football. The committee cites the three factors the recommendation was based upon:

"Student willingness to be assessed a yearly $35 fee provides a substantial guaranteed revenue which was not available when football was discontinued.

"The committee finds the arguments for not counting tuition as a legitimate budget expense convincing. With this in mind . . . football can be made financially viable."

And ". . .a football program would have as a net cost to the university approximately $35,000 . . . we believe this to be an acceptable university expenditure," the study concludes.

V.U. Campus Space at Premium

By JAMES DeLORENZO

"Villanova has grown tremendously in the past ten years, and we are just now catching up with that growth," claims Dr. Charles Cherry, the chairman of Villanova University's Space Committee. "There are clearly space problems on campus now. While these problems haven't reached a crisis proportion," Cherry said, "We are trying to plan now to prevent a crisis, to look ahead to see what can be done."

The committee, formed by the University administration in the summer of 1982, reviews current problems on the campus; and works to insure the proper use of existing space and facilities. Composed of several of the University's vice-presidents and administrators, the committee conducts meetings every three weeks.

"Space, next to salaries, is a most troublesome problem at all college campuses," said Cherry. "At a time when other schools are experiencing problems, Villanova is expanding."

According to Chris Janosik, director of Residence Life, "There's no wasted space in the residence halls. The rooms are over-full. The square footage per student is less than the national average," said Janosik.

Two new dormitories are planned for construction on south campus, "which," said Janosik, "if class sizes remain the same, can accommodate people on our waiting lists."

"But the present cafeterias are way over capacity," Janosik said. "I've heard that all four facilities are overtaxed, and we need to look for solutions quickly."

"The administration is aware of the dormitory and dining space problems," Cherry said. "The expansion of the present Dougherty Hall facilities is a possiblility, but it won't be a real problem until the new dormitories are completed." According to Janosik, "The two new buildings planned are for a total of 320 students, but the new buildings do not have new cafeterias planned for them."

The two proposed dormitories, to be built with funds from the University's recent $25 million bond issue, are to be built on University property near Stanford and Good Counsel Halls.

"The lounge space in the dormitories is another problem," Janosik said. "We are looking at

Driscoll to Address V.U. Senate at Meeting Today

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The University Senate will meet today at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall with a schedule that will include an address on the state of the university by President John Driscoll, O.S.A., and a report by the Athletic Advisory Committee on the development of a rationale to reinstate a football program at Villanova.

Driscoll will open the meeting with his annual address to the University and is expected to speak on the direction the University is planning to take on the basis of the Covenant II Campaign and the recent issuance of a $25 million bond.

Following the president's address and approval of the minutes from the last Senate meeting, Dr. Edward Wallo of the civil engineering department will be introduced as the new engineering senator.

In addition, the outcome of the election for a fourth arts senator will be announced. Sen. Alvin Clay will present next the report of the Senate Budget Committee.

Dr. James J. Clarke, chairman of the University Senate Planning and Priorities Committee, will present for Senate approval the committee's report on the budget priorities forthe 1983-84 budget. The report's purpose is to emphasize budget priorities which should receive special attention.

According to the report, the priorities have been determined built on the assumption that the inflation rate will be in the range of 5-6 percent for the period of the 1982-83 budget, and that the inflation rate over the period of the 1983-84 budget will be in the range of 5.7 percent to 7 percent.

The highest priorities, according to the committee's report, include additional funds for development operation covering the Covenant Campaign; debt service on the bond issue so that the bonds do not fall into default; student financial aid; and minimal increases in student tuition rates and room and board fees. .

Geographical Society

The Geographical Society is pleased to announce that Dr. Vince Malmstrom, from Dartmouth University will be lecturing in the St. David's/Radnor Room of the Connelly Center on Nov. 19 from 12:30 to 1:20 p.m., on the topic of "The Geography of Megalithic Settlements in Scandinavia." All are welcome to attend.

Villanovans For Life

The Villanovans for Life are sponsoring a clothing drive for: Hunger Awareness Week on Nov. 14 through Nov. 18. Donations will be accepted in the VFL office between the West and East Lounges of Dougherty Hall.

El Salvador

For Hunger Awareness Week, Liberation Theatre presents "El Salvador," a contemporary play adapted from the original by Judith Gleason about the struggle of religious and lay leaders for reform in El Salvador. The theme of the play is personalized through the life of Archbishop Oscar Romero, who was martyred for denouncing governmental oppression. The production features original music by Danny Mason and Frank Kurz with choreography by Diane Pauling.

A performance will be given in the Main Chapel on Thursday, Nov. 18 at 8 p.m. Admission is free. For further information, call John Durnin at 645-4613.

Rosary

The Rosary is prayed at 7 p.m. in Corr Hall chapel Monday through Thursday. This is in fulfillment to our Lady of Fatima's request of the three children to whom she appeared six times in 1917. She said that "only she can bring peace."

Run-for-Hunger

The Campus Ministry is sponsoring a run-for-hunger as part of Hunger Awareness Week on Monday, Nov. 15 from 3-6 p.m.

Anyone interested in running can pick up a sponsor sheet at Campus Ministry in St. Rita's. If you can run one mile or 20 miles, your help will be greatly appreciated.

Amnesty International

Members are needed for the campus chapter of Amnesty International, the Nobel Peace Prize-winning organization which works for human rights. There are no meetings and there is but one simple duty — to write one letter a month in response to an Urgent Action appeal. These appeals concern citizens of almost any nation of the world who have "disappeared" into official custody, who are being denied the right to trial or medical care, who are being tortured, who have been arrested only for voicing peaceful dissent. The letters work; two of our subjects were released after our letters were sent last year. Contact Joseph Betz, Philosophy Department, at x4708 or 525-4499, or in writing.

French Club

French Club meeting Thursday, Nov. 18 at 12:45 p.m., 201 St. Thomas. Will discuss trip to Canada.

Ski Club Raffle Drawing

The Ski Club will be drawing the winners of the various ski packages and skiing accessories today at 3:30 p.m. in Dr. Klingler's office, Bartley Hall. All ticket holders are urged to attend, or will be notified by phone.

Florida/Bahamas

As the cold weather starts to settle for good, think of the sun, sand and partying which Florida and the Bahamas have to offer. Don't let us leave you behind for Spring Break '83. Deposits of $50 are now being taken in the Connelly Center ticket office. First come/first served.

University College Pre-Registration

Pre-registration for University College students has begun for the spring semester and will continue until Nov. 30. All U.C. students are encouraged to take advantage of this procedure to guarantee the class and time of your choice. To obtain more information stop in the U.C. Office, 107 Vasey Hall.

Political Union

Hinckley verdict debated. The Political Union will hold a debate on Thursday, Nov. 18 at 7:30 p.m. in the first floor lounge of St. Mary's Hall. The speaker will be Ed Rendell, district attorney of Philadelphia. The resolution is as follows: "This House believe that 'guilty but mentally ill' is a more appropriate verdict than 'innocent by reason of insanity.'" Only members may participate in the debate; however, guests and new members are welcome.

Women's Business Association

Accountants and business majors — the Women's Business Association will be sponsoring a speaker from Deloitte, Haskins and Sells on Women in the Big Eight, who will be discussing employment options for women interested in the field of public accounting. The lecture will be in the Wayne Room of the Connelly Center at 4:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 16. Refreshments will be served.

History Majors

Attention: history majors, those thinking of majoring in history and all other interested students. The department of history and Phi Alpha Theta are sponsoring a social on Nov. 18 at 3 p.m. in the North Lounge of Dougherty. Students will have the opportunity to talk over courses being offered in the spring semester with professors. Refreshments will be served.

Volunteer Project

Spring break volunteer project information meeting for Appalachia and New York inner city — 6 p.m., Nov. 17, St. Rita's Chapel.

Irish Studies

As part of the Concentration in Irish Studies Program, the following courses will be available in the Spring semester: Eng. 2500, The Irish Renaissance (MWF 9:30); His. 4522-90, Early Ireland (TTh 6-7:15); Hon. 5750, Modern Irish Poetry (T 1:00-2:50); Eng. 2620-1, Seminar in James Joyce (Th 1:30-3:20). Honors 5750 will be taught by Brian Donnelly, a visiting poet and critic from Ireland. While all of these courses are applicable to the Irish Studies Concentration, the student body at large is also encouraged to consider these courses. For further information on the program, please contact Dr. James Murphy of the English Department.

Theatre Auditions

Villanova Theatre announces auditions for two upcoming productions. Try-outs will be held for "The Lady from the Sea" (February production, Irene Baird directing) on Nov. 19 from 7-11 p.m. and Nov. 20 from 11 a.m.-5 p.m. Auditions for "Godspell" (March-April production, Terry Fimiano Guerin directing) will also be held at the above times, with the addition of Sunday, Nov. 20 from 12-5 p.m.

Call 645-4760 for an appointment.

Moral Dilemmas

Moral Dilemmas of today's college students: "Fundamentals of Decision Making."

Programs 3 and 4 will be presented on Nov. 16 and 18, respectively.

Program 3 deals with relationship decisions: The road to commitment. Sexual stereotypes within college-double standards. Pre-marital sex: an obligation or choice?

The fourth program, entitled Family Decision will be held on Nov. 18, and will be presented by Barbra Hahn.

Both meetings will take place in the Stanford Hall fourth floor lounge at 7 p.m.

Encore

Encore, the mature students group, met on Nov. 3 in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center. Mrs. Gaile Pohlhaus of the religious studies department gave an informative talk on "Religions in America." The next meeting will be held in the Connelly Center on Nov. 17. The speaker will be Dr. John Logue of the political science department, who will discuss "The Political Climate of the Times." All qualified mature students are invited to attend.

Irish Club

The Irish Club will have a quick meeting on Wednesday, Nov. 17 in 105 Bartley at 12:30 p.m.

Third Order of St. Augustine

The Augustinian Friars of the Province of Saint Thomas of Villanova, who staff seven parishes, two high schools and Villanova University in the Greater Philadelphia area, have recently established a local chapter of the Third Order of Saint Augustine. The local chapter is called the Chapter of Saint Monica and meets every fourth Wednesday of the month at Saint Augustine Friary, 214 Ashwood Road, Villanova. Through this "third branch" of the Augustinian Order, the friars hope to share with members the religious teaching and charisma of their spiritual Father and of the Augustinian tradition.

The Third Order provides a community setting and a long and rich heritage for those seeking to live the Christian life in a deeper way, according to Augustine's ideal of unity of minds and hearts intent upon God. Third Order members, or Secular Augustinians as they are also called, are fully members of the Augustinian Family who share its spirit and collaborate in its work while "continuing to live their chosen state of life."

This branch of the Augustinian Family is open to Catholic men and women, 18 and older, single or married, as well as to diocesan priests.

ways to convert some spaces to lounges and recreational space. For the number of students housed in some of the buildings, the present lounge space is insufficient. The ones that are adequately equipped are not maintained. We are presently trying to upgrade the facilities."

"Academic office space is a continuing problem," said Cherry. "It would be easier to allocate new spaces than redistribute old space."

One solution to the office space problem is the Morris Estates property. "It's like the domino effect," claimed Cherry. "If the Radnor Township zoning officials approve our plan, we could move administrative offices off the main campus, and the academic offices could benefit. The residents on Wistar Road (adjoining the property) are concerned with how we will use that property,"

Cherry said. "It will give us a little more space on campus, but not a great deal."

"We are feeling the pinch," said Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of the University College. "As our enrollment goes up, it's more and more difficult for us to find classrooms in the evening. When enrollment goes up," explained Armenti, "you need to service that enrollment. Our office space needs to be expanded, for our staff has increased with the enrollment.

"A few years down the road, we might need other buildings," Armenti said. "We might get to the point where the M.B.A., graduate and University College programs will all be at night, until all classrooms are being used all the time. We need to get maximum use of our present facilities," continued Armenti, "for to get any larger would incur a capital expense. We have a few more years before there are any serious problems."

"A long-range solution," Cherry said, "is another office and classroom building complex. A new building is clearly needed, but it's a question of money being raised."

Cherry added, "There is money allocated for the renovation of existing spaces by the bond issue, but such changes are not cheap and don't always please everyone.

"There are instances when departments can be accused of not properly using space, but when you are closed in there are bound to be tensions," said Cherry. "Most departments use every space they are allocated. When we are improving the use of available space," continued Cherry, "It's difficult to solve problems when you don't have more space to allocate."

"The parking lots we do have on campus should be enough to handle the current traffic," said Cherry. But according to Sgt. John Harrity, acting director of security, "When the Connelly Center was built, we never received additional parking to accommodate that traffic. In fact, we lost the parking lot that was on that site."

"When you have a big building like the Connelly Center attracting visitors, you need parking to go with it," Harrity explained. "But right now, there is no lack of parking space. If the people would park the way they are supposed to," added Harrity, "there would be no problems. It does get tight at times, yet if people are willing to drive around a little, they'll find open spaces."

The proposed new athletic field house "will solve many of our space problems," said Director of Athletics Dr. Ted Aceto. "Locker room space for our students is the main problem. The small number of lockers we have are constantly in use. The new field house will be a multi-purpose, but primarily intramural facility, with enough lockers, tennis and basketball courts, and an indoor track."

The site of the proposed field house is the present varsity baseball field. "When we receive approval from Radnor Township," Aceto said, "Then we'll break ground. The baseball field problem will be addressed. We are getting bids on the cost to build on another site, probably at St. Mary's. The softball team," added Aceto, "could then be moved in back of the new field house." Plans also include a refurbishing of the present Field House.

"If they plan on building a new field house," Harrity said, "you'll need parking for the construction workers, and when it's finished, parking for visitors." According to Aceto, "the parking problem is being addressed. Construction workers would have a place to park on the site, but the current lots wouldn't be affected. A greater influx of cars isn't really expected," Aceto said, "for more on-campus students will be able to come to the basketball games than before. There will be plenty of parking."

"The greatest asset to the athletic department has been the addition of lights and Astro-turf to the stadium," said Aceto. "It has helped our situation in regard to the outside fields. The rugby, Mendel and Austin fields get constant use and wear. We have no opportunity to seed them or rotate playing time on them," Aceto claimed. "We've been champing at the bit to get new fields on the Morris Estate property. A number of students want to compete in the intramural program, and we need the fields to accommodate them."

ADD TEN YEARS TO YOUR THINKING.

The environment at MITRE is years ahead of what others consider the state-of-the-art.

As General Systems Engineer for C³I — Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence — for the U.S. Air Force's Electronic Systems Division, it is our challenge to look beyond tomorrow to the world of 5 or 10 years from now. To analyze and engineer one-of-a-kind systems that will be more than current well into the 1990s.

The importance of our work is why we provide an environment you can do your best in. You'll work with some of the most accomplished experts in their fields. You will be challenged by long- and short-term projects in computer systems, systems software, systems architecture, radar systems, and satellite and terrestrial transmission. Engineers you'll be working with can advance your career a decade in technologies including fiber-optics, computer security, sensor technology and voice recognition.

Your excellence is nurtured in every way possible at MITRE. Facilities, compensation and benefits to attract and keep the finest people. Full tuition advancement plus an ongoing in-house lecture series from the unique MITRE Institute to promote your continued education. Election Analyzed

By LISA FEDERICO

"I feel we are seeing a movement away from right-wing government, to a center position," stated Dr. Jeffrey Hahn of the political science department, commenting upon the Nov. 2 nationwide election results.

"Generally speaking, where conservative Republicans won, it was by a narrow margin. But the liberal Democrats and Republicans won by comfortable margins," said Hahn.

Congressman Bob Edgar

As to the significance of these margins, Hahn claimed, "this is a sign that people are getting nervous with present conditions. The Democrats are coming home to roost."

Hahn explained that the elections indicate the Democratic party is receiving "increased support from labor, minority, and religious groups as well as more from women."

In response to the Democratic gains in the elections, Dr. Justin Green, also of the political science department, explained, "the 1980 elections were just transitory phenomena, and the 1982 elections confirm that view. What we are witnessing is the reconstruction of the Democratic party."

Reacting to Pennsylvania's elections, in which incumbent Sen. John Heinz soundly defeated his Democratic opponent Cyril Wecht, Green stated, "Heinz's victory in the U.S. Senate is a function of his recognition and personal property and the fact that Wecht is relatively unknown."

It is Hahn's opinion that, "A good strong candidate could have beaten Heinz."

Democratic incumbent Congressman Bob Edgar defeated Republican Steve Joachim in the Seventh Pennsylvania Congressional district, an area with a large number of Republicans, which includes Villanova University. "This is a conservative district and the continual re-election of Bob Edgar clearly shows the movement from conservative right-wing politics," stated Hahn.

Considering what Edgar's victory means to Villanova students, Hahn reported "I think Villanova is gaining a far more sympathetic ear in Congress than it had under Shultz. This is especially so in areas of student aid support and concerning issues of war and peace."

Using the 1982 elections as a guide, Green claims "Edgar is a strong candidate and I feel there is a good likelihood that he will be a candidate in the 1986 senatorial race against Arlen Spector. But the most important factor in the 1986 elections, as always, is the shape of the pocketbook."

Lectures and Concerts on Decline Nationwide

By BETH BONINA

"Most students do not realize how much big-name speakers cost. Villanova just doesn't have the funds to book as large a name as, for example, Walter Cronkite," explained Villanova Union Program Director Christine Muller-Stork, commenting upon the lack of lectures and concerts being sponsored this year on campuses across the country, including Villanova.

Muller-Stork emphasized that "if a speaker comes to a campus, he has to have a relatively well known name to attract a good-sized crowd."

At Villanova, the number of lecturers is narrowed down because certain subjects are discouraged, according to Muller-Stork. "We avoid having such subjects as abortion lectured on here. There are some subjects which are against the mission policy of the University, and we would have to have both points of view on the subject, or avoid the controversy altogether.

"We also discourage those subjects which might evoke very strong political feelings which might bring on the threat of violence towards the speaker, or to the students in general," emphasized Muller-Stork.

Last December, a forum featuring a member of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (P.L.O.) and a former Israel government officer was scrapped by the Student Activities Office for fear Villanova would be subjected to picketing and striking spectators.

Rock concerts are also suffering a lack of scheduling, according to Nat Burger of the William Morris Agency, which books many college concerts.

"Colleges don't have money like they used to for rock acts," said Burger. "College buying is down, especially this year."

One possible solution to booking entertainment acts is broadcasting concerts via satellite by the Campus Entertainment Network, a new video entertainment network that will beam concerts directly to big-screen TVs on college campuses. Villanova is one of the 125 campuses that has signed with the network.

Performer Kenny Loggins appeared at the Fieldhouse Nov. 9 in a concert that is expected to cost the university an unconfirmed $25,000. Muller-Stork said that there is the possibility that there will be future lectures and concerts this year, but declined to name the acts being considered.

Freind Initiates Loan Program

By MICHAEL O'BRIEN

The Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency and the federal government have initiated the Parent Loan for Undergraduate Students (PLUS Program), that permits parents to receive relatively low interest loans to assist in the cost of educating their children. The new loans are also available for independent undergraduate students and for graduate students as well.

The interest rate on the loan dropped from 14 percent to 12 percent Nov. 1. The new loan was initiated by Stephen Freind, a member of the House of Representatives from Pennsylvania. Freind is a member of the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency. According to Freind's legislative assistant, Maria Cahill, the loan interest rate was originally set at 9 percent. However, with the increasing popularity of the loan, the rate has risen to 12 percent.

The new PLUS Program, which is also called Additional Loan Assistance for Students (ALAST Program), offers $3000 per student, per year, as long as the student remains enrolled full-time. However, unlike the Student Loan Program, the parents of the student are obligated to repay the loan because the parents sign the loan agreement. Graduate students and independent undergraduate students may also apply for these loans, but the individual student is responsible for repayment of the loan, since it is his name that appears on the loan agreement.

The loan, which is not based on the income of the parents, is a new attempt to help families meet rising costs of education. Janet Weiss, of the Villanova Financial Aid office, explained that the loan may be applied for through the bank, much like the Student Loan Program.

"There are basically two sections that comprise of the loan: the first part is for parents to fill out, and the second part is for the school administration to fill out in order to verify that there is proper enrollment of the student."

For those who are enrolled part-time, the program will offer a loan of $1500 dollars per student for the academic year as long as the enrollment requirements are met.

The repayment requirements of this loan are more strict than that of the Student Loan Program. After 60 days of signing the loan agreement, the student or parent must begin repaying the loan. For those who are graduate or independent undergraduate students, the payments can be deferred as long as the student remains enrolled fulltime. However, they must pay the monthly interest.

Political Union Debate

By JIM DENNY

The Villanova Political Union sponsored its third debate of the year, Nov. 8, on the resolution: "This house believes that a stronger United Nations is in the interest of the U.S., in the Connelly Center, featuring James Avery Joyce, a consultant to the United Nations' Economic and Social Committee.

Joyce began his presentation with a history of the establishment of the United Nations. According to Joyce, after World War II, the United States was "one of the leaders of the new world order." Recognizing its new status, the United States helped create the United Nations, Joyce said. Since then the United States has become involved in many problems of international concern. "Everything that's important," Joyce said, "is somewhere in the U.N. network."

When asked what could be done to strengthen the United Nations, Joyce suggested that: U.S. public opinion must say, "We don't want war"; the existing machinery of the United Nations must be used in the place of confrontation; public opinion (especially in the United States) must strengthen the United Nations.

The moderate party, represented by Michelle Testu, said that the United Nations is vital, but mainly as a forum for ideas. It is necessary to recognize the interests of the world community, but also to realize that international law is not binding. Therefore, Testu asserted, "the terms stronger and weaker have no application."

The speaker for the liberal party, John J. Daly, pointed out three areas in which the United Nations has been helpful in partly fulfilling U.S. desires: nuclear energy, aid to third world nations and Israeli relations with its Arab neighbors.

The conservative party, represented by Dan Gabaldon, stated that the United Nations' military or political power should not be increased. He pointed out that since its beginning, the U.N. Security Council has been "impotent" in stopping the superpowers. "Even when a resolution is passed," he noted, "the effects have been little if any."

A new member of the Union and the conservative party, Greg Binda, commented that he "wasn't surprised they have a Brit here. They're always trying to drag our butts into their problems." The resolution was rejected 14-13, with one abstention.

Senate

Dr. Joseph DesJardins, chairman of the subcommittee of the Athletic Advisory Committee, will present the committee's final report on developing a rationale behind the reinstatement of football.

The committee was remanded by the Senate Executive Committee to provide substantiation for Senate resolution US 8182-3-19: "That the University Senate strongly recommends to the Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program at Villanova."

Who's Who Announced

The names of 49 Villanova students selected for inclusion in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges for 1982-83 were announced this week by the Office of the Dean of Students.

The recipients of the honor were chosen by a committee of 18 administrators, faculty members and students from the colleges of Arts and Sciences, Commerce and Finance, Engineering, Nursing, the University College and the Office of Student Life, according to the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students and chairman of the committee.

The selections of the committee were based on five criteria: senior class status; academic standing; disciplinary standing; involvement in extra-curricular activities; and leadership ability, according to Stack.

The recipients will be honored at an annual formal presentation dinner later this year, and will also appear in a special section of the Belle-Air yearbook.

The recipients and their respective colleges are: Carol P. Alkons (Engr.); Catherine M. Alznauer (Nurs.); George J. Anderson (C&F); Paul R. Andrews (A&S); James W. Arrison (A&S); Paul D. Bannick (A&S); Daniel J. Bernnger (Engr.); Theresa A. Brett (A&S); Lori A. Cullen (Nurs.); William R. Clark (C&F); and Robert M. Courey (Engr.).

Also, Joseph A. D'Alonzo (A&S); Nanette M. DeRenzi (A&S); Christine M. Dougherty (A&S); Steven A. Dreiss (Engr.); Joseph M. Estock (Engr.); Renee M. French (A&S); Sheila Freund (C&F); Albert R. Senate Must Pass Football Proposal

When the University Senate meets this afternoon, one of the most important issues on the agenda will be the consideration of a resolution first proposed back in October of 1981: "That the University Senate strongly recommends to the Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program at Villanova University."

When the resolution originally was proposed, rather than voting on it directly, the full senate remanded it to its Athletic Advisory Committee, charging it to provide a rationale. Today,the committee's report will be presented to the senate for its consideration, and the resolution will more than likely be voted upon.

On the basis of the Athletic Advisory Committee's report, we strongly urge the senators to vote in favor of the resolution.

The committee's report is a well-researched analysis of the entire football question, reaching the conclusion that football at Villanova would not only be beneficial to the entire University, but financially feasible as well.

The committee's report outlines three general benefits to the University from the restoration of intercollegiate football to Division IAA, Division II or Division III. Football, says the report, would provide "benefits to participating students; visibility for the University; and a rallying point for student and alumni activities."

But the Athletic Advisory Committee didn't ignore the main argument against football, — either that it's a major financial burden to the University. Instead, they researched it, and using figures from the Board of Trustees own Ad Hoc Alumni Committee, showed that with the $35 fee students have expressed an overwhelming willingness to pay, football would not be a financial drain.

The issue is now in the hands of the full Senate. Based on the findings of their own committee's report and on proven student support, there can be no justifiable alternative to voting for the resolution.

Referendums Say 'No' to Build-up

The various nuclear freeze referendums held around the country in the recent elections should send a clear message to the Reagan administration in Washington: the American people overwhelmingly support an immediate halt to any further testing, development, production and deployment of nuclear weapons.

To continue in the arms race and to spend billions of dollars on the defense budget at a time when funds are being cut for education, housing, jobs, health care, mass transit, social security and other service programs is simply irresponsible, and people are beginning to recognize this. A policy of massive build-up of nuclear arms is detrimental to the well-being of those whom the government is supposed to represent. Monies previously allocated to the defense budget could and should be reallocated to help bolster our struggling economy.

To continue in the arms race to establish a "superior" position at a time when the combined resources of the United States and Soviet Union can destroy the world several times over is purposeless. If the militaristic policies of the Soviet Union continue, nuclear war is imminent. What must be comprehended is that there can be no winners, no survivors, in a nuclear holocaust, regardless of what the Reagan people claim. It is time to start taking responsibility for the survival of humankind. Implementing a nuclear freeze is a necessary first step.

The American public has explicitly voiced its desire to end the arms race. The call for a nuclear freeze must now be adhered to by the Reagan administration if it is to responsibly represent the people and safeguard their existence.

Football Survey was Advocacy

To the Editor:

It comes as no surprise that 96 percent of Villanova students favor the return of football, given the apparent inability of either the Student Government committee that conducted the poll or the Villanovan that reported it to appreciate the difference between advocacy and opinion sampling. While I profess no expertise in evaluating the validity of opinion polls, a few observations are surely in order:

Item: The publicity plastered all over campus stated in bold letters, "Vote Yes!" Nowhere did I encounter any materials stating that the exercise was, in fact, a referendum, not an effort to mobilize support. How many students opposed to the proposal even knew they could register an opinion?

Item: In the course of ten minutes of observation in the Connelly Center, I saw ballots handed out indiscriminately, with no overt attempt to check voter eligibility.

Item: The ballot boxes themselves were covered with "Vote Yes" material; students were handed less-than-neutral "fact sheets" along with their ballot. Many students were even instructed to "Vote Yes" by the person distributing the ballot.

Item: The Villanovan relied on the testimony of an interested party, Mr. Tufano, to document the validity of the survey rather than its own independent reporters.

Maybe the election was conducted fairly; probably most students would support the return of football. But if a survey is to be taken seriously, student leaders must try harder to insure both the fact and the appearance of neutrality in its conduct.

If the point of the exercise was to drum up support, it was a success. If the purpose, however, was to determine student opinion the results can hardly be viewed without suspicion. Advocacy and legitimate polling cannot be performed by the same people at the same time if the results are to be accepted as valid.

Misinformed

To the Editor:

I recently read an article in the Villanovan sports section that was written by the most ignorant, misinformed person who could write for a school newspaper. I'm referring to the article written about Villanova's rugby club. This article was a chastising and unconstructive piece that can only be compared to a first grade report.

I'm president of this organization and I have never met more courageous and dedicated men on this campus. It was an insult to say that our organization is close to being a "loose organization" and that we're "inexperienced." If Marusak had enough gumption to research his article, he would have discovered that the V.U. Rugby Club is very respected in the Eastern Pennsylvania Union.

Offended

To the Editor:

After reading the article written by Joe Marusak in the Nov. 5 issue of the Villanovan concerning the Rugby Club, I found it necessary to give a response. Marusak has a lot of nerve to write an article that begins, "considering the circumstances . . ." without knowing the circumstances.

Being an officer of the club, I personally feel offended by remarks such as "loose organization" or the insinuation that team members can attend practice and play in the games when they please. I believe the article belittles the efforts of the many athletes who give much of their time every day.

There is little recognition in playing this sport as it is. So why is this uninformed outsider trying to explain our actions when he doesn't realize that this club is probably one of the most demanding and successful organizations at Villanova? I think Marusak should do a little bit of research to get his facts straight. Next time, leave the article writing to someone who knows the sport and the team.

Rugby 'Facts'

To the Editor:

In my four years at Villanova, I have never before felt compelled to write a letter to the Villanovan. But your article last week on the rugby team, "Ruggers over .500," was one of the worst pieces of writing I have ever seen. Please don't do us any favors. Marusak portrayed us as a ragamuffin group of derelicts who were somehow fortunate enough to have a record over .500. In the future, please get the facts straight.

First, by beating Lehigh last Saturday, a team which incidentally has been to the Eastern finals the past three years, the ruggers raised their match play record to 5-1. I find victories over the likes of Lehigh, Georgetown, Temple Medical School and our very own Villanova Law School just a little bit more respectable than ".500."

Second, your article stated that a rugby player could miss two weeks of practice without being looked down upon by his teammates. I beg to differ. Rugby is a fraternity at Villanova in the true sense of the word. I believe that I can speak for my teammates in saying that if one of my "brothers" missed two weeks, he'd better have a darn good excuse; an injury, for instance. Besides, Coach Betzler is a busy man who has neither the time nor the patience for "part-time athletes," for he is an assistant coach for the U.S. Eagles, the American national team. And he is considered one of the foremost authorities on the game in the country.

While on the subject of Coach Betzler, I'd like to point out that he runs practice from 3:30-6 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday. Practice is intense and well attended. The rugby team is a group of students who are serious about, dedicated to and very good at the game they play.

No Experience Necessary

By CATHY PILIERO

Anyone watching the heads of people in the restaurant would swear there was a movie star in there. They were all watching one man walk down the aisle to his seat. Even the hostess, who was leading him to his booth, couldn't resist turning around a few times to admire him. The handsome young man's name is Bobby and he admits to being used to reactions like this wherever he goes.

With his perfectly clear complexion and sparkling blue eyes, he probably wouldn't have any trouble becoming a model. But, Bobby used his looks to succeed in another profession. He's an escort. He takes women out and has sex with them for money.

He started escorting about two years ago, but back then, if someone asked him what he'd be doing in a few years, he never would've imagined being a prostitute. "Two years ago, I was in college studying criminal justice. I always planned on being a lawyer by the time I was 28, but now I'll have to wait longer than that," Bobby said. He had to quit for financial reasons.

After he finished his sophomore year in college, his father got laid off from his job as a construction worker. He told Bobby to get a job and postpone college for a while. This broke his heart, but Bobby realized he didn't have much of a choice.

He felt he wasn't qualified for anything since he didn't have much working experience, so when he saw "No Experience Necessary" under an advertisement for escorts, he decided to try it out.

"My salary is really good; I get paid $75 per customer and they're usually generous with tips. I don't mean to make it sound like a good job because it's not. It's just a good way to make a lot of money fast," commented Bobby.

The people Bobby must deal with make his job unpleasant. The women he escorts are usually boring and unattractive. He always hated phony people, but now he must be one by acting interested when he's out with these women. "So far, I've never escorted anyone I had a personal interest in," Bob said. The people in the agency also make him feel uncomfortable. "They're so bossy and impersonal. I can't see how anyone could want this (the job) for the rest of his life." He continued, "I can't wait to get away from it!"

He plans on getting away from it as soon as possible. His father recently got a new job and as soon as Bobby has enough cash saved for college and law school, he's going to continue working toward his life-long goal.

His goal includes more than becoming a lawyer. "After I become a lawyer, I'd like to get married and move away from Philadelphia. I think I'd like to move to Arizona because of the cleaner atmosphere." Bob continued, "Really, though, I just want to get away from the people I have to deal with now so I can forget this part of my life."

At 2:30 p.m., Sara enviously watched the boys and girls come out of the high school. She overheard a couple of girls complain about their homework and a few boys insult a teacher for making their test so hard. "I wouldn't mind having those problems again," she said.

Sara quit school in 11th grade, left home and became a prostitute when she was 17. "I kind of regret doing that. I can describe myself as a typical rebellious teenager at that age. I resented my whole family. I just wanted to be on my own," Sara commented.

Sara's parents were concerned and cared for her, but whenever they gave her rules to follow or restrictions, she perceived their concern as dictatorship. She felt she was old enough to lead her own life and didn't want anyone to interfere. This included her teachers at school.

She also resented her brother and sister. Her older sister was given more freedom than she, and her younger brother was babied and spoiled. She thought her parents favored them.

After feeling fed up with her family life and school, she ran away with her girl friend and got involved with the world of prostitution. "At first, I liked it. I made a lot of new friends; I had a lot of money to spend the way I wanted, and I felt grown up. I was really happy. Now that I'm older, I think the only reason I was happy was because my parents were unhappy. I was glad to get even with them," Sara recalled.

As time went on she got more experience, Sara learned prostitution was dangerous. Although she's never been severely hurt, she's had a few encounters with dangerous men.

She also has to worry about bringing a certain amount of money back to her pimp. If she doesn't, she can be in trouble. Since most prostitutes have this same problem, they can get violent with one another if there is a shortage of customers.

Another reason she doesn't like her job is because of the reputation. "Even if I'd quit, people would always look down on me, especially guys. Sometimes I worry about finding the right guy. If I do meet him, he probably wouldn't be interested if he knew I was a hooker. The last guy I went out with found out somehow and never called me again," Sara related.

"I'm not going to do this forever. As soon as I get the courage, I'll quit and try to find a decent job. I'm afraid to, though, because there's not too many other things I could do with my education. I don't know, maybe I'll go back to school. The one thing I want for sure is to resolve things with my family. After that, I'd like to try and start all over again — finish school and go to work."

Although prostitution may be the means of support for many women for many years, most cannot keep the job until retirement age. Deterioration of looks and health as well as age, cause the prostitute to give it up.

What do ex-prostitutes do? Some marry and some get new jobs, as Margaret and Bobby have planned. And some also become criminals.

Although they may find new careers, their relationships still may not be healthy. During her career, the pimp was probably the only human relationship with whom the prostitute had where love and sex were combined. He was a figure of stability who offered love (equated with money by the prostitute). The pimp also made up for the prostitute's lack of emotional ties with other men.

The prostitute's relationships with men have usually been distorted, too. There was always the risk of getting involved with their clients. However, it was usually expressed by demands for money (lawyer's bills, bail bonds). If the demands were not met, extreme anger commonly resulted.

It would seem, therefore, that the ex-prostitute has a life just as difficult, if not more, awaiting her.

Warner, Disney Art Exhibit

"Eh, What's up, Doc?"

What's up is the value of animation cel paintings, according to collectors of these unusual fragments of American popular culture.

More than 250 of these paintings are the subject of a special exhibit and sale. Villanova University will host this event Nov. 29 — Dec. 1, in the Art Gallery of Connelly Center.

Animation cel paintings, called "cels," are the paintings actually filmed in making animated cartoons. Each character is painted by hand on a clear sheet of acetate, usually 11"x14" or larger, then placed against a background and photographed one-by-one to produce a reel of motion picture film. Cels are the culmination of the artistic process — the final image that is photographed by the camera.

This exhibit was authenticated by Gallery Lainzberg of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the nation's best-known specialist in this unique art form. A representative of Gallery Lainzberg will be on hand to answer questions.

The exhibit/sale highlights the work of two veteran Warner Bros. producer/directors: Chuck Jones, creator of Wile E. Coyote and the Roadrunner, and Pepe le Pew; and Friz Freleng, who created Tweety and Sylvester, and brought Yosemite Sam to life. Both Jones and Freleng have been contributing their considerable talents for more than 50 years and both have been honored with several Academy Awards.

There will also be animation cel paintings of their other creations — Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck and the Tasmanian Devil.

Of equal importance in the exhibit is a collection of animation cel paintings from some Walt Disney films including "The Jungle Book," "Robin Hood," "Rescuers," and "The Fox and the Hound." A selection of vintage Disney animation drawing from the 1930s and 1940s, including a few choice drawings of Mickey Mouse, will also be offered.

Disney art work has been treasured by collectors ever since the late 1930s when San Francisco's Courvoisier Galleries first offered cels for sale at prices from $5 to $50. Some of these cels are now worth $3000.

Interest in collecting animation art work from other studios has burgeoned in the last ten years. According to Charles Solomon in the Los Angeles Times, "Prices for material from other studios, especially Warner Brothers and the Fleischers, are also rising rapidly. However, it is still possible to obtain first-rate examples of animation art for less than $50 — in some cases, for less than $25."

The current exhibit/sale offers the public an opportunity to see a broad range of animation art. The art work from more than 25 different productions will be represented including cels from "Gnomes," "Raggedy Ann and Andy," "Heavy Metal," and the meticulously hand-inked cels of the very popular 1930s characters Betty Boop and Krazy Kat.

Today many people are investing in animation art work for a variety of reasons. Gallery Lainzberg Director Edith Rudman explains, "People have a genuine affection for the characters they select and a lot of people like the idea of owning a bit of American film history. And, of course, for its potential appreciation. A signed Bugs Bunny we were offering at $65 three years ago now sells for $135 to $175."

Permanent collections of animation art may be found in major museums across the country.

Original hand-painted animation of Bugs Bunny as Santa. It is a signed picture by Chuck Jones and was copyrighted in 1982 by Warner Bros. Inc.

How Teachers Influence a Course

By ROBIN LUCARINI

Without a shade of a doubt, a teacher can make or break a course. That may sound rather blunt, possibly bold, but, never-the-less, true.

As the semester passes its halfway point, the same course evalutation process occurs either consciously or subconsciously in the mind of every student. We have developed a certain attitude and attached a specific value on each course according to what we personally are getting out of it. Why does that happen? What is it that makes a course a good and enriching experience and what makes it an experience we'd sooner live without?

Obviously, when individual value is considered the subject matter of the course is certainly a deciding factor. As important as that may seem, it is quite minimal in comparison to the true determining factor — the professor. Of course we will choose courses that coincide with our interests when possible, but above and beyond that, it should be realized that is not what is taught, but how it is taught that will make or break a course. A "good" professor has mastered the art of stirring life into an otherwise uninteresting subject, and it goes without saying that too often the reverse is true.

Since we all have been confronting teachers for the larger percentage of our lives, we may safely conclude that with every teacher comes a teaching style. More than just his policies and teaching approach, a professor's true style stems from the very essence of his character and his personality; from the words he speaks and his tone of voice, to his body movements and gestures, right down to something so subtle as the clothes he wears. To pinpoint it, a teacher's quality and effectiveness is captured within his total person. It is the way he makes us "feel" when he is teaching, the way he comes across and the impression he gives.

This all plays a part in how well we learn from him, and the attitude we form about a course. And, believe it or not, attitude often outweighs "smarts" when it comes to learning.

Of course, a teacher that one student may like another may dislike, and qualities admired in one teacher may not be the same qualities admired in another. However, it is most likely fair to assume that the majority of students will agree upon certain desirable, as well as undesirable, character traits to be found in professors.

Foremost among the most basic qualifications for a good teacher is a positive attitude. Contrary to what some professors may believe, they are not paid to teach. They are paid to teach well. When it is all boiled down, we still must realize that we are in school to learn and it is invariably more difficult to learn from a teacher who simply puts in his hours and punches the clock as if he were working on an assembly line. It is not that simple. Enthusiasm is contageous. There is no greater feeling than to have an interested, energetic professor who spreads the "bug" of learning to his pupils.

As certain as there are teachers who "make" a course — those great professors with such attributes as a relaxed manner, relatability, a sense of humor, organization abilities and a knack for speaking, there are those that are not so great — the course "breakers." These teachers have the undeniable talent for turning the most interesting and beneficial courses into humdrum, often dreadful, encounters.

It is quite probable that the following fictional names (changed to protect the "innocent?") apply to a teacher each one of us has had to face as part of our enlightening educational career. Though it is fun to jest about these teachers, remember that they lurk in the deep dark corners of every educational institution in the country, and, who knows, one may even be yours for all of next semester . . .

Professor Marty Monotone — without a doubt, the most notorious of all course "breakers." As of yet, there have been no signs of any perceivable range in the volume, pitch or tone of his voice. Lacking any noticeable eye contact and evidencing no traces of enthusiasm, Professor Monotone has become quite known for transforming lecture minutes into hours. Legend has it that once, years ago, a student saw him smile, but this is merely heresay to date. His classes, however, do have one beneficial aspect — they are perfect for catching up on some sleep.

Professor Natalie Know-it-All — exercises her role as teacher to the fullest extent by answering her own questions with wordy and detailed explanations, and by assuring her students that if it is her opinion, it must be right. She thoroughly enjoys making a student appear foolish and stupid when he asks a question, floundering under the wing of her vast and mighty knowledge.

Professor Freddy Fake-it — loves to appear calm, cool and collected, but he does not fool anyone. He hasn't the foggiest idea of what he is trying to teach, but he sputters through each class with an account of his wife's terrible cooking or his daughter's trip to Chicago. Rumor has it that he would have been gone long ago, but he was hired when the school needed staff and this has given him an upperhand, something known as tenure.

Professor Patrick Preacher — is quite fond of talking "at" his students instead of "to" them, reducing them to mere spectators of his wonderful one-man play. Loud and domineering, this professor loves to hear himself talk. Unfortunately, his students can't say the same.

Professor Alice Unorganized — either a personality flaw or a continuous lack of foresight makes this professor one of the most well-known to many students. Often forgetting what she said in the previous class, or, for that matter, the previous sentence, she may frequently be observed fumbling through the loose pages of her notes or crossing out lines of errors she made on the blackboard. Her students are known to spend the majority of their class time erasing.

Though many professors could not be mentioned due to lack of space, the most infamous ones have been discussed. Just keep your fingers crossed that you'll make it through next semester without meeting up with any of them!

On a final serious note, it is all well and good to laugh about these types of teachers, but our laughter fades quickly when we stop to think that some of these teachers can actually hinder learning and truly ruin what might have been an interesting and fulfilling experience.

There are hardly words to describe the feeling of looking forward to a class because of a good quality teacher.

And, there is nothing like looking back on a course and honestly feeling deep inside that you really got something out of it.

To those course "breakers" — we've seen you before and we'll see you again. To the "makers" — something that too often goes unsaid — a simple, yet sincere, "thanks."

Examine Actions and Re-think Values

Wayne Residents Produce 'EL SALVADOR'

By PAT JORDAN

"They can kill me, but it should be very clear that they cannot kill the voice of justice." Those words were spoken by Archbishop Oscar Romero just before he was murdered while saying mass for several hundred massacred peasants in El Salvador.

After the shot strikes its target, he falls — still and alone. Suddenly, from some darkened corner emerges a dancer draped in pale purple gauze. She performs an abstract death dance around the lifeless figure and covers him with a swirling cape of transparent chiffon. The action is underscored by a subtle yet moving rhythm emanating from an imposing amplifier off to one side. It is a dramatically satisfying piece of theatre.

As reality — well, it leaves something to be desired. The idea of mutilated peasants, an imposing oligarchy surrounded by a handful of powerful and wealthy landowners and a religious hierarchy whose fear obliterates any sense of morality, is sickening. And frightening.

The play, "El Salvador" was recently performed in Philadelphia during the "Reagan's Ranch" rampout at Independence Mall. You didn't hear about it? Not surprising. Apparently, not many people did. Or if they did, it didn't matter. The company played to a crowd of about a hundred people last Saturday. The "Reagan's Ranch" was an attempt to call our chief executive's attention to the problems of human rights and our support of governments (read, dictatorships, or military juntas, or oligarchies) whose primary concern seems to be how much land and wealth and power can be accumulated at any expense, including the lives of its seemingly expendable citizens. "El Salvador" will be repeated at St. Rita's Chapel on November 18 at 8 p.m. during our annual "Hunger Awareness Week."

John Durnin directs this piece. Durnan, a faculty member at Villanova, was originally attracted to the play when he saw its Philadelphia debut at the Theatre Center of Philadelphia in 1981. "My idea was to adapt the play. I wanted to keep it at an improvisational level that would get the point across but not be an overwhelming burden on the cast and crew." But, as things developed, the company formed a commitment to the "work in progress." It shows. They do a good job.

The dancing and movement, choreographed by Diane Pauling, is very effective. Pauling, a dancer since the age of four, says of this endeavor, "The energy flows. I feel lucky that the people who were involved were so devoted, talented and willing to work for the good of the production." Continuing, she states, "John wanted this to be a thinking experience instead of something you just watch. As it turned out, we were all surprised at how much emotion it evoked in us. The whole thing has been very worthwhile, especially my work with the musicians."

Musically, the show is remarkable. During the course of rehearsals the musicians, members of local groups "Rhythm of Lines" and "Tangent," came up with some interesting sounds. According to Danny Mason, "We were all familiar with the play from the initial readings. We started improvising and what you hear is what came out of a collaborative effort." As the group began expanding on emerging themes, various instrumentation began to "feel right." Bells, vibraphone, electric and acoustic guitars and percussion were employed with a result that is an arresting and diverse music which complements the intent of the play and is interesting on its own merits as well. Musicians Mason, Bob McNamara and Frank Kurz are former Villanvoa students. Chris Schwartz and Jeff Coulter complete the musical ensemble.

Several of the performers turned in moving performances. Bo Fritz, of Strafford, has been cast as "the peasant." He begins quietly, but escalates emotionally to a point where his eyes rivit the audience to their seats. Gabriel Rivas portrays Oscar Romero, the priest who finally speaks his mind and suffers the fatal consequences. Rivas, whose family is originally from Venezuela, brings an added empathy for the plight of Latin American peoples. "It's a powerful play," he says of the piece. "I am happy to be doing it." His Latin background, added to sensitive acting skills, give his interpretation of the Salvadorian martyr a touching authenticity. Others whose talents add to an effective presentation are Leonard Kelly, Robert Tilghman, Diane Pauling and Theresa Karminski, all area residents.

What works with this play is its minimal structure combined with some genuine feeling for the subject matter. The play's message is clear. It wants its audience to feel something disturbing and uncomfortable. Maybe that's not such a bad thing.

Your Brothers Are Starving

By CAROL ALKONS

Hunger Awareness Week (HAW), an annual event sponsored by Campus Ministry now in its seventh year, will take place Nov. 14-21. The event is organized to increase student awareness of world hunger and starvation. Students who eat in Dougherty cafeteria are asked to give up one lunch during the week and the money that would have been spent on the food goes to world hunger charities. Films are shown and speakers are featured to encourage the Villanova students to recognize the seriousness of the world hunger situation.

Pat Canavan and Paul Sminkey are this year's co-chairmen of the events and they both spoke about the project.

Canavan, in explaining the issues and philosophy of the world hunger project stated, "I think there is a whole Gospel-rooted message behind the hunger project that says because we are all family we have a responsibility to each other. I don't think that my role here (in the project) is to change the world. I would like to have an impact on people, place some ideas in their heads which they can act upon if they choose to . . . Pope Paul once said that if you want justice, work for peace."

Sminkey explained his involvement: "I've worked in soup kitchens in Washington, D.C. and my concern with the issue has not resulted from my contacts with people, but rather from my beliefs. For me, Christianity and religious beliefs haven't just been praying and going to Mass — they are important parts, but only small parts. A big part of Christianity is being concerned with those who are suffering. We should be concerned with everyone. The more we learn about suffering, the more compassion we'll have for others — we will suffer with them."

Canavan added, "We believe the world can be changed, and we're trying to do our part in it — we're trying to open people's minds a little bit more and help them recognize that there are people who, only because of their social condition, are able to speak for themselves. We, as educated people, can be their voice."

He continued, "Working for the hunger project is a way of working toward justice. HAW is just one way of doing something that helps us understand ourselves while raising the consciousness of our peers."

Canavan commented on the results of the work put into the project stating, "I don't think that we'll ever see the fruits of our labor. I really think the results of our work is something you can't put your finger on. I think it is a start with some people to have a change of heart — someday they'll be more sensitive or use their vote in a way that benefits the underprivileged. The first step in becoming involved is recognizing that a problem exists. You don't have to be committed to it."

Sminkey added, "Picture your own brother or sister actually starving to death — literally. You're going to do something. We need to first realize that our brothers and sisters are literally starving. When we become aware of this, we will then do something. That is what awareness of hunger is."

Canavan concluded, "That is the strength of our efforts. If we can help one person to see their own brother or sister in real need, then it's all been worth it."

CAMPUS MINISTRY PERSPECTIVES

Hunger

By PATRICK J. CANAVAN

All of us have certain needs: we need to be loved; we need to have relationships; we need to grow emotionally; we need to be nourished. There are persons in our world who do not receive all that they need emotionally, spiritually, or physically. Before we can begin to discuss a person's growth intellectually or socially, we must be sure that their bodily requirements are met.

There is no one alive who rejoices at the fifteen million deaths per year attributed to nutrition-related diseases. However, there are many people who fail to see how their lifestyle or their vote can significantly affect these same malnourished persons. It is necessary for us, as educated Christians, to explore the many different ways which we can have a real impact on those, who, because of the circumstances of their birth, do not have the power to speak for themselves.

There are different decisions for us to make once we recognize certain Gospel-rooted mandates. We are called to love ourselves and others, and our God. This call has applications daily. Do we consider the amount of food we eat or where it comes from; or perhaps more importantly, the amount of food we waste? Do we vote for a candidate on a single-issue, or do we consider the full scope of their impact; or do we vote at all?

There is a certain discomfort which arises when we are asked to examine our actions, and to rethink our values. This uneasiness stems from a perceived threat to our stability. The time has come when our desire for power and influence in the world will have very real consequences on those who are powerless.

The opportunity is before us, the Villanova Community, to raise our own consciousness, and to contribute our energies and resources to alleviate hunger. We do not pretend to say that small, community-oriented programs will change the world; but, as Christians, we do believe that the world can be changed. It is through affecting persons, discussing the problem of hunger and talking about possible solutions to it, that we can begin to address the full spectrum of the hungers of the human family.

The week of Nov. 14-21 is Hunger Awareness Week at Villanova.

Pat Canavan is the student chairman of Hunger Awareness Week 1982.

Nutrition

By CATHY SCHILLING

Question: Should one take vitamins and minerals?

Nutrition is a growing science. One of the greatest contraversies, presently, is concerned with the question of whether or not a person should take vitamins and minerals. An increasing number of people are taking them in spite of the fact that the government agency, the Food and Drug Administration (F.D.A.) do not look upon them favorably. The F.D.A. claims that vitamin and mineral supplements are not necessary for health due to our food containing everything we need for health.

Many authorities challenge this statement and supply substantial proof to the contrary.

Often when doctors are approached as to whether his patients should take vitamins or minerals, the answer he gives may be one of the following: (a) they are not necessary; (b) they will not hurt you; or (c) a drug which he would rather prescribe will do the job better and quicker. However, drugs suppress symptoms instead of curing them. For example, an aspirin relieves a headache, but does not remove the cause. Whereas good nutrition helps the body to rebuild itself. This takes longer than drugs, but the results are eventually more satisfactory.

Good health is important to of us whether we are conscious it or not. Health may be defined "the state of well being," wh includes proper rest, proper en onment, proper exercise, and course, proper diet. Many ti we often forget these things cluding what we eat, what n rients are found in the foods eat, and what vitamins are we ting or lacking in our diet. For t most part, we are what we What we put into our bodies major factor in determining health. Vitamins and mine must be present in our diet some form whether it be in food, or as additional supplem or both.

Nursing Career Day Covered

By MARY ALICE RICE

All nursing students were given the opportunity to explore career options at the Tenth Annual Nursing Career Day, held on last Friday, October 29, in the Connelly Center. The day included speakers on current areas of nursing practice to summer job opportunities and "freebies" that help with patient teaching and nursing care plans.

The morning session lasted from 9:15 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Six professional nurses discussed their own careers in varied nursing fields, informed students of interviewing techniques, and gave an idea of what is expected after graduation. Each speaker's presentation was followed by question time.

The guest speakers were: Nancy Ann Corbett, director of nursing at St. Agnes Medical Center and speaker on interviewing skills; Linda Corcoran, a nurse working in the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia; Peg Kendrick, Villanova faculty member and speaker on the American Nurses' association; Pam Kovacs, occupational health nurse with Honeywell, Inc.; Ann McCloud, director of nurse midwifery at the Bryn Mawr Birthing Center; and Ann Mercincavage, 1982 V.U. graduate and staff nurse at George Washington University's Progressive Coronary Care Unit.

The afternoon session was held from 1 to 4 p.m. in the Villanova Room and consisted of representatives and exhibits from 100 health care agencies from Connecticut, Cleveland, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Washington, D.C. "This gave nursing students of all years the chance to explore job opportunities after graduation and ROTC programs as well as summer nursing positions in their home states," commented one student who attended the conference.

The program was being sponsored by the undergraduate nursing senate and the Career Development Center in cooperation with the College of Nursing.

Loggins Gives Private Performance

By JAYNE M. STUART

Kenny Loggins performed at the Villanova Field House on Tuesday night. Unfortunately, there were many empty seats at the show. Considering Loggins' popularity and critical acclaim, one would think that the show would have been well-attended. Those that did attend the show were very enthusiastic and Loggins made a fine attempt to make it worth their while. Needless to say, the Field House did not give Loggins justice. His creative and inventive lyrics were lost in the rafters, and Loggins himself commented that he could hear his voice bounce back to him 30 seconds after he sang it.

One disappointing aspect to the concert was that there was neither a saxophone nor a flute player present. These two instruments are often heard on a Loggins album and finish up the overall sound of the songs. It was hard to judge the quality and ability of the guitarists because it was difficult to hear their individual parts.

A special treat was when Loggins sat out front and played a medley of Loggins and Messina songs. He played favorites such as "I Want to Sing You Love Songs," "House at Pooh Corner," "Your Momma Don't Dance" and "Run River Run." Loggins displayed his talent as a fine singer and musician in these pieces. His lyrics and music were less distorted during this solo effort partially because he played an acoustic guitar. The harmony between his words and music could be fully appreciated in this medium.

Loggins did not seem to be phased at the low turn-out. He asked that the lights be turned on and upon seeing so few faces in the audience he said, "We will make this a private party." He seemed to genuinely want to put on a good show which indicates his true professionalism. He interacted a lot with the audience. He jumped off the stage and encouraged the crowd to come down front, much to the Union security's chagrin.

Loggins is a fine performer. He generates much energy which indicates that he enjoys his work and is confident in his music. Perhaps that is why he still was able to have a fairly successful show at the Field House. It was terribly ironic that when he wanted the audience to sing along with him in "Celebrate Me Home" he said, "Cheer like you are at a football game and winning it." Needless to say, the crowd did cheer heartily.

Loggins' strongest asset is his voice and lyrics. He has been solo for only two years, yet he has to his credit two platinum albums ("Celebrate Me Home" and "Nightwatch") and many hit singles. His collaborations with Michael MacDonald (formerly of the Doobie Brothers) have consistently been number one songs. In 1980 Loggins was awarded a Grammy for Best Song of the Year "What a Fool Believes." In 1981 he received another Grammy for Best Pop Vocal — "I'm Alright," the theme song for the movie "Caddy Shack." He also received a Grammy for the Best Pop Performance for the song "This is It."

Before Loggins went solo he had been working with Jim Messina and that was a very successful combination. Their best selling album was "Best of Friends," which included songs such as "Danny's Song," "House at Pooh Corner" and "Your Mamma Don't Dance." Loggins was the one who wrote most of the songs in this group. His lyrics always have reflected a fine imagination and thoughtfulness. Their songs, for the most part, were lively and usually upbeat tunes.

Loggins often deals with the theme of rites of passage and growing up. He sang a beautiful song called "Only a Miracle" that he wrote when his first son Crosby was born. The song spoke of what a wonderful event it was when his son was born and how it has made a difference in his life. The same creativity can be seen in the song "House at Pooh Corner." This song describes how one day Christopher Robin goes too far from Pooh's corner of the woods and can't seem to return. This is symbolic of growing up and maturing. He is also very imaginative in his song "Your Momma Don't Dance." This song is a new approach to the generation gap. "Your daddy don't rock-n-roll" is one line in it, what better way to exemplify why your dad does not understand that you can't have the car in by ten?

Loggins is a fine musician and performer and he demonstrated this superbly by putting on a good show at the Field House. How can the student body expect the Union to get quality entertainers like Loggins when they do not even attend the shows? One has to wonder if the Union can continue to have performers when they are sure to lose money. It is certain that those who did attend had a very enjoyable time, despite the many technical difficulties.

The Artist as an Enigma

By BARBARA SIMON

"The Hunger Artist" questions the validity of individual expression in society where values change in a critical and often unsympathetic manner. Is it possible for an artist to retain pride without conforming to social standards and without social acclaim towards his expression? The hunger artist attempts to achieve that goal as a professional "faster" in a carnival. Although he is years beyond his prime and no longer a novelty, the hunger artist stubbornly remains in a cage on exhibit as if he himself were a "statement" against an ignorant society.

Albert Benzwie gives a remarkable performance as an aging hunger artist in the Theatre Center Philadelphia's production of Kafka's story. His appeal is reminiscent of Vincent Van Gogh, vying for attention he deserves as an honest, hard working artist. Like Van Gogh, the hunger artist becomes despondent, eccentric and is unappreciated by the public. The rejection is heightened by scorn, ridicule and admonishment towards the artists. Unlike Van Gogh whose fame became realized in the future, the hunger artist recalls the past when he was a success.

"At one time the whole town took a lively interest in the hunger artist; everybody wanted to see him at least once a day; there were people who bought season tickets for the last few days and sat from morning till night in front of his small barred cage; the children stood open-mouthed, holding each other's hands for greater security, marveling at him as he sat there pallid in black tights, with his ribs sticking out so prominently, not even on a seat but down among straw on the ground, sometimes giving a courteous nod, or perhaps stretching an arm through the bars so that one might feel how thin it was."

The color, flair and excitement of a carnival was animated by the supporting cast as clowns, an impressario, a juggler, an acrobat, two virgins and a panther. The success of this improvisational-like play, adapted from the short story "A Hunger Artist" by Franz Kafka, is control. Professionalism surmounts even during seemingly superfluous scenes such as the drunken clowns playing cards. The setting is unconventional with the actors mingling amongst the audience intermittently, intensifying the carnivalesque atmosphere.

Theatre Center Philadelphia's production of "The Hunger Artist" is being held over at Theatre Center, 622 S. Fourth St., until the end of this month.

A Charitable Act

By SCOTT MEYER

"The Secret Policeman's Other Ball" is the film recording of two evenings of comedy and music in England last year. The event was organized and produced by Monty Python's John Cleese as a benefit for Amnesty International. All the profits from both shows at Her Majesty's Royal Concert Hall, the movie, the record album and other paraphernalia go to the worldwide operations of the group. In these days of outrageous profits reaped for the personal fortunes of Hollywood producers, this film's positive investment is enough to motivate one to go see it.

However, the film is entertaining enough to stand alone. The comedy side is a mixture of classic Monty Python skits and new material. British actor Peter Cook joins the Python regulars in some of the sketches. Fans of the old Monty Phython's Flying Circus television series will recognize the "Cheese Shop" piece with Michael Palin and Cleese. Also included are some of the popular cartoons of Terry Gilliam. Conspicuously absent is Python favorite Eric Idle.

The music is equally entertaining. Pete Townshend of the Who plays excellent solo acoustic versions of "Pinball Wizard" and "Won't Get Fooled Again." Other musicians performing include Genesis' Phil Collins, the Police's Sting, Jeff Beck and Eric Clapton. The end of the movie is a grand finale of all the musicians and actors coming together to sing what could be Amnesty International's theme, The Band's "I Shall Be Released," a meaningful climax to the film.

"The Secret Policeman's Other Ball" is reminiscent of a decade long gone, when performers and audience came together to benefit someone other than themselves.

True Confessions of a Catholic Girl

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Catholic Girls is a relatively new band on the music scene and has recently received a recording contract from MCA records. This writer had a chance to speak with Gail Petersen, the band's lead vocalist and "spokesperson."

Petersen, an affable and articulate sort, took time out to discuss the group's debut album titled — what else — "Catholic Girls."

Villanovan: Why the name "Catholic Girls?"

Petersen: "JoAnne Holland (bass player) and I went to school together for over 12 years. We have vivid memories of Catholic school. So when we formed an all-girl band we decided on Catholic Girls.

Villanovan: How did you meet Roxy Anderson (guitar) and Doreen Holmes (drums)?

Petersen: "JoAnne and I are originally from Staten Island, N.Y. When we both moved to New Jersey we met Roxy and Doreen."

Villanovan: What did you do in order to get noticed, your music exposed?

Petersen: "We played as many clubs as possible. Clubs in New Jersey and in New York City. We played in such clubs as The Ritz and Bonds."

Villanovan: Where are your roots musically?

Petersen: "Well, I would have to say the Beatles. Also from various bands of that whole '60s scene."

Villanovan: Gail, you write both the band's music and lyrics. When did you decide you wanted to write?

Petersen: "I have always been interested in good literary works. I had been writing fiction. While most people in school had posters of rock stars on their walls, I had pictures and posters of various writers."

Villanovan: Who are your favorite writers?

Petersen: "Dylan Thomas, James Joyce, Keats, Yeats."

Villanovan: I really enjoyed the album. What inspired the lyrics for most of your songs?

Petersen: "Some are from past experiences and others from observation. All of the songs on the album are love songs, boy-girl relationships. I like writing these types of songs because the possibilities are endless."

Villanovan: You were mentioning writing songs from experience.

Peterson: "Park Theatre" is about a movie house in New Jersey that I often went to. It recently burnt down. "C'est Impossible" is about a girl who says to hell with her relationship with her boyfriend."

Villanovan: Gail, you sound like an avid moviegoer. Do you have any favorites?

Petersen: "D.O.A." — not the band. It's an old one; I think 1940. Also, I love "It's A Wonderful Life" with Jimmy Stewart."

Villanovan: The band doesn't sound like the Go-Go's. I honestly expected the album to sound similar.

Petersen: "I'm so glad you said that. That's what we didn't want to sound like. A band like the Go-Go's is great because they helped pave the way for other all-girl bands like ourselves. But we want to have our own sound."

Villanovan: Now that the album is starting to get airplay and you have had some critical success, what does the future hold for Catholic Girls?

Petersen: Well, right now we're taking it one step at a time. We'll be touring in support of the album. If the album does well, who knows . . ."

Vasey To Present 'The Firebugs'

"The Firebugs," a darkly humorous satire by Swiss playwright Max Frisch, will be the next production at Villanova Theatre. The show will run Nov. 17-20 and Dec. 1-4. Lon Winston will direct.

"The Firebugs" is the story of a cautious, self-satisfied gentleman named Gottlieb Biedermann. His calm existence is shattered when he discovers that the two men living in his attic are the arsonists who have burned down most of the town. The result is a trenchantly funny and surprisingly topical play about the price of moral complacency.

"The Firebugs" will run Nov. 17 through Nov. 20, and Dec. 1 through Dec. 4. All performances will begin at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theatre on the Villanova campus, Lancaster and Ithan Avenues, Villanova, PA. Tickets are $5 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts and group rates available. Free parking is located directly across from the theatre on Lancaster Ave. The campus is within walking distance from the Villanova stations of the Paoli Local and Red Arrow lines. For tickets and information, call the box office at 645-7474 or the theatre office at 645-4760.

'Juggernaut' Exerts Its Force

By SUE BREHM

Montreal-bred Frank Marino s recently released his tenth bum "Juggernaut." After ten ars of evolving his own style of d-rock music, he is still virtuly unknown (primarily due to e lack of promotional efforts and intent to "sell out" to the conmporary mold of hit songs day).

"Juggernaut" contains revolunary social comment. In the le song he relates the definition the situation of the world today. e encourages the listener to take areful look at the greed existing thin the political structure of r society. He uses lyrics such as: olitician making money when the time they murder our free-m/Filling up their pockets ile the people in the streets lay ing/Living in the fear of coun-es launching a nuclear attack." is forewarning his listeners to involved before it's too late. The name of the band was nged from Frank Marino and Mahogany Rush to just Frank Marino on his last album "The Power of Rock and Roll." On "Juggernaut" the original drummer/percussionist is replaced by Timm Biery. The other musicians who appear on this LP are Paul Harwood on bass guitar and Marino's brother, Vince, on rhythm guitar. Marino not only produces every one of his albums, but also writes and arranges all the material, plays lead guitar and synthesizers and sings lead vocals.

"Strange Dreams" starts off the album with a dynamically innovative beat. This song is one of the only existing Marino songs in which there is no guitar lead. Instead he fills the lead with a light synthesizer dance. Marino seems to have mellowed out a bit. This is reflected by the minimal use of special technical effects.

The next song "Midnight Highway" reveals Marino's expressively gritty vocals. Continuous guitar riffs filter through the steady background rhythm and permeates every space with crisp intonations. "Stories of a Hero" is a slow, melodic ballad dedicated to the many men who have, may and will lose their lives fighting wars. Ending the first side is "Free," reminiscent of the late 60s' psychedelia era.

In "Maybe It's Time" he again conveys a message of social value. The lyrics are angrily sung: "I see the people, you know they stand in line/Don't got a job, no money, can't make a lousy dime/While the man in town gets fat on power-/Strips us of our pride/You know we ain't done nothing yet . . . Well, maybe it's time." Incorporated in this song is a lengthy guitar lead in which he bends notes using the tremello bar, as did his influential predecessor, Jimi Hendrix.

"Ditch Queen" is sexually obscene in content. This song also contains a long guitar lead over repetitious bass and drum patterns. Following in line is a danceable rock tune, "For Your Love," one of two songs under five minutes. Simple lyrics are sung over heavy bass overtones. Biery tastefully uses the bell of his cymbal to perk up the basic beat.

"Juggernaut" is a super-fast paced song. Marino displays bullet-like flurries and erratic guitar riffs, as Biery coordinates the use of a flanger while he whizzes around the heads of his kit with speed and finesse to create a rolling beat. The song ends with a thunderous explosion and fades out.

This album contains ear-opening, hard-rock music produced by a very talented musician. Marino has further evolved his distinct style and has solidified his place in the industry.

Royal Rappers of Funk

By MIKE NOONE

The latest craze to hit the music ustry, with surprisingly good cess, has been labled "punk-k." This music is a curious nd of the new wave style and a ditionally strong punk beat h its sensual lyrics. The result n entirely new sound. One of leading innovators of "punk-k," Prince, has just released a double album entitled 99."

he central theme that runs oughout all of their songs re-ents a view which many rebel-lious youths hold, namely damn the rest of the world; let's have fun! Prince seems to accept the fact that sooner or later someone will "press the button," but rather than let this fact bother them it drives them to party harder. In their latest hit, "1999," they state: "Everybody's got a bomb/We could all die any day-/But before I'll let that happen/I'll dance my life away."

This music is strictly dance music that is not meant to have any profound message, so don't look for one. Loud synthesized sounds and biting, distorted guitar solos are favorite tools used to portray the mechanized, fast paced, harsh modern world.

The band itself represents the fusion of the white-dominated new wave and the black dominated funk, being comprised of both black and white members. The lead singer, Dez, doubles as lead guitar player and proves himself adept of both. He forces himself to the limit of his abilities, displaying the full range and power of his voice. The other members of the band also have a strong command of their instruments (a far cry from the early new wavers). Prince holds no reservations about just how far they will go to express an idea, and often employs risque language with intermittent moans and groans.

If one has never heard much "punk-funk" don't rush out and buy this album merely to experience the new craze, for one will probably be disappointed. One has to approach the music with an open mind, for one either loves or hates it all. There aren't any grey areas here.

Although there is virtually no diversity of musical styles and the pulsating beat remains the same throughout, each song manages to create its own distinct sound creating an album which is by no means boring. In fact, one could not ask for a more energetic album that is guaranteed to get you moving. Prince's music relies on raw energy to make up for the lack of cohesive lyrics, which certainly makes for an interesting style.

The English Beat

By MIKE NOONE

Measuring the recent success of such groups as Men at Work, Lords of the New Church and Haircut One Hundred, the new English Beat album, "Special Beat Service," seems destined for success as well. While still relying on their original ska style, the English Beat have begun experimenting with new sounds and musical styles. They are more interested in personal problems rather than the political statements of their earlier work.

The first song, "I Confess," is a completely redefined sound for them, resembling a mixture of Squeeze and Roxy Music. "Save it for Later" is an upbeat pop tune which sounds like Johnny Lydon singing a Nick Lowe favorite. "Rotating Head" is a fine example of the style of music the Police capitalized on, but unfortunately these originals do not receive the airplay they deserve. Their ska roots endure in "Sorry," "Spar Wid Me" and "Pato and Roger Ago Talk," and by incorporating an accordian, trumpets and complicated percussion they spark new energy into the old rhythms.

They take a firm stand on the anxiety and lack of permanence in modern-day romances through words like, "We shared one last cigarette then swapped false addresses," from the song, "Jeanette."

On the whole, the album strays from any prophetic messages except during "Sugar and Stress" which states, "We know where our hearts are. Right behind our wallets, yes, and that's where they are going to stay." The English Beat have proved themeselves more versatile and refined and, without making profound statements, they create uplifting pop which deserves more attention.

Soccer Season Shows Success

By LAUREN SEAVER

On Saturday, the women's soccer club polished off their season with their final victory. Thus the booters closed with a 10-3 record. According to junior co-captain Linda Padula, "The season was great." The three losses dealt to the club were at the hands of Princeton, George Washington and Penn State.

"Princeton is the number one team in the East and ninth in the nation," said Padula "and George Washington and Penn State are also highly ranked." Though Villanova women's soccer in a club, the competitiveness of its schedule reflects the ability of the squad.

Among their thirteen matches, the highlight of the season was the two victories that the girls chalked up against West Chester State. According to both Padula and Coach Lee Stevens, quite a rivalry had been mounting since the defeat that Villanova suffered last year.

"They beat us in overtime last year on parents weekend and they really wanted to beat us this year," commented Padula. Part of the rivalry with West Chester stems from the fact that a lot of the girls from both squads played soccer together in high school. On the field, the rivalry climaxed into two triumphs for Villanova. Said Coach Stevens, it was "the first time we've beaten them."

On Thursday, Oct. 28, on home turf, the booters faced Penn State. Although the girls played with their usual finesse, the visitors scored within the first thirty three minutes. Sophomore goal keeper Sue Onnembo believed that the Wildcats "outplayed them but didn't capitalize on their breaks." With thirty minutes left, Penn State booted a second goal that constituted their final victory of 2-0.

On Saturday, the women's club finished their season with a 1-0 victory over Mercer Community College. Taking an assist from freshman Cathy Ford's, Lisa Morgan, freshman back, kicked the winning goal past Mercer. Onnembo had an oustanding 28 saves.

"Sue played great" said Padula. "Even the other coaches were really impressed." This victory just displayed the impressive soccer the booters have delivered all season.

The quality of women's soccer is continually improving, reflected not only in a 10-3 record but in a schedule that becomes more competitive each year.

"We've had a lot of outstanding players this year," said Stevens. "We had six excellent freshman who started at one time or another," he added. Left wing Denise Finn even played in several games with a broken wrist.

"The key to our season was the way the freshmen were accepted by the upperclassman," said Stevens. Happy with a 10-3 season, Stevens felt that it was very successful. The Club will be losing seven graduating seniors this year.

"As a goal keeper," said Onnembo, "I'm going to be particularly sorry to see the fullbacks leave. They were the strength our defense and they will be h to replace."

After a great season, the wom booters are already optimi about next year. Onnembo f that "with the talent coming h next year, we can turn th losses into wins."

Hockey Team Takes Lehigh Twice

By TOM KOLON

This past weekend, the Villanova Icecats picked up their winning ways with a double victory over Lehigh. On Saturday, the team skated to a 6-5 win on their opponent's ice, and Sunday proved equally fruitful as they returned home and emerged on top once again in another wild 7-5 shootout at the Havertown Skatium.

At Lehigh, the Icecats found themselves caught up in a wide-open, offensive battle. After taking the lead 3-1 in the first period on two goals by Ken Downey and one by John Canuso, the squad watched themselves relinquish the two-goal lead as Lehigh fired in three goals to go ahead 4-3 entering the final period. The Cats had not given up, though. They clawed their way back to the top as rookie Paul McDonald tied it up once and Jamie Huston notched it again at 5-5. Huston then followed with another diving score to put Villanova into the lead for good with only 2:30 remaining, much to the dismay of the rowdy and vociferous Lehigh crowd.

Villanova returned home Sunday tired but ready to show Lehigh how tough it would be for them to skate away from the friendly confines of their own ice. Once more, the game erupted into a firing range of shots on goal. In the first period, Frank Segreto, Canuso and Paul Lafond pushed Villanova again into a 3-1 lead. At the end of two, the game was all sewn up at 4-4 featuring another goal by Jamie Huston. The battle continued into the third period as the two schools exchanged goals, with Canuso again having the honors for Villanova.

Finally, the Icecats proved that they really meant business. Rookie Bob Giordano put the team into the lead and Segreto added an insurance tally as Villanova skated away with a 7-5 win to cap off the victorious weekend. Leading in the assists column for the weekend were Segreto, Downey, Huston, Jeff Beck, Tim Curran and Paul Critchley, just to name a few.

After coming off a mid-week 6-5 loss at Penn, the squad was pleased to rebound so quickly two days. Team captain Se commented that the team sho vast improvement over the week. "The guys fought their through two late comebacks listless second periods and new lines and changes are fi starting to click," Villanova minder Don Clark held off ow shots in the two games and peared as a strong catalyst fo team. "We really have to t Don, who twisted his knee Saturday, but still stood tou finish up and return the day," continued Segreto.

Villanova (3-1-1) hosts West Chester this Sunday at noo the Skatium in another MA match-up.

Women Swimmers Set Goals

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The Villanova women's swim team opens the 1982-83 season with new challenges, new attitudes and new goals.

In the past, Villanova has consistently established impressive winning records, and in doing so, has progressively upgraded its schedule with more challenging opposition.

The 1982-83 season ended with second place finish at the EAIAW championships and Division II nationals. This year the team has once again moved on to bigger and better things, the NCAA Division I and the Big East Conference. Although the team will miss the Division II prominence, Villanova will be able to gain more recognition in the upper level of national swimming. In addition to the powerful East teams — Princeton, Navy, and Yale — Villanova will meet with new teams such as Syracuse, East Carolina and the University of Connecticut.

Coach McKee expressed the general excitement of the team and attributed the positive outlook on the depth and caliber of the team. "The demands will be met with a solid depth of swimmers in both the freestyle and specialty areas. This depth will provide a flexible line up of versatile talented swimmers," McKee explained. "With the loss of only one senior and the addition of 11 new swimmers and divers, this is possibly the strongest V.U. women's swim team yet," he added.

A look at the team's training schedule for the past eight weeks may provide insight into the team's caliber. The team began with an overall conditioning phase consisting of ATRA three days a week, varying swimming distances, and running three days a week. The running was complicated with the calisthenic exercises positioned at stations along the way.

Beginning with one-and-three-quarter miles of running the women built up to a minimum of 7 miles in five weeks. At that point, the swimmers began to concentrate primarily on swimming workouts, maintaining ATRA, and adding twice a day workouts two days a week. The average distance ranged from 8,000 to 12,000 yards a day.

"I'm very happy with the progress that the team has made over the past eight weeks. They are in very good physical and cardiovascular condition. Their practice time drops have convinced me of this. Most people do not understand that it is very difficult to get in the pool each day and continually swim. Looking at the bottom of the pool becomes very boring and monotonous. That's why we try to have fun and create a positive environment," McKee commented.

The team has set a few goals to meet the challenges of the season. Beginning with a positive outlook on personal improvements across the board to finishing with a winning record of 10-3. They also hope to secure a top two spot at the Big East championships next spring, and to qualify members for the Division I nationals. To set the winning pace for the dual season, Villanova will meet with Bryn Mawr on Nov. 17 at 6:30 p.m. in the Field House.

Nova Field Hockey Ousted in Tournament

By BOB HELLER

Last weekend, the Villanova Wildcat field hockey team traveled up to Keene, N.H., for the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) championship tournament. Villanova was seeded fourth. The other teams participating were Keene State College, C.W. Post and Lowell State.

The tournament kicked off Friday with Post defeating Lowell in the opener. The Wildcats took the field for the second game, facing the number-one seed, Keene State College.

The Cats pummelled Keene's defense throughout the first half, getting many shots on goal and penalty corners. At 26:15 the Cats forced a penalty stroke when the Keene goalie fell on top of the ball. Sophomore Amy Hutchison took the shot and put it past the goalie for her ninth goal of the year and a 1-0 Wildcat lead. As Sue Lora commented, "Scoring first gave us an advantage, but we couldn't let up at all. We knew Keene would come back."

The Cats took a 2-0 lead at 20:20 of the second half when senior Regina Graham scored off of a corner hit. Hutchison and Bonnie Bell had the assists. Keene did come back, scoring twice in the last seven minutes to tie the game at 2-2. "We never should have let Keene score at all", comments Lora "We are the better team." An overtime period had to be played.

Nova continued to put the pressure on Keene during the overtime. Lora scored with one minute left, giving the Wildcats a 3-2 lead. Sophomore Robin Garscznsky had the assist, and Nova held on to win 3-2. They would meet C.W. Post on Saturday.

The Cats did not fare as well against the physical C.W. Post team. Post intimidated them and they were unable to score. Post scored twice in the first half and added another in the second for a 3-0 Wildcat loss. Post was the winner of the EAIAW Championship while Villanova placed second.

The C.W. Post game marked the final game for four seniors: Kathy Byrnes, Regina Graham, Beth Moyer and manager Maggie Eells. Graham the season with three goals; Byrnes with one; and Moyer had an excellent season on defense.

Lora led the team in scoring with 15 goals and four assists. Hutchison was second with nine goals, six assists. Gina Roman had nine goals, Danine DiBernardi, six, and Garcznsky three to round out Nova's scoring attack.

Lora had this to say about the season, "We played very well as a team and have come a long way since the start of the season. We have a young team, We'll learn from this season."

Track Women Sparkle

By JOE MARUSAK

Jan Yerkes is very important to the women's cross country team.

The 5'3" first-year competitor has been one of the squad's most consistent performers all year. And on Oct. 23 Yerkes kept true to form.

On that day the women harriers were in Boston; Franklin Park, to be exact. That was the site of the Big East Conference Cross Country championships, and Yerkes wound up making quite a name for herself.

A transfer from Lock Haven State, Yerkes ran the three-mile course in a time of 16:55.6. Only one other runner, Michelle Hallett of Boston College, did any better.

That's ironic. For after the final results were tabulated, Villanova wound up in second place overall. Boston College took first.

Only two points separated the two teams, which each placed three runners in the top ten. Their final total were 41 and 43, respectively.

No other team even approached those marks. Georgetown was a distant third with 93 points.

Mary Ellen McGowan was also instrumental in the Cats impressive finish. The sophomore placed fifth overall in 17:34.7.

Her teammate Vickie Brown trailed McGowan by only :06.7, and wound up in seventh place.

Cats Defeat Drexel

By KERRY LYNCH

Tallying points on a senior scoring spree, the Wildcat soccer team won their last game of the 1982 season, upping their record to 8-6-3. Despite injuries that sidelined several players over the past weeks, the front line was back in action to account for the 4-1 victory over Drexel. The final win came days after the disappointing news that the Cats had barely been edged by St. John's and did not make the fourth seed at the first Big East soccer tournament to be held this weekend at the University of Connecticut.

In the last two weeks of play, the Cat's list of side-lined players grew out of all proportion which nearly crippled them in efforts against LaSalle and Pennsylvania.

Barr points out, "If we had played Penn two or three weeks ago, I think we could have stomped them."

The victory over Drexel gives the Wildcats a 2-5 record in the Soccer Seven, bettering the 1981 results.

Brian Barr, Mike Layfield and Mark West, all seniors, accounted for one goal each and junior John Valickus also added one. Layfield, despite playing with a broken nose, was also responsible for one assist. Other assists came from starting seniors Ramon Garcia and John Warasa. Steve Maillard, a freshman who has accounted for a total of 19 points this season and is the team's second leading scorer, had one assist.

Senior Layfield led the scoring this season with 27 points.

Barr, last year's leading scorer who spent a considerable part of this season on the injured list, totalled 13 points while senior Ramon Garcia was close with 11.

The team, despite a high rate of return, was forced to call on freshman goalies. John Grendi tended goal in eight contests, amassing a .87 saves percentage. Paul Neugebauer came up almost even with a .86 saves record.

But Barr adds, "We just missed getting in the Big East Tournament and we were looking forward to that. It was a disappointing season, not as good as we thought it would be because we had a lot of people coming back."

Team Falters in Rough Waters

By JUDY ROGERS

It was a disappointing ending to a much anticipated season for the Villanova varsity waterpolo team. The team ended the season with a 5-10 record, and in order to qualify for the league championships this past weekend, a team must win a certain number of games of which the Cats fell short. The Watercats had the potential to go all the way, but near the end of the season, they ran into some rough water.

The weekend of Oct. 22-24 was the Cats' last tournament, in which they won two games and lost three. They defeated Queen's College 13-6 and ripped Renssalaer Polytechnic Institute 21-4, which marked the first time in the last four years that the team scored over 20 goals in one game. Sophomore Mike Duch had seven goals and so did senior Co-Captain George Anderson. Other starters included junior Josh Seleckman, who started for the first time and played very well; freshman Chris Popoff, who started in goal and did a super job; senior Bill Ennis, and juniors Bill Beck and Kevin Powers. The Cats lost to Monmouth 14-6, and lost to Princeton and Johns Hopkins by the same score of 15-12.

This tournament was the difference in making the playoffs and sitting home last weekend for the Cats. There were a few factors contributing to their losses, the main two being that they had to play five games in three days, and in the Johns Hopkins and Princeton games, key players fouled out.

Co-captain Anderson feels, "If all the players work hard in the off-season, next year they should enjoy a successful fall."

Massimino Keeps Priorities in Focus

By LARRY GOANOS

Coach Rollie Massimino has guided his basketball teams to some remarkable achievements during his nine-year tenure as the Wildcats' head coach. Squads under his tutelage have gained berths in five post-season tournaments in the past six years while rolling up an average of 21 wins per season. A .685 winning percentage has earned him the reputation of being a winner the world over, evidenced by invitations for him to share his coaching skills in Italy, Puerto Rico and China, to mention just a few locales. This past season Massimino was honored as the "Eastern College Coach of the Year" and the "Big East Coach of the Year." The list goes on and on.

Yet beyond this impressive array of successes on the hardwood lies an even more astonishing feat for which the media seldom lauds any coach. It won't show up in the morning box scores, or in the NCAA record book, but Massimino holds a perfect 27-0 record in graduating his seniors. This lone fact says more about the Villanova basketball program than all the gaudy statistics combined.

"We recruit a certain type of player," explains Massimino in regard to his accomplishment," and we make them go to class and take tutoring if they have a problem." Undoubtedly the diligence of the coaching staff in supervising the players' academic progress is vital, but Massimino spreads out the credit even further. "I think that the big thing is that we have very, very cooperative people at Villanova University. To the letter, the professors have been wonderful."

Compounding the significance of those 27 bachelor degrees is the fact that they were earned in the classroom, not bestowed upon the players as rewards for their on-court performances. Among Massimino's former charges are business executives, accountants, law school students and a chemical engineer. Of course, he teaches his players the game, too; six Villanova graduates are currently playing basketball professionally.

A record such as this is especially noteworthy in light of the widespread cheating and corruption which seem to be engulfing major college athletics. One needs a scorecard to keep track of the teams now on probation — a number which grows almost weekly. Only a few short months ago the Rev. John Lo Schiavo, president of the University of San Francisco, announced that his institution had elected to drop its nationally prominent basketball program rather than subject itself to NCAA probation for the third time in five years.

It's clear that many programs have lost sight of the true objectives of college athletics. Values and integrity are being sacrificed for wins and losses. Schiavo put the situation in perspective when he asked, "How can we contribute to the building of a decent law abiding society in this country if the educational institutions are willing to suffer their principles to be prostituted and involve young people in that prostitution for the purpose of winning some games?"

Against this backdrop stands a program of increasingly rare substance. Whether this year's team performs up to lofty preseason expectations or not, it will surely help create winners in the most important game of all — life.

Flag Football

By JOE DUFFY

The weather has turned a bit colder, the days are shorter and most trees are bare and naked. To many people, this time of year commands a variety of thoughts, but to an intramural league football player, it means only one thing — playoff time.

In the women's league, playoff spots were awarded to the top two teams in each of the four divisions. In the case of identical records in a division, the playoff spot was based on head-to-head competition. Representing the Bronx league are the Stray Cats and The Hoons from the Eastern division, with the Mighty Mates and Beavers qualifying in the western division. Representing the Brooklyn league are Mudgang and TKD from the northern division, with The Supremes and Butts Babes qualifying from the southern division. The quarterfinal match-ups are as follows: The Supremes Vs. TKD, Beavers vs. Stray Cats, The Hoons vs. The Mighty Mates and Mudgang vs. Butts Babes.

In the competitive men's league, a total of 24 teams earned playoff berths. In the eight divisions, the teams with the top three records were given a play-off spot. Eight teams — or the top team in each division were awarded a bye in the first round, which is to begin on Nov. 15. The games will culminate with a Nov. 19 showdown between the final two surviving squads for the league championship.

KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

By COLLEEN LYNCH

George Anderson, varsity water polo co-captain, recently scored 18 goals and had nine assists in the five games of the NCAA Mid-Atlantic Water Polo Tournament at St. Francis College in Brooklyn, New York. This boosted his league goal total to 22, which should place him among the top ten scorers in the league.

Al Fazio, water polo coach, was very pleased with the selection of Anderson as "Budweiser Athlete of the Week." "He definitely deserves the award — he is an excellent defensive player. George recently set a Villanova record of eight assists and one goal in a single game against the Merchant Marine Academy," he added.

"My forte is defense," Anderson admitted, "but during the tournament I had a lot of extra incentive." He attributes his success to the other athletes on the team. "They're a great bunch of guys — we really depend on each other in the pool."

Anderson's season totals of 33 goals and nearly 40 assists make him the second leading scorer on the team. During his four year career at Villanova he scored over 100 goals and is the only water polo player in the school's history to start every game for four years. He is the first water polo player to be named the "Budweiser Athlete of the Week" and shares this year's MVP honors with Bill Ennis.

"Bill Ennis deserves the award too," Anderson emphasized, "We've been playing together for four years and Bill has been working really hard. I really feel he deserves it too."

Anderson, a senior accounting major from Bound Brook, N.J., hopes to continue playing water polo. Law school is also included in his future plans.

Driscoll Addresses V.U. Senate; Athletic Motion Passed

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The surprise introduction of a motion recommending to the University Board of Trustees that it conduct a comprehensive review of the entire athletic program, including consideration of an intercollegiate football program, was the main topic of discussion at the Nov. 12 University Senate meeting featuring the annual state of the University address from President John Driscoll, O.S.A.

The motion, presented by Sen. Angelo Armenti, followed the presentation of the Athletic Advisory Committee's final report on the possible restoration of football given by Dr. Joseph Des Jardins, chairman of the subcommittee charged with presenting substantiation to the Senate's orginial motion.

Driscoll opened the Senate meeting with a 35-minute address thanking the Senate on behalf of the University for its efforts and support of the University in the areas of major projects and renovations.

"We've realized in a dramatic fashion the University improvement program," said Driscoll. "Things are in place, in motion and moving."

Driscoll reviewed the capital projects and major renovations at Bartley, Tolentine and Mendel Halls, calling the work a result of vision, planning and talk that serves the general purpose of the University.

"All this came about because of people," Driscoll emphasized. "Sweat, anxiety and labor. which brings us to the Senate."

Driscoll revealed that Villanova has engaged the services of a "notable" public relations firm to present "to the world Villanova as it really is, to concentrate in the first instance on activities of the faculty."

According to the president, the public relations efforts will help Villanova be seen "in the whole and aid the University in the areas of academic growth, physical facilities and in raising funds."

Driscoll emphasized that finding and attracting sources from outside the University is absolutely essential and "must be increased and intensified to be more effective.

"We've made the committment, assumed the risk and by heck, we're going to accomplish it. It's going to take enthusiasm, sacrifice and effort," Driscoll said.

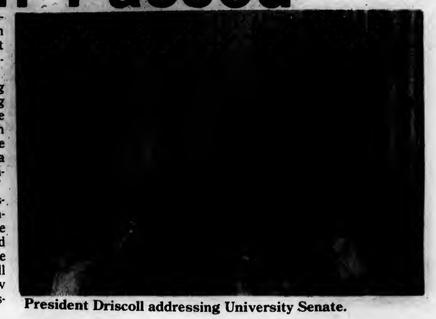
Covering the topic of football, Driscoll said that the estrangement, "the coolness that exists between the University and certain alumni, is a "painful thing" that is to be remedied as soon as possible.

'It's not their way of doing things and not our way of doing things," declared Driscoll. "The alumni are nothing more than former students and senate are why the University exists. It's a valuable and treasured relationship which we do not discount."

Driscoll said the football question is a "delicate one, highly complex. The Board is aware of the implications of this study and may well be open to new evidence or recommendations which will change the nature of what is now the status quo," according to Driscoll.

"It's not simply a question of 'do we bring back football or not?' You have to examine that decision in the context of the entire University. You ask me, 'do I want to see football back?' the answer is yes."

Following the introduction of Dr. Edward M. Wallo as the second engineering senator and the report of the Senate Budget Committee presented by Sen. Alvin Clay, Dr. James J. Clarke, chairman of the University Planning and Priorities Committee presented the committee's report outlining priorities for 1983-84.



President Driscoll addressing University Senate.

According to Clarke, the committee felt very strongly that Villanova must consider the point "when the University becomes uncompetitive in the market."

Sen. Justin Green questioned Clarke if the committee studied what "competitive" would be.

Clarke responded that the committee was "looking at change."

"A parent will accept 12 percent in a world of 14 percent inflation. But a parent is going to start questioning 12 percent in a world of 5 percent inflation."

The committee's report was approved by the Senate 31-1-1-1.

Des Jardins was called upon next to elaborate on the study the advisory subcommittee had authored and had been received by the Senate prior to the meeting.

The committee was charged with the responsibility of providing substantiation and a rationale

Drainage Problem to be Solved

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The south campus drainage problem is being rectified due to the efforts of Mike Ryan, vice-president of Student Government. Construction of a storm drain in the parking lot to eliminate the water drainage problem will cost the University $6,500. Weather permitting, the construction should be completed in ten days.

As a result of inadequate drainage in the parking lot across from the Field House, water drains to the corner of the parking lot, down the side of the hill, along the sidewalk for approximately 25 feet, then off into the street. "In the winter this becomes ice for 25 feet and the students must walk up the middle of Ithan Avenue or take the risk of slipping on the ice. In the fall and spring, the area floods, again leaving students no alternative other than to walk in the street," said Ryan. "The situation was very dangerous and needed immediate attention.

"The administration was very helpful and understanding. They agreed the problem should be addressed. All of the feedback was positive," said Ryan.

Ryan met with Mark Thibobeau, area co-ordinator for south campus, and Chris Janosik, director of residence life, in September to discuss the drainage problem. This was the first time the problem was brought to the attention of the administration according to Ryan.

Ryan wrote a petition and in October 600 Good Counsel and Stanford residents signed the petition to have the University look into the problem and correct it. Ryan proceeded to meet with Janosik and Ed Meagher, director of special projects in maintenance, at an on-site inspection to show them exactly where the problem exists.

The following day, Janosik sent a letter to Dr.Richard Neville, vice-president for studentlife, and Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., addressing the problem.

Within a week after the inspection, Janosik, Meagher, and Thomas N. Trucks, director of maintenance, met to develop a plan to construct the new storm drain in the parking lot to connect underground with the existing storm drain at the Ithan bridge.

Since the construction includes work on the sidewalk and street, the plan had to be proposed to Radnor Township.

"In only ten days from the time I submitted the signed petition, maintenance approval for construction was completed, and then only 3 days later, I received a letter from Janosik informing me that President Driscoll also approved the construction plan," said Ryan.

Captain Cunnane Retires

By DINA KAMILATOS

After 18 years of service to the University, Joseph Cunnane has retired as head of security. The present acting director is Sgt. John Harrity, pending an evaluation of the present program.

Cunnane directed the over-all administration of Villanova's security program and was supervisor of a full-time staff of 47 people. Cunnane directed the parking permit procedure for more than 3,600 cars in Villanova's parking lots and was in charge of the recruitment and the training of personnel for crowd activities such as dances, concerts and athletic events.

Working with the campus infirmary, the police departments, the F.B.I., the C.I.A. and the Secret Service when necessary for VIPs on campus, Cunnane was responsible for the safety of the general public on University property. He supervised a 24-hour patrol and guarding of the main campus, the law school and the dormitories.

The Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president of administration, commented that, "Capt. Cunnane really has contributed a great deal to Villanova's operation during the past 17 years. Much of his work was not publicized and was taken for granted. He was a great asset to the University."

Prior to 1965, Cunnane was a captain in the Philadelphia Police Department.

Florida/Bahamas

Imagine this . . . you are home for Thanksgiving break. Your family has just finished the plumpest and most delicious turkey you have had in years. As the pumpkin pie is set on the table, you seize your opportunity. Calmly, you mention Villanova's Florida and Bahamas trip. You tell them all that is included in each reasonable priced package and that a $50 deposit is due before Dec. 13. How can they say no? Detailed information on each trip is available in the Connelly Center ticket office or the Villanova Union. Have a great Thanksgiving break.

Readers Needed

We have a golden opportunity for volunteering right here on Villanova's campus. Readers are needed to help a blind teacher. This volunteering opportunity would require time to read material and would be done here at Villanova. A few friends could get together and share the time. If you are interested, call Sr. Joy or Mrs. Hansen at the Social Action Office, 645-4075 or stop in 121 Tolentine.

Rosary

The Rosary is prayed at 7 p.m. in Corr Hall chapel Monday through Thursday. This is in fulfillment to our Lady of Fatima's request of the three children to whom she appeared six times in 1917. She said that "only she can bring peace."

Jewish Students:

My name is Susan Abramson and I am the assistant rabbi at Main Line Reform Temple in Wynnewood. I have been hired as this year's Hillel advisor to Villanova's Jewish students. I am very anxious to meet you to plan programs and just to talk about any issue or problem which you feel I could help you with. I'd send you a personal letter, but I have no list of Jewish students! So please give me a call at 649-7800, to let me know you exist. Also, reserve Thursday evening, Dec. 9 at 7:30 p.m. for a joint Hanukkah party with Harcum Jr. College and St. Joseph's University.

Christmas Tree Lighting

You and your family are cordially invited to join the Villanova community in celebrating the holiday season at the Seventh Annual Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony. The program will include: carols, scripture readings, the lighting of the tree and various Christmas greetings. Immediately following, there will be a reception in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Panhellenic Spring Rush

The Pan-hellenic Association will hold an educational meeting Monday, Nov. 29 at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema for all women interested in rushing a fraternity during the spring semester. The rush and pledge program will be explained for the national and local fraternities for women. Important information will be given out, so anyone considering rushing is encouraged to attend.

Pre-Registration

Pre-registration for University College students has begun for the spring semester and will continue until Nov. 30. All U.C. students are encouraged to take advantage of this procedure to guarantee the class and time of your choice. To obtain more information stop in the U.C. Office, 107 Vasey Hall.

Ski Vermont

Join the Villanova Ski Club in an exciting trip to beautiful Mt. Snow, March 18-20. Only $149 per person includes everything. A $25 deposit is due by Dec. 1 at the Connelly Center ticket office. Both beginners and experts are welcome.

Society of Women

There will be a meeting of the Society of Women Engineers on Tuesday, Nov. 30 at 7:30 p.m. in 215 Tolentine. A workshop on interviewing skills and assertiveness training will take place. All are welcome!

Aspen, Colorado

Villanova Ski Club is bringing you the Colorado Rockies over spring break. A week of fun, sun and skiing. Only $649 quad rate/per person. This includes everything! Deposit of $308 required. More information and reservation forms at the Connelly Center ticket office. Deadline: Monday, Nov. 22.

Modern Greek

The second year in modern Greek (Grk 2250-90, Reading in Authors), cancelled in the fall term, will be offered again this spring semester.

The class will meet Tuesday and Thursday afternoons from 4:30 to 5:45 p.m. Students who have completed the first year of modern Greek at Villanova and others who have been exposed to the language through family background, training or life experience are strongly encouraged to participate. If interested, call Mota Henderson at 885-5791.

Special Olympics Chairperson

The search for the 1983 Chairperson of the Special Olympics program at Villanova University has begun! Applications are now available in the Student Activities Office — 214 Dougherty Hall. They must be completed and submitted to Student Activities by December 1, 1982. Any questions, contact Gary Bonas in the Student Activities Office.

Sigma Chi Faculty?

Any faculty member who is an alumnus of Sigma Chi national fraternity, please contact the Student Activities Office at extension 4210.

Physics Lecture

Dr. Alfonso Albano of Bryn Mawr College will deliver a physics lecture entitled "Between Equilibrium and Chaos" on Sunday, Nov. 21 at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty.

The lecture is free and will follow the Sigma Pi Sigma induction ceremony. Refreshments will be served.

Dance Marathon

To everyone who danced in the Dance Marathon: There will be a table in the Connelly Center during the lunch hours today, Nov. 19; Monday, Nov. 22; and Tuesday, Nov. 23 where you can drop off the money you collected from your sponsors. Get your money in then!

Auditions

Auditions have been announced for Villanova Theatre's spring semester productions. "The Lady from the Sea" (February production, Irene Baird directing) will audition in Vasey Theatre on Friday, Nov. 19 from 7-11 p.m. and on Saturday, Nov. 20 from 11 a.m.-5 p.m. Try-outs for "Godspell" (March-April production, Terry Fimiano Guerin directing) will be held in Dougherty (West Lounge) on Friday, Nov. 19 from 7:30-11 p.m.; Saturday, Nov. 20 from 10 a.m.-5 p.m.; and Sunday, Nov. 21 from 12-5 p.m. Call 645-4760 or stop by 108 Vasey for audition information and appointments.

Aerobics

The Dance Club will sponsor aerobics once again next semester. Pre-registration will be the week after Thanksgiving break. Cost is $40 for non-members, $35 for members and $5 membership fee. Watch for more details.

Theatre Auditions

Villanova Theatre announces auditions for two upcoming productions. Try-outs will be held for "The Lady from the Sea" (February production, Irene Baird directing) on Nov. 19 from 7-11 p.m. and Nov. 20 from 11 a.m.-5 p.m. Auditions for "Godspell" (March-April production, Terry Fimiano Guerin directing) will also be held at the above times, with the addition of Sunday, Nov. 20 from 12-5 p.m.

Call 645-4760 for an appointment.

Athletics Review Recommended

behind the October 1981 Senate motion: "The University Senate strongly recommends to the Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program at Villanova University."

Des Jardins explained that the study speaks for itself. "We really tried to consult as many sources as possible. The figures are meant to be general — they can be argued some are too high, some are too low. I'm not really prepared or willing to defend them to the dollar or the cents."

The study cited three factors that the recommendation to establish a football program was based upon: student willingness to be assessed a yearly $35 fee; not counting tuition as a legitimate budget expense convincing; and a football program that would have as a net cost to the University approximately $35,000.

Sen. Robert Garbarino first praised the committee's "positive approach on conducting the study" but said that "it's important we caution every one that I think you're going down the primrose path. If there's one thing that we can do for Villanova University it's to bring peace in the valley."

Garbarino also said he was concerned about the impact of the lack of communication.

Dr. Joseph DesJardins John Welsh Photo

"Corporations and foundations, when they're looking at making major contributions, they look at the university's relations with the alumni, the students and the faculty," emphasized Garbarino. "They won't come back and tell you that they turned you down because you had a problem, but you can get turned down without knowing why you get turned down."

Sen. Philip Maurone said that while the report was basically fine, he wanted to be convinced.

"If the decision as to whether or not we have football is really financial . . . if we never had football at Villanova before, it is a very impressive document," said Maurone.

But, "if the decision is completely financial, as to whether or not we have football at Villanova, I think we should have financial records of what football did in the past. And why this looks good. I presume it didn't look good in the past."

Des Jardins countered that the reason why past figures were not included was because the committee would not get access to them.

"Dr. Aceto, (director of athletics), who is on our committee, would not or could not release the figures to us," Des Jardins said.

Alumni Sen. John Blatt also said that the figures were requested and the figures would not be released.

Dr. Angelo Armenti Jeff Page Photo

The chairman of the Athletic Advisory Committee, John J. McGranaghan, joined Des Jardins in his defense of the study.

"Somebody asked about 'why don't we have the actual figures for the past program' or 'why don't we have Division II or Division III calculations.' I had the opportunity to visit with Fr. Driscoll. I asked him directly for those figures. Ted Aceto has them but they were not released," reported McGranaghan. "This is what we had to work with."

Following lengthy debate among the senators, Armenti proposed a substitute motion, seconded by Garbarino.

"Resolved: In light of the expressed willingness of student and alumni to financially support a football program, the University Senate respectfully recommends to the Board of Trustees that the Board conduct a comprehensive review of the entire athletic program, including consideration of participation by the University in an intercollegiate football program, and establish a University policy for the entire sports program taking into account the academic goals of the University and the benefits and the costs of each athletic program.

"Resolved, further that the University Senate strongly urges the Trustees, the Administration, the Alumni Association and the Student leaders work cooperatively in a spirit of mutual respect and goodwill in the course of this review and in assuring the success of the Covenant II Campaign, which is of vital importance to the continuity and success of all University programs."

Blatt immediately claimed that the substitute motion was a "slap in the face to the advisory committee" and called for the Senate to return to the original motion.

The motion to approve the substitute resolution as a senate motion was unanimously approved and the motion to approve the resolution passed 33-0-1-1.

Scholarships Established

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY and LINDA BOND

Villanova is offering competitive full four-year scholarships for qualified minority students who will enter college in the fall of 1983. These scholarships are awarded annually to two members of Villanova's freshman class.

Funded entirely by the University, the two Presidential Minority Scholarships cover the total costs of tuition and room and board at Villanova.

Eligibility for the Presidential Minority Scholarships is limited to students who are members of the Asian, Black, Hispanic, or Native American minority groups. Candidates must be United States citizens living in Pennsylvania. For consideration, students must have minimum combined Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores of 1200, excellent high school records and class rankings, and be entering their freshman year of college.

Scholarship recipients must maintain high academic standards for scholarship renewal each year.

These scholarships supplement a comprehensive aid program which provides assistance in varying degrees to all financially needy Villanova students, including minorities.

The Leroy E. Dettman Foundation, Inc., expects to award $150,000 in scholarships to qualified full-time students in a post-secondary degree granting program for the 1983-1984 academic year.

Adios Arth!

To write a tribute to Jerry Arth is no easy task. Consequently, this will not be a tribute.

First of all, we want to thank everyone who helped keep this a secret from Jerry. Of course, those of you who know him realize this was simple — since Jerry usually only has a vague idea of what's in the paper anyway. But, let's get to the subject at hand.

Gerald E. Arth is from that intellectually barren city where steel is made in everyone's backyard: Bethlehem, Pa. Arth attended Bethlehem Catholic High School where he was best known for blowing smoke rings. With a sincere interest in furthering his fine Catholic education, Arth came to Villanova.

As a freshman, Arth had hoped to join the Blue Key. Unfortunately, he was too short to point to the library while giving campus tours. Feeling rejected and dejected, he joined the Villanovan staff as an entertainment writer.

In his first article, which appeared in the Villanovan in late 1979, he wrote, "In the beginning, God created 'punk' rock . . ." This journalistic revelation was only a taste of what was to be expected from Jerry Arth. Other highlights from his freshman year included reviews of such well known groups as "The Yipes" and "Root Boy Slim and the Sex Change Band."

Moving into his sophomore year, Arth felt the need to voice his opinions through a more influential medium. Finding none at Villanova, he joined WKVU. After a short time, he somehow managed to become promotion director of WKVU.

At this time, he was also appointed Assistant Entertainment Editor of the Villanovan. After a year of writing more stupid reviews, Arth decided he wanted to be Editor-in-Chief.

"A man's best friend is his cigarette," claims Arth.

On the way to a Publications Board hearing, Arth consults his lawyers.

Arth shares a smoke with one of his closest friends.

He campaigned for months, handing out leaflets and kissing babies and was finally elected by a slim margin. However, it should be noted that no one else ran.

Although Arth was always busy with his duties as editor, he did find time for his hobbies: blowing smoke rings and meeting with the University Publications Board.

Many people at Villanova will be sad to see Jerry graduate this May; they had hoped he would be expelled. But nevertheless, we at the Villanovan will miss him — not a lot — but we'll miss him.

Adios Arth.

Soviet Politics, Leaders Analyzed

By JACK McHUGH

Soviet President Leonid Illiych Brezhnev died last week, leaving the Soviet Union leaderless for about two days. Then rather suddenly, with a speed uncharacteristic of power changes in the Soviet Union, the former head of the KGB Yuri Andropov, was named Brezhnev's successor as First Party Secretary, the most powerful post in the Soviet Union.

Villanova's resident Soviet expert, Dr. Jeffrey Hahn of the political science department, has evaluated the political consequences of Brezhnev's death and how it will affect relations with the U.S.

Although his death came as a surprise, no one could say it was unexpected. In Hahn's view, the government of the last few years had been a caretaker government anyway. "This gerontocracy (government of the aged) has dealt ineffectually with their major domestic problems of the last few years," said Hahn.

Hahn believes Andropov's biggest problem is that of the Soviet economy. "They lack high industrial growth and face a continuing shortfall of foodstuffs in agriculture," Hahn said. "They also have a growing manpower shortage that requires that they make their labor more productive."

Hahn also stated that Andropov must solve, in addition to the other problems, the U.S.S.R.'s "expensive foreign policy issues: Afghanistan, Poland, improving relations with China. The new Soviet leadership will also want to improve relations with the U.S.," stated Hahn. When asked why they would want to improve relations with the U.S., Hahn responded, "to be able to spend less on their military and get needed technology from the U.S."

In Hahn's judgment, "all objective conditions encourage Andropov to take a moderate position. It is important to note, of all of the candidates for Soviet leadership, he (Andropov) most favors detente with the West."

Hahn views Andropov's foreign service experience — head of KGB's overseas bureau, ambassador to Hungary in the mid-1950s (including helping surpress the Hungarian uprising of 1956), and head of the Central Committee's Intersocialist Relations Committee — will help Andropov choose a good foreign policy for the Soviet Union. Hahn thinks that Andropov also will be able to introduce needed domestic changes.

Dr. Jeffrey Hahn Jeff Page Photo

Hahn views the question of Andropov's (68) age as unimportant as long as he is able to rule effectively for whatever time he is in control. However, Hahn feels that Andropov will not match Brezhnev's fourteen years in office.

Hahn foresees Andropov making changes in the organization of the KGB and the structure of Soviet society and not be labeled a liberal (i.e. he will support the armed forces).

Overall, Hahn predicts that the Soviet Union, under Andropov as the new First Party Secretary, will make the needed changes in the Soviet domestic and foreign policies.

It's been customary for the departing editors of this paper to write a "farewell" editorial. Typically, the editorial turns out to be a summation of the editors' impressions of Villanova after having viewed it regularly and in minute detail for the past year.

This year, rather than writing a new one, we choose to re-print an editorial written in 1967 by Ron Javers, former editor-in-chief and now the editor of Philadelphia magazine. It's a magnificent piece which, though written 15 years ago, has lost none of its relevance to the Villanova University of today. In fact (and this is the sad thing), it's probably more applicable today than it was then.

Letters to the Editor

Build-up Editorial Timely, Appropriate

To the Editor:

Last week's editorial "Referendums Say 'No' to Build-up," buildup as in reference to the stock-piling of nuclear weapons, was not only appropriate but timely. Just this past week the U.S. bishops met in Washington, D.C., to discuss their second draft of a pastoral letter on war and peace. It is expected to be promulgated this spring as a guide for U.S. Catholics.

In the second draft the bishops quote from Vatican II: "The arms race is one of the greatest curses on the human race and the harm it inflicts upon the poor is more than can be endured." The bishops continue (Section II, C-1): "Under no circumstances may nuclear weapons or other instruments of mass slaughter be used for the purpose of destroying population centers or other predominantly civilian targets."

Further, it states, ". . . our condemnation applies especially to the retaliatory use of weapons striking enemy cities after our own have already been struck. Retaliation in such circumstances would serve no rational or moral purpose . . ." "No Christian can rightfully carry out orders or policies deliberately aimed at killing non-combatants."

Also say the bishops (Section II, C-2): "We do not perceive any situation in which the deliberate initiation of nuclear warfare, on however restricted a scale, can be morally justified. Nonnuclear attacks by another state must be resisted by other than nuclear means" (thus, no first use!).

The pastoral, in its concluding remarks, addresses Catholics in various professions. To those in the military it says, "We have spoken clearly against the deliberate use of weapons against civilian populations. Catholic military personnel must observe those prohibitions . . ." furthermore, "Those who train individuals for military duties must remember that the civilian does not lose his or her basic human rights by entrance into military service . . ."

For those who will find some of these statements too strong or "political," the bishops respond: Questions of war and peace have a profoundly moral dimension which reasonable Christians cannot ignore. They are questions of life and death. True, these questions also have a political dimension because they are embedded in public policy, but the fact that they are also political is no excuse for denying the church's obligation to provide its members with the help they need in forming their consciences. We must learn together how to make correct and responsible moral judgments. We reject, therefore, criticism of the church's concern with these issues on the ground that it 'should not become involved in politics.' We are called to move from discussion to witness and action.

Said your editorial: "To continue the arms race . . . is simply irresponsible." Our bishops agree, and so your stand is not only reasonable and appropriate, but also prophetic.

Rugby Reply

To the Editor:

For some people, the truth can hurt. Evidence last week's bitter remarks by three rugby players.

I happened to write that article ("Ruggers Over .500" Nov. 5). My information was obtained from players on the team itself, and all of it was accurately delivered in the article.

Two of the letter-writers were angered over the use of the term, "loose organization." But the facts stand as they are. In comparison to several other sports on campus (remember, I used the word "relatively" in the article)—especially the NCAA Division I teams — rugby is not rigidly structured. The facts supporting this statement cannot be denied.

But in no way did this attempt to belittle the sport or its participants, as the three writers falsely concluded. They used expressions such as "very respectable," "demanding and successful," and "serious . . . (and) . . . dedicated." Why? I never said anything to the contrary. The writers took my statements and read into them what really wasn't there.

In this letter, Steven Todaro gave the ruggers' record as 5-1. My column did not cover the Lehigh match, as it was after the fact. And concerning the two added losses I mentioned: these were supplied to me by the sources in the article. Match play or not, they were actual losses.

Nowhere in the article did I attempt to belittle coach Betzler, as Todaro suggested in his "defense" of the coach. Not once did I question his abilities and qualifications.

And finally, nowhere did I write: "a rugby player could miss two weeks of practice . . ." Steven Todaro was again in error.

Nuclear Convocation and Today's 'Cardinal Question'

The Villanova Law School held a Convocation on "Solutions to the Nuclear Arms Race" last Thursday. My attendance prompted me to write on the subjects discussed there.

First let me congratulate the organizers of the convocation on the excellence of the whole event: the film, "No First Use: Preventing Nuclear War;" the panel of speakers and the academic freedom in which contrasting views could be expressed. Although, as Dr. John Logue in his concluding remarks indicated, peace is intimately related to justice, it was fitting that on Veterans' Day the major emphasis should fall on peace. How is peace to be maintained and the infinite catastrophe of nuclear war averted? This seemed to be the tacit question underlying both the film and the discussion. It is the cardinal question of our time. For nothing less that the fate of the earth depends on our answer.

The opposing answers were offered by the panel members. Five of the six said the answer lies in "renouncing first use of nuclear weapons, and by declaring a mutual and verifiable freeze on their development, production and deployment, followed by their mutual reduction." The sixth, Dr. G. McCormick, opposed both ideas, echoing the arguments of the Reagan administration that we must deter Soviet aggression by retaining the option of a first nuclear strike and by increasing both the quantity and quality of nuclear arms (MX, Trident, Pershing II, cruise, etc.) in order to compel the Soviets to reduce their nuclear arms on our terms.

Let us consider the probable results of these opposing courses. Suppose we follow the advice of the five panel members, renouncing the first nuclear strike and agreeing to a mutual, verifiable freeze. First, we shall get an immediate agreement with the Soviets, since they have repeatedly made both of these proposals.

Second, we shall obviate the possibility of nuclear war, since if there is no first strike, there can be no second strike. There would remain, I admit, the problem raised by McCormick, "What should NATO do to deter or defeat a Soviet Warsaw Pact attack on western Europe?" NATO should, I submit, strengthen its conventional forces, particularly anti-tank weapons, rather than resort to nuclear weapons, for in the words of Alain Enthoven, nuclear weapons "cannot defend Europe; they can only destroy it" — destroy Europe, and we might add, destroy the world, for the Soviets have made it crystal clear that if the west uses nuclear arms the Soviets will respond with nuclear arms not only against west Europe but also against the U.S. Third, if we agree to a freeze we shall at last halt the arms race, reducing the danger of nuclear war and reducing the projected horrendous deficit which is crippling our economy.

Now let us suppose we follow the alternative path proposed by Dr. McCormick (and by the Reagan administration). What will be the probable results?

First, by retaining the option of a first nuclear strike we leave wide open the door that leads to nuclear war. Second, if we sow the winds of war by making a first nuclear strike against the Soviet Union we shall reap the whirlwind of a devastating Soviet nuclear counterattack. Both Khrushchev and Brezhnev have repeatedly made this clear. Marshall Sokolovskii expressed it thus: "The logic of war is such that if a war is unleashed by the aggressive circles of the United States, it will immediately be transferred to the territory of the United States of America. All weapons: ICBMs, missiles from submarines, and other strategic weapons, will be used in this military conflict." Those nuclear war-winning enthusiasts in the Reagan administration who think we can lightheartedly start a nuclear war with a first strike, conduct it in our war and end it on our terms, are living in a world of pure illusion. There is no possibility of starting a nuclear war without ensuring the utter destruction of the United States — and probably the rest of the world as well.

Third, to increase nuclear arms as Reagan is doing, is to ensure the continuation of the nuclear arms race. For if we increase our nuclear arms, the Russians will increase theirs, then we increase ours again and they increase theirs again, and so ad infinitum — or rather, until somebody uses nuclear arms and we destroy the world, thus ending the arms race by ending the human race.

Fourth, as long as we continue to develop, produce and deploy nuclear weapons we shall continue to increase our national budget deficit and wreck the economy of the first world; the Soviets will continue to increase nuclear weapons and wreck their economy, and the economy of the third world will be crushed between the millstones of the failing economies of the first and second worlds. "And thus we drift toward unparalleled catastrophe" (Einstein).

The Reagan prescription ensures that catastrophe. The renunciation of a first nuclear strike and a mutual freeze followed by nuclear arms reduction ensures at least the possibility of averting it.

Minority Enrollment

To the Editor:

I read the Rev. Harry Erdlen's response to your article on Villanova University's minority student recruiting efforts with great interest. While I'm certainly happy to see the admissions office is addressing some of the very real problems of minority recruitment, I'm still concerned about several issues.

Erdlen claims in his letter that my information about Villanova's recruiting efforts in the Philadelphia public schools was "erroneous." In checking with my department colleague, Rev. John O'Rourke, O.S.A., about his temporary and part-time work for the admissions office, I discovered that O'Rourke had indeed visited Philadelphia high schools. His visits, however, consisted primarily of making contact with available guidance counselors, dropping off literature about the University and speaking with "a few students" if the students were available. My impression, after talking with O'Rourke, was that student contact was not stressed as part of the presentation given to the high schools by representatives of the admissions office. It seems that the University does not have a tradition of having to persuade or sell Villanova to prospective students simply becuase the pool of students already interested in Villanova University is so large. This is not the case, however, in Philadelphia public high schools. Villanova is not as well known as some of the other colleges located within the city limits. If we want minority students we must work to do it. It seems to me that there can be a difference made between visiting and recruiting.

Erdlen notes that there are problems in attracting qualified minority students to the school. If this is indeed the case, and we really want to increase our minority student population, then a more aggressive program of active recruiting seems in order. Meeting with groups of students and telling them about Villanova's fine academic heritage bringing them to school to show that transportation is not a significant problem with two separate train lines running from Center City Philadelphia right to the campus, and working with Philadelphia area high schools to make it clear that Villanvoa would be a positive academic experience for any minority student, are all ways of becoming more actively engaged in the recruiting process.

O'Rourke's work with the admissions office is apparently over. While I am certainly pleased to see that the admissions office is continuing its efforts at minority recruiting, the specific list of schools listed in Erdlen's letter included only one public school in the city of Philadelphia. Participating in the supermarket atmosphere of the Philadelphia College Fair one school among many schols (many of which are more familiar to minority students) most certainly cannot reflect the kind of sensitive, active recruiting effort we need to bring more minority students to Villanova.

My concern for increased minority admissions is not simply numbers. It is one of education. The lessons of college are learned both inside and outside of the classroom. We learn to cope with intercultural and interethnic differences not with books or platitudes, but with experience — people learning to interact successfully with other people. The concern about increased minority admissions cannot become the concern of any one office nor of any one group of people. Because increased minority admissions is an educational concern and education is the concern of all Villanovans, then, we, faculty, staff and students all must consider seriously the problems of minority recruiting.

1983-84 Priorities Set

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

The University Planning and Priorities Committee report for the 1983-84 budget was recently approved by the Senate.

In its annual report to the Senate, the committee presents a consensus view of administrators, faculty and students emphasizing budget priorities that deserve special attention.

According to the committee's chairman, Dr. James J. Clarke, "The items represent a cross section of academic, administrative and student type expenditures. Some of the items listed are of little financial significance relative to the total discretionary portion of the budget; while other items represent significant sums."

The 1983-84 priorities report was based on the assumption that the inflation rate over the period of the 1982-83 budget will be in the range of five to six percent and the inflation rate over the period of the 1983-84 budget will be in the range of 5.7 to seven percent.

At the Nov. 12 Senate meeting, Clarke explained the priorities committee's report and answered questions on the priorities.

According to the report, the four highest priorities are additional funds for development operation, debt service on the recent $25 million bond issue, financial aid and student tuition rates and room and board fees.

Dr. James J. Clarke

Concerning development operation, the report states that "it is vital that the Covenant Campaign be successful so that the five-year notes can be retired on schedule. If the development office needs additional staff, funds should be made available."

About debt service on the bond issue, "the committee believes that this should be among the highest priorities because of the contractual obligation it involves. Even if nothing else is done, the University must provide sufficient funds to cover the debt service so that the bonds will not default."

The report also stated that for the University to attract the mix of students desirable, it is necessary to make financial aid a high priority and that the University must do all it can to minimize the increase in tuition, and room and board fees.

"This is important in order for Villanova to remain competitive and not force students to turn to lower cost institutions," the report states.

Other priorities include campus security and safety, faculty development, improved staff fringe benefits and program development and evaluation.

The report recommends that if additional funds are needed to enforce parking regulations, they should be provided in the 1983-84 budget.

Concerning faculty development, "a specific objective of the computer improvement program is to raise the level of computer literacy of both faculty and students," the report reads.

According to the report, last year the faculty received an improved hospitalization and dental plan. The committee recommends that the University should attempt to provide similar upgrading in its fringe benefits to the staff.

Program development and evaluation deals with the priorities given to new academic programs and evaluation of the changing enrollment among academic majors and review of programs.

Cars Impounded

By CAROL ALKONS

In September of this year, federal attorneys in Philadelphia impounded the cars of 17 Philadelphia-area residents who had defaulted on their student loan payments, according to a recent College Press Service report. It was estimated that the defaulters owed $50,000 collectively for guaranteed and direct government student loans.

In the report, Peter Vaira, U.S. Attorney for the nine-county Philadelphia area said, "We're doing whatever we can to get these people to pay off their debts to the government. We're going to garnish wages, impound cars and take whatever property we can get our hands on to get these people to pay up . . . So many people take the attitude that 'since the government doesn't come after us, we don't have to worry about the loan money we owe.' I think this shows them we will come after them."

Since then, the response on the part of the defaulters has been good. According to Virginia Powel, assistant U.S. Attorney for Philadelphia, "of the 27 cases of cars that have been taken since September, 24 have resulted in payment of the loan in full, or a lump payment with a written agreement for payment of the balance in installments. Federal marshalls still have possession of three of the 27 cars seized."

Powel explained that besides the debts owed for student loans, many are for money obtained through the G.I. Bill.

The average amount owed for student loans is between $2,000 and $3,000. When news broke of the crackdown on loan defaulters, an increase in student loan payments occurred, Powel stated.

Good Chance for Early Retirement

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

It is almost 9 a.m. on the lower East Side of New York. Many people are rushing to get to work on time. For the city's dock workers, the day is almost over. Usually about this time a woman can be seen walking through the work area saying hello to all the men. Several of the men wave to the woman as she walks by. Then as she passes, the same men laugh hysterically.

Annie is a prostitute. At least she used to be. Today she is really nothing more than a bag lady. In fact, the workers refer to her as, "Shopping Bag Annie" when talking among themselves.

Annie is an example of what happens to the aging prostitute. How old Annie is is anyone's guess. She looks to be in her early to late fifties. She's probably in her forties. This "business" as she refers to it, will do it to you.

Most of the time Annie makes her money selling odds and ends such as sweatsocks, handkerchiefs and hotplates. For each of these items she receives no more than a dollar or two. Whenever possible she turns to prostitution in order to generate money. Her customers are usually the dock workers, who she has known for years. Even then she makes no more than ten dollars. Annie is a desperate woman struggling to survive.

For the most part, Annie is a pathetic sight. Her shoulder-length hair is strewn askance, and her face is lined with the pains of her profession. "It wasn't always like this. Years ago I was something!" Annie said. With that she took out an old picture of herself; one that showed an attractive lady in her early twenties. The metamorphosis that had occurred during years gone by was truly unfair.

"You know, I'm fairly big on music. I used to travel and hang out around with many people in the country-music field," Annie commented. The list she reeled off was rather impressive. This woman who is now considered a bag lady once hung out with many of today's popular country artists. Annie mentioned that these people have the same hangups and insecurities as anyone else.

One particular musician (who has won several grammy awards) was totally afraid of women. "He was so scared, and often felt so lonely. The road always got to him, he hated not being in one settled place," she commented.

As we continued our discussion, Annie was more at ease. She seemed enthusiastic to talk about her past rather than her present. She had still been a prostitute years ago, but felt people had more respect for her back then.

One thing that apparently hurt Annie was the way she is treated now. "Most of the workers wave and say hello to me, but I know they're making fun of me."

Annie, not surprisingly, has read many books, including several by Norman Mailer. She doesn't condone prostitution, but doesn't condemn it either. She says it has helped put a child through school. Whether this is true or not cannot be ascertained. To some extent all prostitutes live a lie. It helps to justify their reasoning for being in the profession.

Sadly enough, Annie is not the only prostitute who has ended up either a bag-lady, junkie or for that matter, dead. These people all had potential but misdirected it and gave up on a normal lifestyle too soon.

This three-part series, it is hoped, demonstrated that the "prostitute" comes in all different shapes and sizes. But most of the time, as with this Annie, the sun will not come out tomorrow.

Rollie Breaks in China

By BOB HERMAN

Tonight's dinner will feature Peking duck, 1,000 year-old eggs and deer ligaments. This is part of the menu that Villanova basketball coach Rollie Massimino witnessed and ate when he was in China this past summer from August 17 thru September 3.

When one thinks of sports played in China one usually mentions table tennis, but the Nike Corporation is trying to change that stereotype.

Basketball is gaining popularity in China. This past summer, the Nike Corporation sponsored a 17-day goodwill trip to China for three American collegiate coaches to give coaching clinics to 500 Chinese basketball coaches.

The coaches who participated included Villanova's Massimino, former Temple University coach, Don Casey, and Iowa University's Lou Olsen.

The coaches went to China to work with the native coaches on fundamental drills and also gave many lectures; however, Massimino also learned about the Chinese culture.

The Chinese assign what their people will do in life, so naturally the tallest people are destined to become basketball players, the coach explained. Massimino feels that the Chinese people, to an extent, have a "laid back style."

One of the first things which Massimino learned was that the prices between American and Chinese respective economies cannot really be compared. For example, on the average a typical job pays $32 per month, a doctor's house-call is ten cents and a hospital visit is free.

Massimino indicated that the food was excellent. In addition to the aforementioned food, the coach ate a lot of vegetables. One thing that the Chinese did differently than Americans was to put a lot of MSG (mysodium glutamate), which is a salt content, into the food. Massimino explained that this heavy salt concentration affected his wife's blood pressure a bit, but he said, "Overall the food was excellent — I loved it. We could not drink the water, but beer was popular — we drank Malti, which really tasted like kerosene."

Speaking more about the "culture shock," Massimino said that the men and women all dressed the same, worked togther no matter how physical the work and that they usually were working by 4:30 a.m.

The coach also indicated that their nights were filled with many activities, including going to minstrels and operas. Massimino said, "The minstrels and operas were fun, but we usually left at 'half time' in most instances."

Massimino explained that he really liked the Chinese people. He said, "I really got along well — I think they were a little taken back by our looks and dress (usually shorts and sneakers)." While the Chinese ride bikes everywhere, Massimino explained that the people were a bit surprises to see the Americans run everywhere.

The only bad note on the trip was that Coach Massimino became quite sick. Massimino explained that the high altitudes and pollution contributed to his illness. Indicating just how sick he was, the coach remarked, "I was a long way from home and I needed help badly."

Massimino said that his group was taken to all the great tourist sites including The Great Wall, Mao's tomb, and many museums. The Americans were driven to these attractions. Massimino commented, "The driving was incredible — I thought it was over a few times."

Basketball Coach, Rollie Massimino

Commenting on what he brought back to Villanova's basketball program, Massimino said, "Everyone in America, including our basketball team, should never worry or think about being held back in any way. Those people (the Chinese) can't get every place because of the system — they can't get every place they want to go, whereas here we have to be very proud to be American because we can do what we are capable of doing, if we really put our minds to it. That's what I try to relate to the players for every day life. Those that want to make it can make it."

Reflecting back on the trip, Massimino added, "We should be very happy to live in the settling in which we live and that we have the opportunity to expand on our abilities as people — that is so critical."

Not Home for the Holidays...

By SARA KELLY and S.SCHWARTZBERG

The holiday season, which is fast approaching as signaled by the arrival of Thanksgiving, conjures up thoughts of parties, dinners and going home to our families.

Going home to a family is a wonderful experience, but some of us go home to families that are no longer complete. The death of a father, mother, sister or brother can change the meaning of the holidays altogether.

The first holiday without a loved one is the most traumatic. The void left by the tragedy seems unfillable and all-consuming. Any hopes for a happy holiday seem to be gone forever.

The void is typified by the empty dining room chair that no one will sit in but no one will take away from the table. A place setting that will not be used is often put down out of force of habit.

These jolts into reality bring with them the realization that the loved one is not merely away from home but is never coming home.

At this point a conscious decision must be made; to live in the past or to go on. In going on, the only reasonable decision is to regain some sense of normality.

The things which have always been done must still be done, but by someone else.

Seemingly simple tasks once done by the parent, such as carving the turkey, bringing ornaments up from the basement and trimming the tree, fall to others who must accept what fate, no matter how unfairly, has made it necessary for them to do.

Acceptance of the responsibility for these tasks may be painful at first, but certainly less painful than seeing the tasks go blatenly undone.

In fact, the completion of the tasks can be a source of comfort for the whole family. The day taken in terms of accomplishing each small task seems less insurmountable.

Also, being thankful for the presence of remaining family, and the exchange of support among them can make the holidays easier to handle.

The death of a family member will always be a tragic loss to any family, but the support of surviving relatives as they come together to comfort one another makes it easier to go on, as the missing loved one would have wanted.

Perspective

Reflections

By DANIEL T. REGAN

(A Thanksgiving stream (puddle?) of consciousness)

Where there is life there is hope. Where there is Hope there is Thanks (for the memories). Therefore, as all logicians know, where there is life, there is thanks. It is thus fitting and proper at a great university with an abundance of life that there should be ample quantities of thanks. (If you followed the reasoning in this opening paragraph you are required to pre-register for a logic course, since your thought processes are bizarre at best!)

Thanksgiving is my favorite holiday. It is the one break from the every day events when no one is trying to sell me anything. It is also a day that is unabashedly familial. My family, like most families, is the real center of love and joy in my life. One is never more conscious of the blessings one enjoys as when the clan gathers in familial celebration.

The paradoxes of life have a way of imposing themselves on our consciousness at Thanksgiving. There is an awful lot of inhumanity that humans do to each other, yet, there is nothing more loveable and loving than humans. There is a great deal of injustice in our country, yet our country is the most just of lands. There are millions of people who have little to be thankful for this Thanksgiving, yet many of them will pause and give thanks to their God for the gifts they do possess while millions of the well-to-do will merely make use of another opportunity to stuff their gluttonous gullets with gravied goose (to grease that camel through the needle?).

Lest we whitened sepulchres thank the great Jehovah that we are not like the rest of men in one brief shining moment of appreciation, this year let me ask you for our one moment right now. Is there any correlation between the life style we enjoy and the hunger of others in our human family? As we thank our Lord for the generosity He has bestowed on us are we willing to reduce that largesse for the sake of others? Do we appreciate life enough to work actively to support those groups that hold it sacred? Do we enjoy our comforts enough to help those who need to be comforted? Would you sacrifice your new outfit to clothe the naked? Would you be willing to suffer an injustice for the sake of justice? Is it truly in giving that one receives? If you want people to love you, do you simply have to love them? What do you really think? Do you really believe that Christ had it even vaguely correct when He suggested that we should love our enemies and turn the other check? Does anyone in their right mind actually believe that Christ, if he were around today, would not actively support America's stockpiling of nuclear arms — or that this is clearly the way to love our Communist enemies? Don't you think that Christ would call down a few choirs of angels to get rid of the Reds? Thanks be to God that we don't have to take these questions seriously!

Do me a favor. When you bow your heads to thank your God this November, take note. You are surrounded by loving people in a warm and gracious home. You live in a land where freedom rings from sea to shining sea. You live on a giant blue and white marble that spins unnoticed in a great Milky Way. With the certitude that the faith of your fathers brings to you, you know that the infinitely loving creator of all this loves you personally. But just as surely He loves El Salvadoreans who disappear when visited in the middle of the night, Calcuttans who Mother Theresa never sees, Polish workers who cannot find Solidarity and 10 percent of your countrymen who cannot find work. Why is this God so generous to us? We know that we have much for which to be grateful. We should care to give him thanks.

Culture and Anarchy 'Now'

By STEVEN HELMETAG

Christopher Sharrett, assistant professor at Valley Forge Military Junior College and Ph.D. candidate in cinema studies at New York University, will be speaking for the Villanova University Cultural Film Series on Sunday, Nov. 21 on the University's campus. The discussion will focus on "Culture and Anarchy in Coppola's 'Apocalypse Now.'" The film will be shown at 3:30 and 7 p.m. on Nov. 21 and on Nov. 22. The discussion will take place after the Sunday evening performance.

"Apocalypse Now," according to Sharrett, is "not only the most significant film dealing with the Vietnam War, but goes much further in describing a period of cultural crisis that took place in America in the 1960s." Sharrett feels that Vietnam as a battlefield is only a continuation of America. It is a place where the country portrays its own internal crisis and its lack of collective belief among its solidiers. Captain Willard, the protagonist of the film, does not know what he is or what he stands for. He isn't sure if he should be an ordinary solidier or an assassin.

Francis Ford Coppola, the film's director, shows that the Vietcong realize a common sense of bond that the American forces no longer have. Throughout history, warfare has traditionally drawn Americans together but the Vietnam conflict was a notable exception. Coppola attributes this to the breakdown of cultural belief systems. "An idea that is deeply rooted in the film is that the old myths that this country was based on (and) the people that we projected our dreams onto are now gone," which caused the defeat of America inside Vietnam, according to Sharrett.

"Apocalypse Now" and rock music have a lot in common. "The End," performed by the rock group The Doors, is the musical theme of the movie. In fact, The Doors' Jim Morrison and Coppola were fellow fimmakers and friends at UCLA. The Doors, Jimi Hendrix and other '60s groups, with their violent and wild stage antics, were known as negative characters although the rock and roll of the 1950s involved a coming together and a sense of community. The dream of cohesion was ending.

Don't Get Burned

"Moral courage is a rarer commodity than bravery in battle or great intelligence. Yet it is the one essential, vital quality for those who seek to change a world that yields most painfully to change."

Robert Kennedy

Moral courage (or the lack of it) is a central issue in "The Firebugs," a political satire by Max Frisch, which will be the next production at Villanova Theatre, opening Nov. 17-20 and Dec. 1-4. Villanova's Peace and Justice Program (from whose pamphlet the above quote is taken) is collaborating with the threatre department to present a special post-show panel discussion of "The Firebugs" on Dec. 1 at 9:30 p.m. in Vasey Theatre. Included on the panel will be Lon Winston, assistant professor of theatre and director of "The Firebugs," Dr. Charles Helmetag, chairman of the modern languages department; Jack Thawley, co-founder of Villanova's Pax Christi group; and Dan Regan, assistant professor of philosophy and director of the Peace and Justice Program. Regan will moderate the discussion. For further information on the discussion and on reservations for "The Firebugs," call 645-4763 or stop by 108 Vasey.

The Sparks Are Flying At Vasey

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

"The Firebugs," a political satire by Swiss playwright Max Frisch, is the latest production being performed at the Vasey Theatre. Directed and designed by Lon Winston, "The Firebugs" is surely the most interesting play to hit the Vasey Theatre in a long time.

First performed in the 1950 s, this play is the supposed study of man's complacency — and therefore is timeless. Originally playwright Max Frisch wrote "The Firebugs" in order to speak out against the horrors of Nazi Germany.

The setting is said to be "right here" and the time, "right now." Corny, yes, but once again time and place are irrelevant.

The story centers around one Gottlieb Biedermann, who lives a quiet comfortable life and likes everything in its place. How this man ever achieved any success is anyone's guess. Biedermann is a bumbling, sniveling coward who does not have the word "no" in his vocabulary. It seems one night Biedermann allows a strange visitor, Sepp Schmitz to spend the night. Schmitz, an intimidating sort, does exactly that to Biedermann and makes himself at home.

Before long, Schmitz's buddy Willi Eisenring is an occupant in the Biedermann household. In actuality two men are ex-cons and arsonists, which explains the play's title.

Throughout the play we see Schmitz and Eisenring ridicule and manipulate Biedermann. It's obvious that these two are going to burn Biedermann's house down. Biedermann knows this too, but he does not want to cause trouble. He figures maybe everything will work out all right. Biedermann rationalizes everything that happens and will not dare question the motives of either Scmitz or Eisenring — or anyone. In fact Biedermann, (literally down to the last match), fuels the fire for these arsonists. At least now he does not have to confront anyone.

Larry Arrigale is excellent as the milquetoast, Biedermann. Arrigale's Biedermann is a combination of Groucho Marx, Woody Allen and Dagwood Bumpstead. From his oversized plaid tie to his matching plaid suitcase, Biedermann is the classic buffoon. This is the man who people would sell bridges to. He does not have a cynical bone in his body.

Dana F.X. Amendola is also quite good as Schmitz. This man looks like he has fun burning houses down. His physique and facial contortions remind this writer of the late John Belushi. Joe Seefeldt who portrays Eisenring also gives a fine performance. He and Amendola complement one another nicely as there is a certain chemistry between the two onstage. Mimi McGrath, Elisa Loprete and Jack Doody round out the talented cast.

Dinner is served at the Biedermanns' in Villanova Theatre's production of "The Firebugs."

Most refreshing was the stage design, which depicted that of a molecule of gasoline, (or matchstick even?), complete with retractable settings. What helped immensely was the configuration of the theatre itself. Rather than the usual style, the Vasey has converted into a 3/4 round theatre. One is now able to clearly see and hear the performers.

"The Firebugs" is not without flaws though. Billed as a dark, humorous satire, the play takes itself too seriously. Entertaining, yes, but paralleling this play with the plight of today's nuclear world — I don't think so.

Also, the chorus looked as if they had just come from a Devo concert. Clad in grey outfits with helmets and capes (ala Batman), this cast of caped crusaders should go away till next Halloween. It is not the actors' fault either. Sir Lawrence Olivier would not have helped. As Biedermann's conscience and guardian (yawn), the chorus keeps warning him of the impending danger he faces through trite, rhythmic dialog that make one cringe. No wonder he does not listen. This chorus is so tedious and obnoxious that at one point even Biedermann tells him to shut up!

The play is at its best when Arrigale's Biederman is frantically pacing around, or has to placate the arsonists. Russell Waldbrook's lighting combined with "inappropriate" music also hits the mark. One memorable scene is where Mrs. Biedermann (Loprete) tries to get rid of Schmitz. As they banter back and forth, we hear soft music and see lights dimmed, in what obviously is not a romantic moment.

Overall, "The Firebugs" makes for an entertaining evening. Larry Arrigale's performance is worth the price of admission. While the play does have its faults, director Lon Winston and the Villanova Theatre Company should be commended for an interesting change of pace.

A Dream That Comes True

By PETER BERKERY

Werner Herzog's latest work, "Fitzcarraldo," deals with two themes common to many films: man against the elements and the isolation of a dreamer. What makes Herzog's film so monumental is that it is a movie more breathtaking than any film of its kind. In creating such a film, Herzog, (who co-produced, directed and wrote the screenplay), had to go deep into the Amazon jungle, conquering as many obstacles and achieving as many triumphs as the main character in the movie.

Fitzcarraldo is a bankrupt entrepreneur at the turn of the century, who dreams of building an opera house in a rubber industry "boomtown" in the midst of the jungle. The rubber barons just laugh at him, placing bets on his chances for success and calling him a madman. In his electrifying performance as Fitzcarraldo, Klaus Kinski does exhibit some madness. But in this madness there lies a great genius and an intense will to succeed. Fitzcarraldo is a shrewd judge of humanity who sees people for what they are. He despises the rubber barons and their money, hating the way they exploit the Indians and their belief that money can buy anything and anyone.

In order to obtain his dream, Fitzcarraldo and his hired motley crew go into unchartered regions of the jungle to claim as much land as they can for producing rubber. From the money provided by his rubber plantation, Fitzcarraldo hopes to fund his own opera house. As the ship slowly ventures into the unknown, Herzog places the audience right up on the brig next to the captain. With every bend in the river, there is a feeling of expectation, excitement, but most of all, danger.

The film's cinematography is spectacular. One scene shows the quiet stillness of a sunset on a jungle river broken by an intruding steamship. Later, the tropical moon is depicted in all its brilliance as it breaks through the purple mist. The region filmed is just an untouched today as it was at the dawn of time. A true frontier on earth does exist in the space age of today.

In conquering this region, Fitzcarraldo is forced to drag his steamshisp from one river, up a steep hill and down into another river. To achieve this feat he must first befriend a ruthless headhunting tribe of Indians. Working side-by-side with these Indians is perhaps the greatest achievement of this "madman."

Herzog's film is an inspiration. Although it is a German movie, his message transcends the boundaries of language: without dreams mankind cannot survive.

Play Has 'Mass Appeal'

By BOB HERMAN
and STEVEN X. HELMETAG

"Mass Appeal," starring Milos O'Shea as Father Tim Farley and Adam Redfield as Mark Dolson, depicts a relationship shared between a secure parish priest and a young, idealistic, seminarian student.

The play begins with Farley addressing his congregation with his "dialogue sermon" format in his "on the road to becoming a priesthood series." Dolson calls out to ask Farley why women are not priests. Farley, who obviously is accustomed to much less threatening questions, chooses to try to ignore Dolson by replying with an inane answer rather than truthfully examining the question. This sets the tone for the play. After the initial meeting between Farley and the student, the hilarious comedy which is seen throughout the play begins.

It is learned that Dolson is assigned to work with Farley. The first area in which the priest works with Dolson is preparing sermons. The student's opening first remarks during his sermon exemplifies some of the true underlying humor of the play: "Jesus is not impressed with your mink hats, cashmere coats and blue hair . . . " Farley quickly trys to change Dolson telling him that it is better to please the people rather than disturb them.

Dolson's initial attempt to deliver a sermon fails when he becomes disenchanted with the people. The play's plot then becomes complicated when he is threatened with expulsion from the seminary for a possible link with two homosexual students.

At this point, the play depicts the close relationship shared by Farley and Dolson. Dolson needs the priest because he would still like to become a priest himself and Farley needs the student so that he can share some of his problems.

One might tend to think that in this type of play about the aforementioned relationship and life within the chruch, the humor would be tight and confined. But O'Shea and Redfield, who are the only two cast members, give masterful performances in their respective roles.

Mission Accomplished by Palin

By SCOTT MEYER

"The Missionary," starring and written by Michael Palin of Monty Python fame and produced by George Harrison, explores some interesting facets of the traditional British missionary. In a comical look at the profession, the film depicts Charles Fortescue, played by Palin, and his encounters with some bizarre characters.

The film opens with scenes of Fortescue in Africa teaching etiquette, Bible study and English to the natives. This sequence portrays a certain loneliness of a missionary on an assignment away from home. Fortescue is next seen dropping his African fertility objects down the gangplank of a ship. He is home in Victorian England, where he first encounters an aristocratic nymphomaniac named Lady Ames.

Fortescue returns to see his fiancee, a girl he hasn't seen in ten years (he proposed by mail). The girl has a proclaimed penchant for secretarial work; "I love filing," she says. She has visions of a bishopric for Fortescue; however, his superior, a bishop more interested in sports than in souls, has a different assignment in mind. Fortescue is assigned to open a mission to convert the natives of another foreign place, the red light district of London.

Needing money to run his mission, Fortescue must submit to the wishes of the wife of the richest man in England, Lady Ames, played convincingly by Maggie Smith. After opening his Mission for Fallen Women, Fortescue finds himself surrounded by harlots of all ages, shapes and sizes.

The final sequences of the film arouse the audience's awareness of the concepts of conversion, spiritual good and bad and the missionary.

"The Missionary" is a prime example of a good Python film. It has some of those same elements contained in other classic Python movies, "The Holy Grail" and "The Life of Brian." Specifically, those elements are a satirical look at tradition and their own special brand of silliness. For all types of moviegoers, this is an entertaining film.

Simply Synthesized Static

By MIKE NOONE

One of the more eccentric sides of new wave is known as electronic pop. The chance that many people have heard any of this music is slim, for it has little to offer. The only group with the same style that has achieved limited success is Soft Cell. But their hit song "Tainted Love" is a far cry from the sound of one of the original electronic pop innovators, Depeche Mode. Last year they had a hit in Europe called "New Life" which raised some eyebrows and brought the band recognition. Unfortunately, after losing their female member (as well as their dance rhythms), their new album "A Broken Frame" dashes all hope in the band's ability to create something with a little depth or identity. Although the music is a departure from the typical dance tunes, the new sound has virtually no redeeming qualities.

The band relies solely on synthesizers, ignoring the traditional instruments including lead guitars, bass guitars and, yes, even drums. The rhythm is supplied by a preprogrammed rhythm machine which, after the initial pattern is set, never fluctuates, making the songs monotonous. Not only does the rhythm stay the same in each individual song, but it seems to stay the same throughout all the songs. Each song begins with a specific note sequence played on a synthesizer. Then as the song progresses, more and more chords and notes are laid upon one another producing pure unadulterated noise.

Lately many groups, including big names like the Who, have employed synthesizers with the traditional instruments to create an interesting sound. Unfortunately, Depeche Mode and other groups like them, lose the essence of the music by depending solely upon synthesizers.

Despite impressive harmonies, the vocals by Depeche Mode sound like chanting monks. The lyrics do not offer much either; for example: "Someone will call/ Something will fall/ And smash on the floor/ Without reading the text/ Know what to do next." Also they sing: "Plans made in the nursery/ Can change the course of history." The song "See You" sounds like the Lovin' Spoonful put into the twenty-first century, but one can not help feel that one is in a dentist's office or an elevator.

Overall, this album is tedious and difficult to figure out. One does not know whether to dance to it or sit down and sulk to the sounds of its depressing sounds. It lacks the harsh biting sounds and messages of the early new wavers and rapidly slips ito the realm of nothingness.

Dining Out: The Bread Box

By LEO Da VINCI

The Bread Box, located at 865 Lancaster Ave. in Bryn Mawr, is a delightful cafe offering a variety of epicurean delights. Although it shares its building with a "George" machine and although the technical buzzings of the automatic teller keys can be heard inside, The Bread Box still retains a very European, rustic atmosphere. The huge glass windows allows the sun to beam in on the small room, creating a friendly, cozy and relaxed feeling.

As the name suggests, the place's specialty is bread. Many types of home-made breads are made daily and all are extremely good. My companion and I sampled the pain farmier. It was a light, whole wheat bread which was very hearty. Besides the bread, the place offers a wide variety of coffees, teas and other sumptuous beverages, such as cappucino, expresso, many varieties of herbal tea, hot chocolate and hot apple cider, all at very moderate prices.

Additionally, The Bread Box offers danishes and croissants to go along with one's beverage. They, too, are made daily and are quite delicious. If one wishes, they will heat them. We tried the chocolate croissants. They were not as hot as we would have liked, but they were light and filled with a sufficient amount of chocolate.

Besides being a "coffeehouse," The Bread Box also has a lunch counter which is open from 11:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Although the menu is small, what they do offer is appetizing and again, wonderfully fresh and tasty.

The main entrees are: "Sandwich Box Lunch," "Quiche Box Lunch" and "Salad Box Lunch," all priced at $3.59. All come with a choice of salad and bread. My companion had the sandwich box lunch. The egg salad sandwich was served on a delightful wheat bread and was a rather large portion. The other choices in the sandwich category are cheese, chicken salad, ham salad and tuna salad.

I sampled the leek quiche, which was somewhat disappointing. It had to be reheated in a microwave and lost its freshness and vitality. Despite that, it was still flavorful, yet not up to their standards. Other kinds of quiche available are mushroom, spinach, and lorraine.

With the advent of winter upon us, The Bread Box becomes an ideal place to stop for an inexpensive, soothing and warming refreshment or lunch. It is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Sunday, with brunch from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Watercats Looking to Win

By LAUREN SEAVER

While autumn signifies the end of competition for many teams, it is the threshold of competition for other Villanova athletes. Among such athletes are the men swimmers. For the past two-and-a-half months, these Villanovans have been diligently working out for a season that will commence in one week.

For the past 30 years, the Villanova swimmers have been coached by Ed Geisz. This year the team has a new addition to its coaching staff. Now in the graduate MBA program at Villanova, Daryl Linder has assumed the position of assistant coach. "He was my former captain last year and is doing a super job for our swimmers," said Coach Geisz. Although he has been coaching for twelve years without an assistant, the coach "feels very comfortable with him."

"According to Coach Geisz, the work outs for this season have been amended. Geared for high quality, this year's program is very progressive. "Last year there was more of a long distance base," commented Coach Geisz. Now we get right into the high quality work outs, and we think it will work." Though exhausted from these strenuous practices, the swimmers are in tip-top shape. A swimmer for 13 years, sophomore Dan "Whale" Nies said, "I'm working harder than I ever have in my life, and I'm in the best shape."

"This year we're working out the hardest that we ever have," commented senior co-captain Bruce Baltera. According to Geisz, the men are swimming about four miles daily in their three-hour work outs. "Ed and Daryl have been giving us really hard work outs," said senior co-captain Mike Phelon.

The swimmers are anticipating a great season. Last year this Division I team finished with an 8-6 season and placed second in the Big East Tournament. Both Phelon and Baltera anticipate a big improvement from last year's record. "In our dual meet season we hope for an 11-4 record or better," said Phelon.

In addition to finishing with an 11-4 season, Geisz wants to win the Big East Championship. "We're tired of second place," said the coach. "I think we have at least four who could win a championship in the Big East, including one relay."

Strong in every event, the swimmers comprise a very well balanced team. Among the nine teams in the Big East, Pitt, Syracuse and Villanova will be the top three contenders for the title.

In the regular season, the swimmers will compete against the same schools as last year but will drop Maryland and pick up Temple to the list. "We want to kill Temple," said the coach. "They must be destroyed. It is our number one prime dual meet. We owe them one because they beat us for the first time last year in eighteen years."

Georgetown. The rivalries of years past will highlight the swimming schedule this season.

While Phelon feels that "Our goal right now is to upset Yale and Syracuse," Coach Geisz adds Temple, "Since we practice here, when we go to other schools, we are much faster," said Baltera. He also feels that it is a definite disadvantage to other teams to swim at Villanova because the pool is so bad. As a result, "nobody wins in the Pit," said Phelon.

in which the Villanovans swim. In the newer pools, the water is much smoother. "Since we practice here, when we go to other schools, we are much faster," said Baltera. He also feels that it is a definite disadvantage to other teams to swim at Villanova because the pool is so bad. As a result, "nobody wins in the Pit," said Phelon.

The team has acquired several freshman additions this year. Along with freshmen Tim Regan, John Schafer and Bob Brobowski only four out of 14 meets at Villanova this year, the swimmers feel that it is an advantage to compete at home. Because the pool (nicknamed the "Pit") is 50 years old, it does not rate with the other pools are two All-American swimmers Pete Malony and John Gargola. Baltera is confident that these freshmen "Can fill the holes that were vacated last year."

Last year's returning talents are the foundation for these newcomers. Phelon feels that "because we are working out harder, we expect more and we know we can do really well." This optimism is shared by all the swimmers. Nies, who broke four freshman records and was last year's Most

Cats Bury Cibona

By TOM REUSCHE

Rollie Massimino unveiled his ew blend of speed, fitness and ower Monday night at the soldt Field House. The 1982-83 ildcats sank Cibona of Yugoslaa 94-64, as John Pinone and the st of Villanova's workhorses disvered there is ample support on e Cats' deep, deep bench.

Pinone provided 19 points, and wayne McClain sidespun his ique jumpers and added a wd-frenzying flying reverse n for 18 points.

The veterans' actions alone uld have subdued the Yugoslans, but the bench, once the e vertebrate in the Cats' spine, ved notice that it can be called on in the upcoming Big East rs.

The "Murder by Depth" squad, lanova's bench, contributed 37 nts and 30 rebounds. The play he freshman twin towers, 6-11 att Maker and seven-footer luable Swimmer, said "I'm exting to have a better season n I did last year." Delighted h his two co-captains, Coach isz said that "they are excellent petitors and give 110% every e." Sophomore Bill (Slammer) nkowski reflects the team's rect for their coach in saying that is the best coach in the coun-

Chuck Everson highlighted a team effort in which 15 of the 16 Cats scored.

When Maker entered the game at 12:25 of the first half, Cibona's 6-10 Andro Knego draped him like a blanket. The rugged freshman was not intimidated, however, and ripped the Yugoslavians for 12 points and a team high eight rebounds in 16 minutes of action.

Maker, despite his aggressiveness under the boards, admitted, "I was really nervous. But I got a little more relaxed as the game went on."

Just a half-minute after entering the game, Everson, who wears "Hi-C" on the back of his warm up jersey, battled two of Cibona's trees for a rebound and canned it for two points. In ten minutes, "Hi-C" garnered eight points and seven rebounds.

"Both of them did a good job," said Pinone of the twin towers. "He (Maker) gave me a breather. He'll get better as he learns a little more and gets more confidence. He can come in for me — no problem."

Despite his two for seven shooting, heralded newcomer Harold Pressley was impressive with his artful passing and seven rebounds.

"At one pont in the first half, I thought nothing would drop," said the soft-spoken freshman. "I can shoot, but if I could either pass or shoot, I'd take the pass option."

Rajko Gospodnetic netted 18 points with his long range shots to lead Cibona, which actually shot better than Villanova, 42.9 percent to 41.2 percent. The difference on the boards, however, reflected in the score.

Spikers Compete

By BOB HELLER

Last weekend, Villanova's volleyball squad traveled to Providence, R.I., to participate in their first Big East Volleyball Tournament. The Cats were seeded fourth out of eight teams, with Pittsburgh, Georgetown and Providence being the only three teams with better seeds.

The tournament kicked off on Friday afternoon. Villanova's spikers got off to a great start, getting their first win over Syracuse with scores of 10-15, 15-7 and 15-8. The opening rounds were best two of three games. The Cats' next game was against Seton Hall on Saturday morning.

In the opening game of the match, the Seton Hall squad beat the Cats, 15-12. The Cats rebounded,, however, taking the next two games by 15-10 and 15-2.

The Cats then took on the top-seeded Pittsburgh Panthers later that afternoon.

The Panthers gave the Wildcats plenty of trouble, winning the match in two straight games, 15-3 and 15-0. This was the Cats' first loss, but by virtue of their victories over Syracuse and Seton Hall they advanced to the semi-final round on Saturday.

The semi-final round was best three out of five games. The Cats had to face a tough Georgetown team. Georgetown defeated the Cats, 15-7, in the opening game of the match. The Cats improved slightly in the second game but still lost, 15-12. Georgetown dominated the third and final game of the match, beating the Cats by 15-8. This gave Georgetown a 3-0 sweep over the Wildcats and a spot in the finals.

V.U. Sports View

By JOE MARUSAK

Now that most of the fall sports have come to a close, let's take a look back at some of this season's outstanding performers:

Mike Layfield, Men's Soccer: Things looked bad for the Cats when Brian Barr suffered an injury early on. But Layfield, a senior and a Bud Athlete of the Week, picked up the slack and wound up leading the team in scoring with 27 points.

Cathy Ford and Sue Onnembo, Women's Soccer: The goal scorer and the goalie directed VU to a fine 10-3 record. Ford, only a freshman, was the team's top scorer with 19 goals and three assists. Onnembo made 150 saves over the course of the fall session. She gave up only 23 goals.

Jan Yerkes, Women's Cross Country: Second in the Big East. Best in the Big Five. And most importantly, fourth in the NCAA Regionals — District 2. That qualifies her for the nationals along with Mary Ellen McGowan. And remember, she's only in her first year of collegiate competition.

Brian O'Keeffe, Anthony O'Reilly and Marcus O'Sullivan, Men's Cross Country: How can you mention one without talking about the others? The Irish Trio took the top three spots in the Big Five Championships, and each placed in the top 15 at the Big East Cross Country Championships. O'Keeffe qualified for the nationals last weekend by finishing in the top ten at the IC4As/NCAA Regionals.

Amy Hutchison and Sue Lora, Women's Field Hockey: They are both from New Jersey. They are both sophomores. And they both like to score goals. Hutchinson, who scored nine goals and had six assists, was recently named to the Mitchel & Ness Eastern Region team. Her counterpart, Lora, missed a school record for most goals in a season by just one score. She had 15 tallies.

The whole team, Women's Tennis: Everybody contributed to what was one of the best years for tennis at Villanova. The squad went 17-3 despite injuries to both of the Matkiwsky sisters. Team member Carol Harrison set a school record for most wins in a career.

Fan interest in the basketball team has shot up this year. Forget finding a seat for Field House games. Tickets have been sold out since mid-October. And finding them for Palestra contests is almost as difficult. Remember a year ago, when you could buy tickets the day of the game? . . . Last year the basketball club had just under 400 members. This year, according to Vice-President Paul Romanelli, the number has risen to over 800. "Membership (in the club) increases as the team's performance gets better," said Romanelli.

Many of these fans are focusing their attention on senior John Pinone. Little wonder, after last year's efforts. Pinone is one of 11 players named to the prestigious Street & Smith's pre-season All-America team.

The women's volleyball team tied for third with Providence College at last weekend's Big East Tournament. The Wildcats beat Syracuse and Seton Hall, but lost to Pitt and Georgetown — two of the East's best teams.

Harriers Qualify for Nationals

O'Keeffe Qualifies for NCAA's

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's cross country team competed in the IC4A and NCAA District regional championships on Nov. 13 at Lehigh.

The team finished 5th in the NCAA District II competition with 154 points and 6th in the IC4A with 216 points.

Brian O'Keeffe performed outstandingly as he finished 8th overall, good enough for fourth place in the districts. O'Keeffe began with a reasonable pace, hitting the first mile mark in 4:44. He was about 20th at this point. Building up speed as he pressed on, O'Keeffe eventually reached home in the eighth spot, clocking in with a 30:36 for the 6.2 mile course.

Coach Jack Pyrah stated, "O'Keeffe had been working very hard for this race and he raced to his best performance ever in cross country."

Marcus O'Sullivan, running just behind O'Keeffe, was bothered by a side stitch which gave him such severe pains that he had to stop to treat it. This cost him about one minute, dropping him back to about 100th place. Shortly thereafter he returned strongly and began passing runners ahead of him. O'Sullivan finished in 51st place overall (49th in IC4A) and 35th in District II.

Anthony O'Reilly took 49th in a time of 31:33. Pyrah remarked, "Tony wasn't feeling well from the start and didn't feel too well during the race."

After finally getting over all his chest ailments, John Keyworth was able to run one of his best races of the season; he finished 45th overall in a time of 31:31.

Next came Dermot Anderson, who wound up in 71st place, followed by Ken Lucks in 97th place, while J.J. Clarke brought up the rear in 112th. Pyrah stated, "Everybody on the team set personal records for the course."

Despite that fact, Villanova did not qualify for the NCAA's as a team. Pyrah expressed his happiness, however, that the team was able to send at least one runner to the Nationals in Bloomington, In. on Nov. 22.

Pyrah also said, "District II of the NCAA is composed of very tough teams, such as Bucknell, Iona, and Fairleigh Dickenson. All of these teams recruit basically long distance runners, which is why they have powerful cross country teams. Our team is composed basically of half-milers and milers," the coach added.

Summing up the cross season, Coach Charles Jenkins felt that overall, the season had gone well. The Wildcats placed second in the Big East meet and won the Big Five. As Jenkins stated, "We are always shooting for number one, and no matter what, we will continue to do so."

Women Qualify Two

By BEVERLY REILLY

In the NCAA Regional Cross Country Championships, last Saturday, two women harriers earned a ticket to the National Meet in Bloomington, Ind.

Newcomer Jan Yerkes ran a competitive race to take fourth place and to qualify for Nationals.

Only seconds later, MaryEllen McGowan crossed the finish line to place fifth and to accompany Yerkes to Nationals this weekend. McGowan has exhibited some fine performances this season; however, this race was a true indication of the sophomore's tremendous amount of strength and determination.

McGowan remarked, "I really felt good from the start of the race. I don't know what it was, but didn't feel tired at all. I was determined to place well."

For the first time in NCAA Division I competition, the women's team did very well. Villanova took third place with 76 points. However, only the top two teams qualified, Penn State with 33 and Princeton with 70.

Freshmen, Vicky Brown, Nan Fleming and Joanne Kehs scored by placing 17th, 23rd and 27th respectively. While teammates Beverly Reilly and EvaMarie Bardi followed by taking 29th and 31st places.

Although the team missed qualifying by six points, their team effort should be commended.

Icecats Outskate Two Foes

By TOM KOLON

The Villanova hockey team continued to roll over its opponents with victories over West Chester State on Sunday and Delaware County Community College on Monday night.

On Sunday afternoon, the Icecats upped their undefeated record in the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference to 2-0-1 with their second win over West Chester, 6-4. The team captured an early two goal lead on tallies by Tim Curran and Ken Downey. With a minute left in the first period, West Chester closed the gap to just one goal on a rebound shot past goalie Fred Christie.

In the second period, Curran added his second of the afternoon, which would eventually become the game winner assisted by Frank Segreto and Downey. Jim Hageney increased the lead to three goals entering the final period with a pass from rookies Mike Brown and Bob Giordano.

Third period action found Villanova closing the door on the West Chester Golden Rams. After West Chester dumped in their second goal of the day, Brown added a tally of his own, helped by the services of Brian Emmerich and Giordano. Jim Ragold flipped another past the opposing goalie to finish off Villanova's scoring.

Head Coach Skip Probst was extremely pleased with the team's showing, especially that of the rookies. He felt that "the new men are really improving and they are exhibiting increasing progress with each game." Probst was impressed with the tough play of the young line of Hageney, Brown and Giordano, which had a hand in three of the six goals.

Equally laudable was the exhibition that Christie gave in the nets. In his first league start, he turned away 15 West Chester shots and came up with some clutch saves, giving Don Clarke a much-needed rest. Villanova's explosive offense outshot the Golden Rams, 35-17.

Monday night the rookies were able to demonstrate their skills once again in a 7-1 rout of Delaware Community College. The Icecat barrage of goals featured shots by newcomers Giordano, Jamie Purpuro, Bob Strannick and Bill Davis as well as from regulars Segreto, Hageney and Jeff Beck. Christie in goal, turned in another fine performance with 26 saves. Overall it was another impressive win for Villanova.

Former Wildcat Football Star Puts Defensive Talent on Hold

By SUSANNE REGAN

Finally, after two months of relative inactivity, the National Football League is back in business.

And now, finally, fans of the dormant Villanova football program will get to see one of their very own in action.

Griggs spent the first three years of his college football career playing linebacker on the Cat's defense. When Villanova dropped its football program, Griggs was recruited to finish his career for the Ohio State Buckeyes. His move to this prestigious Big Ten football program capped off his spectacular final season at Villanova. Playing in 11 games that year, Griggs led the team in total tackles with 168. Broken down, he had 79first hits and 89 assists. Griggs was also responsible for two interceptions, one of which he took into the end zone for a Villanova score.

The 6-3, 220-pound Griggs was a conspicuous figure on campus who almost always wore a part of his Mickey Mouse clothing collection and was most often accompanied by fellow linebacker and sidekick, T.J. Fitzpatrick.

Football fans knew him not only by his reputation on the field but also as one of the more colorful football personalities. When Villanova dropped the football program Griggs was featured on a local newscast where he explained his disappointment at leaving Villanova after three years.

Anthony Griggs

However, Griggs explained that once he moved to Ohio State he easily adapted, although he found it to be a big transition. He felt Villanova to be the more conservative and academically-inclined university. Ohio State, he noted, offered more to do on campus. The linebacker found the move to be a wise choice—leaving Villanova to play for the Buckeyes — witnessed by his being drafted by the Eagles.

His career with the Eagles was just barely underway when the strike interrupted his chance to prove himself.

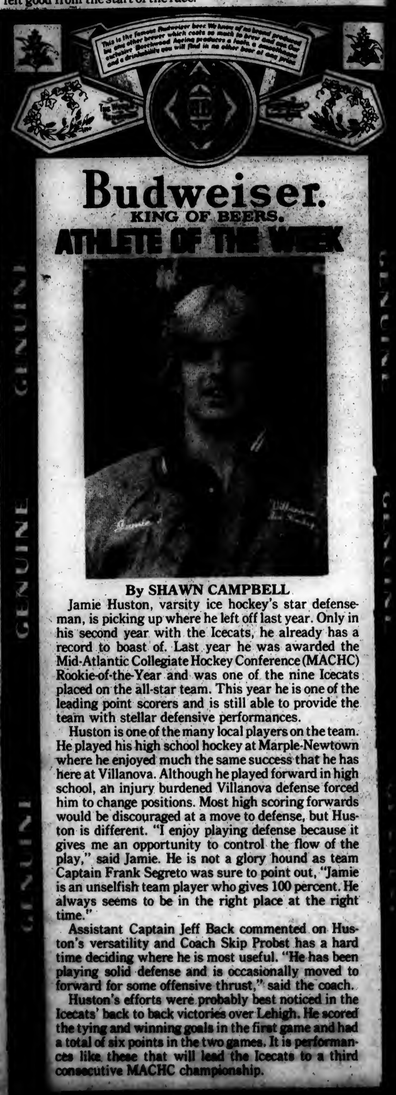
Although he believes that the strike was primarily beneficial to rookies and first-year players, Griggs does find it frustrating to have achieved the goal of being picked and then having to sit out for such an extended period.

He also believes that once the season gets underway again, the exuberance will be as great as ever. And as for the fans, he doesn't think there will be anything lost as far as interest goes.

Concerning that always controversial subject of football at Villanova, Griggs wholeheartedly agrees with the majority of students who, when surveyed a couple of weeks back, favored the program's return. He feels that the present situation here is as much a loss as the N.F.L. strike was.

Now that the stadiums will once again open their doors to football, Griggs will temporarily stop teaching. He's been doing that in New Jersey for some weeks now.

Although he is looking forward to playing again, Anthony Griggs said that football is not the driving force in his life. "I never chose to be a professional player; they chose me."



By SHAWN CAMPBELL

Jamie Huston, varsity ice hockey's star defenseman, is picking up where he left off last year. Only in his second year with the Icecats, he already has a record to boast of. Last year he was awarded the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference (MACHC) Rookie-of-the-Year and was one of the nine Icecats placed on the all-star team. This year he is one of the leading point scorers and is still able to provide the team with stellar defensive performances.

Huston is one of the many local players on the team. He played his high school hockey at Marple-Newtown where he enjoyed much the same success that he has here at Villanova. Although he played forward in high school, an injury burdened Villanova defense forced him to change positions. Most high scoring forwards would be discouraged at a move to defense, but Huston is different. "I enjoy playing defense because it gives me an opportunity to control the flow of the play," said Jamie. He is not a glory hound as team Captain Frank Segreto was sure to point out, "Jamie is an unselfish team player who gives 100 percent. He always seems to be in the right place at the right time."

Assistant Captain Jeff Back commented on Huston's versatility and Coach Skip Probst has a hard time deciding where he is most useful. "He has been playing solid defense and is occasionally moved to forward for some offensive thrust," said the coach.

Huston's efforts were probably best noticed in the Icecats' back to back victories over Lehigh. He scored the tying and winning goals in the first game and had a total of six points in the two games. It is performances like these that will lead the Icecats to a third consecutive MACHC championship.

Field House Plans In Progress

By JAMES DeLORENZO

Plans for the proposed multi-purpose athletic facility, and present Field House renovation project, are, according to Rev. George P. Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president, "in the preliminary stage and on schedule. We would like to start construction as soon as possible, sometime in March or April if all goes well."

Rev. George Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the President.

"A feasability study has been done, but no actual construction drawing has been completed," Burnell said. "In October, the architects (Daniel Tully Associates) made a presentation to the Board of Trustees, who approved of the general scope of the project. The Board authorized the University building committee to enter into an agreement to proceed with the project."

Burnell estimates that the overall cost for the entire project will be $9.5 million; $1.2 million for the renovation of the present Field House, and approximately $8.3 million for the construction of the new facility. Money for this project has been raised through a recent $25 million University bond issue, "which will be repaid, hopefully, through the next phase of the Covenant Campaign," Burnell added.

"The new facility will be attached to the existing pool in the present Field House," explained Director of Athletics Dr. Ted Aceto. "The existing pool area will then become new men's and women's locker rooms. A new natatorium (pool facility) will be built, along with the main arena."

The site of the new facility will be on the former baseball field behind the Field House. A new baseball field is under construction behind St. Mary's Hall. The main area of the building will consist of five multi-purpose courts, "for tennis, basketball, and volleyball," said Aceto. Encircling this area will be a 200-meter, six-lane track.

Intercollegiate basketball games will be accommodated in the main arena on a portable floor, similiar to the one used at Philadelphia's Spectrum. "Bleacher seats will be fixed on the upper level; from the floor to the mezzanine will be retractable chair seats, and under the mezzanine, a bank of folding bleachers," Burnell explained. Current plans are for a 7,000-person seating capacity which, Burnell said, "could possibly be expanded by a couple thousand."

"The entire building project will be done in two phases, new construction and the rehabilitation of the present facility," said Burnell. "It will take 14 months from ground-breaking to the completion of the new facility, and six months to complete the renovations. The new construction will need to be completed first." In all, Burnell added, "it's a two-year project."

The plans for this project will be presented to the Radnor Township Zoning Board on Dec. 16. "Some zoning problems are anticipated," said Burnell. "The possible violations we are aware of include the township's rule which required all buildings be a certain distance from the street, and the zero water run-off ordinance may present problems. Another problem is that the township's 160-square foot building restriction is an impossibility. The proposed building is a couple times larger than that," Burnell explained, "so we need to get a variance there. As

Vandalism Costs Students

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Vandalism, occuring both on-campus and off, is costing students money as well as good relationships with the administration and community, according to Student Body President Paul Tufano.

Vandalism by students during the final phase of construction at the water drainage site on the south campus will cost the University an additional $3,000. "Smoothing out the freshly laid cement had to be done three times because students came by and embedded obscenities in the wet cement," said Tufano.

"To make matters worse, there was a security guard there to make sure this would not happen," said Tufano. "The first time, the student was caught after the damage was done. The next time, the group of students outnumbered the guard."

"Acts like this are a great detriment to the student body," said Tufano. "The student government and student administration went to Prisident Driscoll about the drainage problem to help the students. The administration helped us and did for our benefit. How does it look now?" questioned Tufano. "The administration is surprised and upset about the whole situation."

The students are paying for the initial $6,500 and the extra expense through tuition. In working with private contractors, the extra money had to be supplied for the materials and extra labor.

"Students are also setting us back in Public Relations with the community because of vandalism to houses," added Tufano.

For years, residents on Curwen Road have complained about stolen plants and porch furniture and littering on the lawns. It was reported that a mail box had been torn out of the ground and a 'very expensive' mailbox was extensively damaged.

"The weekend of Nov. 13 and 14 was the thing that topped it off," said Tufano. "We got a report from a resident that a stop sign was stolen from the intersection of Ithan Road and Curwen Road. What really upset the residents the most was not only that it was an act of vandalism, but that it is a dangerous intersection and involves the safety of many people," said Tufano.

The neighbors on Curwen Road, the road used most during the week by students traveling between Rosemont and Villanova, have been having problems in prior years, too.

"We have a sensitive relationship with neighbors, and lines of

Driscoll Announces Law and Morality Institute

By LINDA BOND

President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., has announced the creation of a scholarly institute devoted to the study of law and morality at Villanova University.

J. Willard O'Brien, Dean of Villanova's Law School, will resign from his present position and assume the responsibilities of director of the new institute on Aug. 1, 1983.

The purpose of the institute is to call public attention to the need for establishing an appropriate balance between America's legal system and the basic moral principles of this country's Judeo-Christian tradition.

The scholastic enterprise will be known as the Connelly Institute on Law and Morality. It has been funded by the Connelly Foundation of Philadelphia.

O'Brien intends to publish articles which will buttress the view that every person's rights to life and liberty are God-given, and cannot be taken away by another individual or committee because of handicap, race, sex, religion, or age.

The Villanova administrator also plans a publication that will help the public appreciate the close relationship that exists between a judge's personal view of right and wrong and the way in which the judge decides who wins the cases before him or her.

O'Brien hopes to prepare teaching materials dealing with the connection between law and morality.

In comments printed by the law school's newspaper, The Docket, O'Brien said, "We cannot rely upon the Constitution as the ultimate safeguard of our rights. The Constitution when written savaged an entire race, the blacks, and ignored another, women."

The Institute seeks an audience in the average lay person and practitioner who is unaware of the underlying moral foundations of the legal system.

O'Brien hopes the Institute "will, on the national level, reflect the Law School's deep concern in the field of law and morality."

Before coming to Villanova, O'Brien practiced law with the Wall Street firm of Cahill, Gorden, Reindel and Ohl.

Vita Program

The Internal Revenue Service is seeking members of civic, fraternal, church or social organizations to participate in its Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program.

The purpose of the VITA program is to provide free assistance to low-income, elderly and non-English speaking taxpayers who cannot afford professional help in preparing their 1982 income tax forms.

Volunteers will be given free instructions by the IRS in the preparation of personal income tax forms. The Volunteers will then set up "sites" where members of their organizations or community can come for help.

The instruction lasts three days and will be provided in various Eastern Pennsylvania cities during the months of December and January. A volunteer does not need any special background in math, accounting or law. Individuals participating in VITA are not considered professional tax preparers and are not held legally responsible for the return.

Persons or organizations interested in participating in this community service should contact Lyndel Brown by calling toll-free, 1-800-464-4000, extension 0512. In Philadelphia, the number is 597-0512.

Aerobics

The Dance Club will sponsor aerobics once again next semester. Pre-registration will be the week after Thanksgiving break. Cost is $40 for non-members, $35 for members and $5 membership fee. Watch for more details.

S.N.A.P.

Attention nursing students: The Student Nurses' Association of Pennsylvania is selling long-sleeved t-shirts for $10. The pocket says "College of Nursing" and "Villanova" is printed on the sleeve. Order from any S.N.A.P. or in 105 St. Rita's.

Rush Applications

Dec. 15 is the deadline for rush applications and fees. Rush applications may be picked up and dropped off at the Student Activities office on the second floor of Dougherty. A mandatory meeting for all women interested in rush will be held on Jan. 20.

R.A. Selections

Interested in becoming a Resident Assistant? Come to one of the following meetings to find out more: Monday, Dec. 6 at 6:30 p.m. in Simpson Lounge, West Area; Tuesday, Dec. 7 at 8 p.m. in Sheehan Lounge, East Area; Thursday, Dec. 9 at 6:30 p.m. in second floor lounge, Stanford, West Area.

Basketball Club

There will be an important meeting Tuesday, Dec. 7 at 12:45 p.m. in the Field House. Will discuss tickets, roadtrips and other upcoming events.

Palestra ticket distribution will be held Friday, Monday and Tuesday, December 3, 6 and 7, from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the Field House. After Tuesday, tickets may be picked up in the Field House ticket office. Any tickets, Field House and Palestra, not picked up by Tuesday, Dec. 9, will be sold. Don't forget to bring your receipt or V.U. ID.

Trip to Italy

A reminder to those people who are intending to go to Italy over the Spring semester vacation that the $100 deposit is due by Dec. 20.

The price of $911 includes round-trip airfare; three nights and four days in Florence; two nights and two days in Venice; city tours of Rome and Florence; privately designed tours of the Vatican Galleries, the Uffizi Galleries, and San Marco; taxes; transfers throughout Italy; and breakfast and dinner.

The trip is being jointly conducted by Dr. Sterling Delano, English department and Dr. George Radan, art and art history department. Contact Dr. Delano at 645-4655 for further information, or leave word in Vasey Hall.

Christmas Tree Lighting

You and your family are cordially invited to join the Villanova community in celebrating the holiday season at the Seventh Annual Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony. The program will include: carols, scripture readings, the lighting of the tree and various Christmas greetings. Immediately following, there will be a reception in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Rosary

The Rosary is prayed at 7 p.m. in Corr Hall chapel Monday through Thursday. This is in fulfillment to our Lady of Fatima's request of the three children to whom she appeared six times in 1917. She said that "only she can bring peace."

Philosophy Club

The Philosophy Club will meet on Thursday, Dec. 9 at 4:15 p.m. in the Honors Seminar Room on the fourth floor of Falvey Library.

The discussion will be on Socrates' speech on love from Plato's symposium. Handouts are on the philosophy dept. bulletin board.

Operation Identification

All residents are encouraged to take advantage of this security program. Engravers for personal items are available through the Resident Student Association. Check with your Hall Council Representatives for details. Remember — Christmas break is around the corner — be safe!

Communication Arts Society

Robin Garrison, "Action News" reporter of WPVI-TV, will speak at the Communications Arts Society meeting at 7:30 p.m. on Dec. 9 in the Connelly Center. All are welcome and encouraged to attend.

Student Chairperson

The Dean of Students Office is pleased to announce the appointment of Ms. Jennifer-Jane Cayer to the position of Student Chairperson for the 1982 Non-Student Orientation Program. Ms. Cayer may be contacted at the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall, ext. 9090.

Christmas Drive

The Social Action Office will accept all donations of money, food and clothing in their annual Christmas Drive. Every year the office answers requests from the agencies and organizations at which its students do volunteer work. This year all food and clothing will be shared with a group in inner-city Philadelphia. The food and clothing will enable families to pay their rent and utilities while depending on donations of food and clothing. All money collected will go to the state hospital patients who have no source of income. All money (any amount), food (non-perishable) and clothing (clean) can be donated at the Social Action Office, 121 Tolentine.

Readers Needed

We have a golden opportunity for volunteering right here on Villanova's campus. Readers are needed to help a blind teacher. This volunteering opportunity would require time to read material and would be done here at Villanova. A few friends could get together and share the time. If you are interested, call Sr. Joy or Mrs. Hansen at the Social Action Office, 645-4075 or stop in 121 Tolentine.

Attn: Jewish Students

Celebrate Hannukah with Jewish students at Harcum Jr. College and St. Joseph's University! The party will be at the Harcum Jr. College Counseling Center on Dec. 9 at 7:30 p.m. There will be music, home-made latkas, Hannuka menorahs, candles and gelt. The price of admission is one gift for either a male or a female, which is no more than $5. Come celebrate the holiday and meet new people! Please call Rabbi Susan Abramson at 649-7800, to let us know you are coming, by Dec. 6. We hope to see you there!

Wildcat Running Club

The Wildcat Running Club will meet this Wednesday, Dec. 8 at 6:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center to discuss developments on the road race, along with business as usual. New members are welcome.

A Night of Music and Comedy

Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Villanova presents a Musical Benefit on Thursday, Dec. 9 from 8 to 11 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Nuclear Power Debate

Tired? A bit run down from Christmas shopping and preparing for finals? Why not get re-charged on Wednesday, Dec. 8 at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center? That night, the Pennsylvania Life Fast Action Precautionary Task Force is presenting an electrifying debate on nuclear power.

The pro side will feature Larry Eckenrode, energy coordinator for the Philadelphia Electric Co. Representing the anti-nuclear side will be Judy Boyle, anti-nuclear power activist, and Dr. Joseph Gallagher, professor of religious studies.

Spring Semester Trips

As you know, the Graduate School office and the Graduate Student Council have for several years sponsored trips during the mid-term break during the spring semester. Some of the most successful have been to Bermuda and Hawaii.

This year we have three choices:

(1) BERMUDA — Monday, Feb. 28 to Friday, March 4 — $429 + $40 Tax & Services

(2) CANCUN — Sunday, Feb. 27 to Sunday, March 6 — $399 + 15 percent Tax & Services

(3) HAWAII — Saturday, Feb. 26 to Sunday, March 6 — $645 + 15 percent Tax & Services

The cost includes round-trip airfare from Philadelphia International Airport, transfers, baggage handling and gratuities, and accommodations. The Bermuda price also includes full breakfast, tea and dinner each day and all gratuities to hotel personnel, including the dining room.

If interested please get in touch with the Graduate Office (Extension 7090). There is a deadline of Dec. 17 for a $100 deposit.

Bon Voyage.

Florida/Bahamas

If you were able to give a successful sales pitch to your parents, take out a loan from Bryn Mawr Savings, or dip into next year's tuition till; come down and put a $50.00 deposit on a spring break Florida or Bahamas trip. Deposits are due December 21 in the Connelly Center Ticket Office. Contact the Union for more details.

Political Science Conference

There will be an informational meeting on Thursday, Dec. 9 at 12:45 p.m. in the political science conference room (located next to the political science office) for anyone interested in participating in the National United Nations Conference. A sign-up sheet also will be located on the bulletin board outside the office. All are welcome.

Attn: A.P.D. Brothers

There will be a meeting of the Alpha Pi Delta fraternity on Monday, Dec. 6 at 8 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr room. Bring money for fraternity mugs. All brothers must attend.

Administrative Coordinator

The Dean of Students Office is now accepting applications for the position of Administrative Coordinator for the 1983 Orientation program. Applications and position announcements, describing requirements and responsibilities are available in the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall. FILING DEADLINE: Monday, Dec. 13, 5 p.m.

Wildcat Investment Club

Our last meeting of this semester will be held on Dec. 10 at 8 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The speaker will be our adviser, Steve Glaser, from Drexel Burnham Lambert. A schedule for next semester's meetings will be distributed at this time.

"We will be adding a new ceiling to diminish the building's heat loss, and also will upgrade the present locker rooms." According to Aceto, "The Butler annex will become a squash, racquetball, and handball facility. In the Field House, the present basketball court will remain the same, and we will be adding new office space in the area presently used as the lobby."

"Fifty years ago, the present Field House was the epitome in design," said Burnell. "But in 1932, the total enrollment was only about 900 students. We've grown ten times over since, but there has been no significant increase of indoor athletic facilities. The need is overwhelming."

The plan for an intramural facility is itself ten years old. "In 1972, a proposal was made that an intramural facility was an urgent need," Burnell explained. "The University engaged Daniel Tully Associates to do a study, which was then presented to the University Senate. The Senate voted that it (the facility) wasn't the primary need at that time; it voted first priority to a University center. The Board of Trustees agreed with that recommendation, which resulted in the construction of the Connelly Center," Aceto added, "They were talking about a strictly intramural facility, which would have been much smaller and wouldn't have included varsity sports."

"It has continued to be included on the university's annual priori-

"Tully Associates was again engaged as the architects for the project. Then, based on the committee's report, Tully presented us with a design," Burnell said.

The new plan was not the same as the one submitted ten years ago, "for the scope has enlarged. This will be a much larger facility," said Burnell.

Among the facilities Tully Associates has designed are the Georgetown, Boston College and Dickenson College intramural complexes. They are currently engaged as consultants in the construction of the National Basketball Arena in Ireland and another facility at Bryn Mawr College.

As yet, no formal name has been designated for the new building, "but if a donor was to come along with $9 million," Burnell said, "we would consider naming the building for him."

communication must be opened for more success," said Tufano. Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, has asked Tufano to organize a peace settlement.

To educate the neighbors and the student body is Tufano's first solution. He sent a letter to the Curwen Road residents with an apology and an "invitation to further discuss the concerns of the residents on Curwen Road."

The Villa... sponsored its ... semester on how ... ladelphia Distric... Rendell as the ... debate topic was ... fense in the U.S. ... discussion of the recent ... verdict.

The resolution read, "This house believes that 'guilty but mentally ill' is a more appropriate verdict than 'innocent by reason of insanity'."

...Drawing on his 16 years of experience in the judicial system, Rendell said he feels juries rely on intuitive judgment and not medical and psychiatric testimony to render verdicts that often have little basis in scientific theory.

He went on to comment that the term "insanity" was psychologically indefinable. Insanity is a legal concept lay juries have trouble in understanding, said Rendell.

"All crimes of violence are the product of some form of emotional or mental disorder and its basically impossible to draw the line," stated the attorney. "Because it's so impossible it becomes unfair and unworkable so that the insanity defense ought to be gotten rid of lock, stock and barrel."

An additional problem with the insanity defense is the "burden of proof," according to Rendell, who said that when the Hinckley jurors were questioned after the trial, they claimed no knowledge as to whether Hinckley was sane or insane. One psychiatrist was off-set by another psychiatrist. The prosecution had the burden of proof and the prosecution did not confirm in the juror's minds that Hinckley was indeed sane. The government didn't meet their burden of proof, he said.

...Rendell also stated that when questioned after the trial, the jury said that had the burden of proof of insanity been on the defense, the verdict would have been guilty.

The burden of proof, said Rendell, is an arbitrary definition of verification responsibility.

He also said the insanity defense was, in his judgment, a "defense of the rich."

The district attorney stated, "There's no constitutional bar to removing the insanity defense; there's no practical reason for keeping it. It is my strong belief that the medical condition of a criminal defendant should not be a part of the guilt-finding process. It should be and has a very appropriate place in the dispositional part of our criminal justice system.

"The basic theory is you are responsible for your acts. That theory gets to the very heart of what the goals of our criminal justice system are . . . Our criminal justice system's goals should not be geared solely through the looking glass of what's right or wrong for the offender, it should be balanced by what's right or wrong for society," asserted Rendell. "Justice, not vengeance, belongs to the victim as well as the offender."

The "guilty-but-mentally-ill" legislation does not seek to eliminate the insanity defense, but to offer a fourth possible verdict: not guilty, guilty, not guilty by reason of insanity, or guilty but mentally ill. Rendell feels the insanity defense should be completely eliminated.

The speaker for the conservative party of the Political Union, Mark Vasoli, agreed with the guest.

The speaker for the moderate party, Michelle Testen, did not support the resolution. Testen explained, "While reform is certainly called for, the reform proposed by the resolution would dangerously change the definition of a crime and the definition of defense as we know it." She felt some level of mental culpability should be proved by the prosecution before an individual can be subjected to criminal punishment. Testen also felt the burden of proof should be shifted to the defendant.

The speaker for the liberal party, Mathew Korten, did not support the resolution. He stated, "This verdict is too simplistic and caters to individuals who have difficulty in conceptualizing aberrant forms of thought and behavior."

The resolution passed by a vote of 18-9-0.

Rendell received his B.A. from the University of Pennsylvania and his law degree from Villanova University.

New Editors Announced

In an election held Nov. 19, Leonard J. La Barth was voted new editor-in-chief of the Villanovan for the coming year. He succeeds Gerald Arth.

Burger Supreme Court Analyzed

By ALEXANDRA MUSCHYNKA

Walter F. Murphy, author of The Vicar of Christ and McCormick professor of jurisprudence at Princeton University lectured on the Supreme Court, referred to as "The Burger Court," on Thursday, Nov. 18.

Murphy, comparing the Burger Court to the Warren Court, stated that the Supreme Court since 1969 has not been the cornerstone of intellectual and societal leadership in imposing unyielding uniform decisions. Rather, the Burger Court is composed of distinct groups: Libertarians, Center, Forces of Peace and the Random Variable, he said.

Justices Brennan and Marshall (Libertarians from the Warren Court) expand the court to meet the needs imposed by new problems. Murphy referred to Justices Powell, Blackmun and White (Center) as common law judges who most closely resemble former Justice Potter Stewart by not strictly applying general rules, but deciding each case independently upon its merits. Chief Justice Burger and Justice Rehnquist and O'Connor (the Conservative Forces of Peace) tend to follow precedence in their decisions and Justice Stevens (the Random Variable) appears to be in the Center although leaning toward the Libertarians.

In general, Murphy referred to the Burger Court as a "waffling court" with "no clear line of march." It moves somewhat off-center as opposed to the Warren Court which was a "forward moving" court as was apparent in decisions which increased civil liberties and decreased government control.

Murphy mentioned the difficulty in categorizing the newest, youngest, and only female Supreme Court justice, Sandra Day O'Connor, as she is still in the "freshmen syndrome."

The Burger Court has moved beyond the Warren Court in some areas, he said. Murphy cited issues such as rights of women, first amendment rights of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, and the public's rights in observing criminal trials.

Murphy reiterated that the Supreme Court is an aging court. Five of the nine members are over 70-years-old. With age as a factor of consideration, the next decade is viewed by Murphy as a year of many changes in the Supreme Court.

Murphy completed his undergraduate and graduate studies at the University of Notre Dame and George Washington University, and received his Ph.D. from University of Chicago. Among other awards he received the Chicago Foundation Literature Award for The Vicar of Christ and the Fulbright Award. Other works include Congress and the Court, Elements of Judicial Strategy and Wiretapping on Trial. He has lectured extensively both in the United States and abroad, and is currently a member of the Supreme Court of New Jersey Advisory Committee on Judicial Conduct.

Foreign Students Increase

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The largest number of foreign students in the U.S. was recorded in the 1982 academic year, according to a report released by the Institute of International Education (IIE), the largest U.S. education exchange agency.

According to the annual survey's results, 326,299 international students were enrolled on 2,454 American campuses last year, a six percent increase over 1981. Foreign students made up 2.6 percent of total U.S. enrollment in higher education.

Villanova has about 150 international students enrolled in undergraduate and graduate programs this year according to the International Student Advisory office.

Iranian students made up the highest number of students — 11 percent at 35,860. The total is a decline of 16,010 from 1980.

Iran was followed by Taiwan, Nigeria, Canada, Japan, and Hong Kong as homelands of the largest groups of foreign students.

The survey reports that 15 percent of the foreign students indicated that U.S. sources were their primary financial support in 1982. This was a decline of 13 percent from five years ago. Only two percent cited the U.S. government as provider of their major funding, indicating that student financial aid is getting harder to attain, especially for foreign students.

According to Alma Risech, director of the international student advisory office, the only financial aid given to Villanova's foreign students is from that student's government.

In the report's figures, there were 106,000 foreign graduate students, most concentrated in technological fields. According to the National Research Council, foreign students received 50 percent of all doctorates in engineering, 32 percent in mathematics, 26 percent in computer science and 22 percent in physical sciences in 1981.

Geographic distribution shows that the foreign students tend to cluster in the largest numbers at relatively few institutions.

One-third of all foreign students are enrolled in colleges and universities of California (51,520), New York (28,222) and Texas (24,397). Pennsylvania was ninth overall in total foreign student enrollment with 10,806.

The top ten institutions in terms of foreign student enrollment for 1982 were Miami-Dade, U.S.C., Columbia, Wisconsin at Madison, Boston University, Texas at Austin, Texas Southern, Michigan, U.C.L.A. and Northeastern.

According to Risech, only half as many foreign students were enrolled at Villanova last year. She attributes the increase to the phenomena of word of mouth and the number of satisfied alumni who recommend Villanova. The report also details the field of study the foreign students were enrolled in, with engineering commanding, 75,220, followed by business and management with 59,420. Agriculture trailed the fields of study with 8,800.

Results from the survey reveal that while the proportion of students from the Mideast has doubled to 22 percent in the past decade, foreign student growth this year was largely the result of increases outside the Middle East. Of the eight Middle Eastern OPEC members, enrollment from Saudi Arabia, Libya and Algeria actually declined, while Kuwait was the only major Arab OPEC member with an increase in excess of one percent.

If this pattern continues, observes Wallace Edgerton, president of IIE, "it may indicate that the enormous expansion of foreign student numbers fueled by petrodollars has reached a plateau in the oil glut of the early eighties — at least as far as Middle Eastern nations are concerned."

OPEC nation students were 29 percent (95,357) of all foreign students in 1982, a decrease from 33 percent (101,625) in 1981.

Looking at growth from another perspective, Edgerton also said that, while U.S. higher education benefits large numbers of Third World students, the benefit is in fact unevenly distributed. "Some of the poorer countries which could benefit most are, in fact, benefitting least," he said.

Phone Crackdown

By HENRY Di BENEDETTO

According to Mark Carrig, head of Telecommunications at Villanova, a crackdown of illegal telephone calls that occur on campus is being made.

"Through a system manufactured by ATT, Single Message Detail Recording (SMDR) has been installed to trace every telephone call that originates or is received at Villanova," said Carrig. Every extension goes on tape, which allows every call to or from Villanova to be traced.

"With this new system, one can not charge a call to a third party who has nothing to do with the call and not be caught," explains Carrig. "Too many people have had to pay for other people's calls and this stealing must stop. The Bell Telephone Company loses approximately $44 million a year on illegal calls."

"If an individual is caught, the penalties are rather severe," said Carrig. A first offense can result in up to $300 in fines, plus other charges. A second offense can lead to prison sentences and larger fines. An individual must remember if he is making illegal calls by billing a third, neutral party, he is committing a felony which is considered a federal crime.

Investigation efforts by Bell officials and other top security officials have been performed in cooperation with Villanova to crack down on this felony. There have been cases where the F.B.I. has been called in to investigate. "We will go to any lengths to find these people," said Carrig.

"We will not hesitate to go into the residence halls and track down the offenders," said Carrig. There have been occurrences in the past in which Bell officials and other authorities have come to Villanova to investigate this abuse.

"This new system of SMDR has made it possible to have a consistent crackdown on these offenders," Carrig explained.

CPC Reports Drop In Job Offers

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

There will be fewer jobs available this year than last year for engineering, business and liberal arts graduates, according to the College Placement Council (CPC). The only areas in which the CPC predicts an increase in hiring is in science, math and technical jobs.

"Employers are waiting to see what the economy will do. They are hesitant in investing money into new projects which in turn open up new job opportunities," said Robert Stokes, director of Villanova's Career Development Center.

"Many employers are waiting to hire over the summer," added Stokes. Employers feel the market could improve for May graduates. Fifty-four percent of the employers expect improved economic conditions the first half of 1983. An additional 32 percent see the first half of 1983 unchanged and only six percent anticipate a decline, according to companies contacted by the center.

Despite the CPC report of a 12 percent drop in demand for engineers, "Villanova," according to Stokes, "is not as affected in such areas as electrical engineering and civil engineering — due to the new Reagan proposal on highway construction — and are in demand."

Most counselors believe computer science majors are among the more fortunate graduates this year. "The industries showing the best opportunities are the hospitality and computer industries," according to John Shingleton, placement director at Michigan State University.

Dr. Robert Stokes, director of Career Development Center. Charlie Guida Photo

The Career Development Center contacts large number of companies and then the companies decide whether to send someone to Villanova for on-campus interviews. "Sometimes, it is unprofitable for a company to spend money for transportation, food and accommodations," said Stokes. "Seniors are encouraged to come in and talk with us individually to let us help them set up a job campaign with other opportunities, rather than rely upon on-campus interviews," said Stokes.

On-campus interviews, resumes and additional job interviews all require an extra effort, but will give the graduate a better career choice, according to Stokes.

A substantial decline in interview schedules and campus visits is projected by employers due to a number of factors: internal cost control measures, reduced recruitment needs and decisions to be more selective and extend fewer offers for available positions, according to the CPC.

"The gloomier outlook means jobs are more scarce, so the students need to devise new ways to go after as many opportunities as possible. Students need to readjust their interview pursuit to accommodate for the decline in opportunities," said Stokes.

"There is a problem with national figures, because so much depends on the individual's personality. Achievements in academics and extra-curricular activities are all important. Each student needs to effectively package the skills he or she has to give a successful interview."

"The image that Villanova's Career Center deals basically with the technical areas of employment for on-campus interviews is misleading," said Stokes. "We would like to see more liberal arts students come in to talk with us. We can help them in preparing for interviews and give advice in ways to acquire more interview opportunities."

New Consortium for Philosophy

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Greater Philadelphia Philosophy Consortium, recently formed by Bryn Mawr College, Temple University, the University of Pennsylvania and Villanova University, enables graduate students in philosophy to take courses at any of the four institutions while pursuing a master's or doctoral degree in their "home" department. As the first program of its kind in the nation, it may serve as a model for other graduate disciplines coping with hiring freezes and declining enrollments.

"The result for students is to enrich the scholarly resources available to them and to increase the range of areas they may study," said Michael Krausz, associate professor of philosophy at Bryn Mawr. "Our goal is to preserve each of the four schools' strengths."

The consortium has shown promise in the first semester of operation. "We all have current students taking courses at the other schools right now," said Krausz, "and prospective students have already written in, saying they want to apply because the consortial arrangement makes us more attractive to them."

Krausz and Joseph Margolis, professor of philosophy at Temple, are co-conveners of the consortium, working with a steering committee composed of one faculty and one administrative representative from each of the four member schools.

One long-term benefit of the new program will be that Philadelphia may emerge as a major philosophic center. "This area is already rich in philosophers. Last year's conferences on the philosophy of the Human Studies, out of which the consortium grew, has brought them together into a professionally lively association," said Margolis.

The consortium is also expected to provide the answer to a future educational need; the possible shortage of trained professors that some experts predict for the mid-1990s. If the Greater Philadelphia Philosophy Consortium succeeds in developing a city-wide resource for philosophic studies that continues to attract promising graduate students, the resulting community of scholars should be well prepared to respond to future needs for trained philosophers.

Athletics Motion a 'Slap in the Face'

At its last meeting, the University Senate was presented with the opportunity to vote on a resolution that would have recommended to the University's Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program at Villanova. Instead, the Senate refused to stand firm in voting for the resolution and approved a substitute motion that virtually ignored the presented evidence.

In October 1981, the Senate remanded to the Athletic Advisory Committee that they provide a rationale to support the resolution. A year's work, including a thoroughly developed analysis that proclaimed "football would provide a significant, positive contribution to the University," was presented at the meeting. The study detailed that the program would be financially feasible — with student willingness to pay a $35 fee, the University's contribution to football would not be a financial burden.

But the committee's report was attacked as "incomplete" because it lacked research containing figures from the past football program. According to the committee's chairman, the figures could not be attained from the individuals who possess the information. This supposed incompleteness, actually a manifestation of the lack of cooperation exhibited by the administration, allowed for the presentation of the substitute motion.

The substitute motion, that the Senate recommends a comprehensive review of the entire athletic program, including consideration of an intercollegiate football program, was approved by Senate despite the obvious intent behind its introduction: partial pacification of the various groups who are working to bring back football.

The substitute motion also calls for "the Trustees, the Administration, the Alumni Association and the Student leaders" to work "cooperatively in a spirit of mutual respect and goodwill. . . ."

One senator questioned if the bodies could work together in good will if the much needed information concerning budget and attendance figures would not be released. Another senator called the substitute motion a "slap in the face."

The refusal of the Senate to recognize the original resolution and the supporting evidence behind it and instead adopting a substitute motion that pales in comparison in intent, is a slap in the face, a hurt that will be felt and remembered.

The Senate was given the chance to challenge the status quo in a forceful manner. Instead, it opted to conform to the defensive "don't rock the boat" attitude that has become typical at Villanova.

Tuition Increase

The University Senate Budget Committee is currently reviewing a draft of the administrative budget that contains the following budget estimates: a 10 percent increase in tuition, an 8 percent increase in room and board, 7 percent salary increments and a debt service of $1.5 million.

It is a known fact that Villanova is much too highly dependent upon student tuition for revenue; approximately 96 percent of the University's revenue is generated by tuition. But Villanova may have a hard time forcing the students to swallow this increase.

The Planning and Priorities Committee recognizes that Villanova may become "uncompetitive in the market" if changes are not made. The committee also realizes that the University will be hard-pressed to convince those paying tuition that the double-digit increase is necessary, if the inflation rate drops to the predicted five percent.

There is one optimistic note: the Senate approved the committee's study after adopting the resolution that any increase in financial aid should not come from the increase in student tuition and room and board fees. We believe that the University must seriously consider other areas in which revenue can be attained. If the high tuition increase is adopted again next year, Villanova may very well become uncompetitive in the market.

Pro-freeze Arguments Faulty

To the Editor:

Well, Dr. Arthur Crabtree is at it again. While his op-ed argument in the Nov. 19 issue appears to be logical, I submit that it is based upon a faulty assumption.

First, let me say quite clearly that I am not "hawkish." My letter is written as a concerned Christian who does not like the arms build-up or the "vicious circle effect." Like anyone else here on campus, I do not relish war of any kind, and would prefer to see the money now spent on armaments spent on other things. However, as educated people, I think we need to take another look at the world situation, and face the cold, hard facts.

Fact: the U.S.S.R. has made no secret of its ultimate goal: global domination and the establishment of global communism. Is this compatible with our national existence or with the freedoms that we, as Americans, enjoy?

Fact: The Soviets have engaged in a massive arms build-up during the last twenty years that has far outstripped our own. Now that they are moving ahead, who can seriously expect them to bargain away the advantages they are beginning to enjoy? Did they spend all that time and money arming themselves if their true intentions are to disarm? That's not logical.

Fact: While offering us the olive branch with one hand, the U.S.S.R.'s other hand has been covertly involved with the subversion of many smaller countries, and the overt invasion of one of its neighbors.

Crabtree's false assumption is that the Soviet Union has no territorial ambitions. Clearly they do, and the deterrence posed by our nuclear missiles is what is restraining them from further activity. And now, a proportion of our society is advocating the hindrance and ultimate removal of that deterrence. Have we so quickly forgotten the lessons of history? The sad fact is that you do not negotiate with a regime such as the U.S.S.R. from a position of weakness. Let us not blind ourselves to this reality. It is not "those war-winning enthusiasts in the Reagan administration" who live in a world of illusion, it is those who believe that appeasement and concessions (and once started, they will become more numerous) will bring peace. In 1938, Neville Chamberlain tried to appease Hitler. History speaks for itself. Should we now try to appease the Soviets?

Remember that we offered a similar kind of agreement to the U.S.S.R. over 30 years ago on freezing and disarming. They refused it then because it wasn't in their best interests. Today, such a freeze would not only leave us at a disadvantage, but also without a secure way of ensuring Soviet compliance. A freeze would give them the breathing room they need to develop defenses against our weapons, thus rendering useless our deterent force.

I believe that this country should be committed to continued deterrence of Soviet aggression rather than accede to ridiculous suggestions made by a brutal regime that uses chemical/biological warfare against innocent civilians.

It is my sincere hope and prayer that within the next few years, a way can be found to reduce or eliminate our nuclear arsenals and to reduce world tension. I agree that what we have now is a very hazardous situation, and

Pro-lifers Urge Actions

The date Jan. 22, 1983 is not momentous in the lives of most Villanovans. A few people may celebrate birthdays or anniversaries, but for most of us, this date is as mundane as any other day in our lives. For over ten million unborn babies and countless more to come, however, Jan. 22 is an anniversary not to be celebrated, but to be mourned. This date will mark the tenth anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision in the case of Roe v. Wade. This historical decision made abortions legal and available for any woman at virtually any time during pregnancy on demand.

Each year that nothing is done to stop this legal holocaust, over one million unborn babies (technically called fetuses) will be aborted. Action has been taken in the form of at least two human life amendments, which would protect the sanctity of the lives of the unborn, recently proposed in the U.S. Congress. In 1982, the Hatch Human Life Amendment came closer than ever to passing in the U.S. Senate, but was thwarted by a threatened filibuster by pro-choice advocates.

After ten years of fighting legalized abortion, 1983 could be the year that pro-life advocates finally achieve some significant national success. Indeed, many people concerned with the abortion issue on both sides see 1983 as the key year in deciding whether abortion will ever become legally controlled in this country. The success of the pro-life movement is dependent, however, on the interests and actions of each and every individual who believes in the pro-life ethic. Each person at Villanova and throughout the country who is pro-life, whether he or she is a member of a pro-life organization or not, must resist the easy trap of sitting back in agreement with the pro-life ethic while others do the work.

The obvious question many people would ask at this time is, "What can one person effectively do?" There are several answers to this question. Perhaps one of the best actions an individual can take is to go to the pro-life March for Life in Washington, D.C., on Jan. 22, 1983. There, we pro-lifers can lobby our Congressmen face-to-face. Together we can share the spirit and unity of being pro-life, and we can make our small individual voices be heard with the thunderous roar of one large significant voice.

If you cannot go to the March for Life, there are other actions you can take which are equally important. You can tell family members and friends about the march, or you can inform your local church or club about it. You can write a letter to President Reagan urging him to attend the march on this important year. Finally, you can write a letter or letters to your Congressman or Senator about your pro-life convictions which you share with many other constituents. He will have to face the results which will be shown in the tremendous amount of pro-life letters.

All these things you can do by yourself, or with others, if you are willing to put even a small amount of time into carrying out your convictions. If you need help, local pro-life organizations are willing and able to assist you. The rest is up to you.

that we must seek a way out of it. However, it must be done with the U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. as equal partners with a mutual interest for the preservation of life. Perhaps the START talks will provide some possible answers. Certainly a propaganda ploy, made with the knowledge of the internal divisions it would cause, cannot work. First use renunciation will not prevent the Russians from launching their missiles first. Regrettably, the Soviets have little interests in the preservation of precious life, and until they do, little can be done.

What Dr. Crabtree suggests is well-intentioned, and looks good on paper. But in practice, it could lead us into a more dangerous situation than we have today.

Union Refusal

To the Editor:

It's absolutely amazing that the Villanova Union could find an "unconfirmed" $25,000 for one concert when it could not or would not provide $500 for a program that it agreed to sponsor, to be provided by Villanova students for Villanova students this fall.

During the 1982 spring semester, Chris Storck, the Union's programing director, agreed to sponsor a program titled "Creativity; Performing Art in Action." The idea was to utilize Villanova's student talent by offering the opportunity to perform before an audience of peers and professors on a non-competitive basis.

A proposal was submitted in June which asked if the Union would be willing to contribute funds to support the program. Storck did not even have the decency to write a polite refusal; she hasn't bothered offering a reason as to why the proposal was not accepted.

If the University can allow the Union thousands of dollars for one event, the Union should be required to contribute a reasonable percentage of money towards the efforts of students having their[r] ... initiative to organize creative forms of entertainment.

One-sided

To the Editor:

In the last two issues of the Villanovan, only one side of the nuclear freeze argument was presented. In Greg Anton's editorial, it is argued that "money spent on defense should be reallocated." It continues, "the American public voiced its desire to end the arms race. The call for a nuclear freeze must be adhered by the Reagan administration."

Americans over the past decades have spent more and more money on defense and have become less and less safe. This lack of safety is a result of the massive Soviet buildup. I do not support the idea of throwing money into the defense problem; the answer must be negotiations with the Soviet Union for the purpose of an arms agreement on equal levels. However, the freeze, that Anton supports, would not put the United States and the Soviets on equal levels. A nuclear freeze at present levels would only allow the Soviets to keep their existing superiority, which they can use to intimidate other countries.

The editorial suggests our economic problems come from defense spending. However, the simple fact remains — without our armed forces — our economy, our society, and our freedoms would not exist. Anton said the American people support a nuclear freeze now. However, passing referendums in just a few states cannot be taken to show what Americans as a whole, support.

In the op-ed written by Dr. Arthur Crabtree, he correctly states that peace is a goal for the earth. "The renouncing of the first nuclear strike and the agreeing to a mutual, verifiable freeze . . . will obviate the possibility of nuclear war . . . since the Soviets have made both of these proposals." I have already pointed out the problems of freezing nuclear arms at present levels. Also the resolution of a first strike has already been done, by first the Nixon administration and now by the Reagan administration. American must not fool itself; the Soviet Union is not building nuclear arms because they like to have them in Moscow parades.

In the pursuit of peace, we must not be fooled by wishful thinking. We can negotiate with the Soviets by only by being strong in our relationship to them. As Winston Churchill said, "The Soviets are like burglars in the night- they go around a house trying every door and window. Once they find an opening, they use it." We must not give them this opening by giving them nuclear superiority in a nuclear freeze at present levels.

T-Shirts

To the Editor:

Recently, I was approached by two Villanova students selling t-shirts that read "Restore Villanova football and bring back the tailgates." I was immediately turned off. I was not turned off by "Restore Villanova football" but was disappointed at "and bring back the tailgates."

Football and tailgates are synonmous. A football game always has tailgates. Yet, at Villanova in past years, the tailgates seemed to be more important than the football game. This poor attitude towards Villanova football, caused to a degree, the castration of the football program. If football is restored, the stadium will be full because students and alumni will appreciate Villanova football. Those t-shirts should read "Restore Villanova football and bring back the spirit." Of course we will tailgate if football is restored, but we will go to the games because we will appreciate what has been taken away from us.

Those t-shirts reflect the poor attitude towards Villanova football of the past. I need not say whether or not I purchased one of those t-shirts.

A Quiet Night on a Philly Beat

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

I recently spent a Saturday night "cruising" around Philadelphia. This is nothing out of the ordinary; Villanova students often go into the city for a change of pace and scenery. But not many spend their evening in the front seat of a police car, as I did. I was not arrested for drug abuse or disorderly conduct. My ride was completely voluntary; I wanted to get a closer look at the Philadelphia police force.

Maybe I've seen too many police dramas on television for I was quite surprised to walk into a quiet, calm station instead of the loud and crowded one pictured on "Hill Street Blues." No shouting voices, no ringing phones and no abusive, rude "criminals" were yelling at the officers. Instead I was greeted by a very pleasant and polite man named Lt. David Testa, who was to be my "tour guide" for the evening. He showed me into a large room and told me to wait there until after the roll call.

There was one woman and eight men in the room talking and relaxing, a college football game on the television set went unnoticed. At 4 p.m. the officers lined up, hats on, billy clubs under arms, ready to respond to roll call. Several announcements were made: "There is an abandoned house at Juniper and South where juveniles and junkies are hanging out bothering the neighbors. Be aware of it;" "Time changes at 2 a.m. Don't forget to set the clocks;" "It's Mischief Night so be on the lookout for all masked desperados out there;" and "Watch for derilicts hanging around Eleventh and Samson." The officers were then dismissed.

Testa and I started out at 4:10 p.m. He explained the factual background of the police program and station operation. The Sixth District has four squads, each having one lieutenant, two sergeants and one corporal. There are three working shifts: 8 a.m.-4 p.m.; 4 p.m.-12 a.m.; 12 a.m.-8 a.m. "I like this (4 p.m.-12 a.m.) shift the best. The early shift is mentally draining because of the traffic and the later shift is tiring because things get very quiet after four or five in the morning," commented Testa.

A squad works the same hours for six days, gets two off and then starts new hours. The squad on duty is divided into two sections, one (6A) covers from South Street to Market and the other (6B) covers from Market to Poplar Avenue.

Testa explained how one becomes an officer. A recruit trains at the police academy for three months (the West Philadelphia academy is the largest for the Pennsylvania area). The recruit is trained in physical fitness, law, search and seizure and other aspects of police work. After the academy, the recruit goes on to the streets for a six month probation period, during which he is supervised and rated. He is granted civil service status upon graduation, more simply, he is now a cop. Testa commented, "The majority of all the policemen I see are pretty well trained from the academy."

It was 4:50 p.m. when the radio operator reported that a hispanic male in a maroon jacket was being pursued for tampering with a car. The arresting officer requested a back-up. Testa responded but the suspect was apprehended before our arrival.

We continued our conversation. Testa spoke about his background and his reasons for joining a police force. "I graduated from high school and wasn't sure what I wanted to do. I went on to college, attending classes during the day and working in an insurance office after school." He continued, "One day it hit me that office work was not for me. I wanted to be involved with humanity, to work with people."

Forty-nine officers are assigned to Testa's squad. He is responsible for supervising their work as well as running the entire district. If a situation arises in which a patrolman is unsure of appropriate actions, Testa is called in. If an arrest is made, he must ensure that it is handled properly, a crime was committed, there is a suspect and witness and a complaintant is available, if there is one.

The police radio came alive at 5 p.m. and the operator reported a bank robbery by two men at Twelth and Market. However, the call proved unfounded. Then at 5:05 p.m., another report came over the air of a black male, approximately 6-0 and 170 lbs. wearing a tan jacket, who assaulted a business man making a night deposit drop. No money was taken. We responded. Testa observed the situation and found everything under control. (The assailant was not found that night.)

After the two calls, we resumed our conversation. Testa further explained that he must sign each of his policeman's patrol logs during the shift. A patrol log is a record kept by each policeman in which he records his action every 20 minutes. "I work closely with my squad and I enjoy that. But being a policeman is sometimes a dirty job in which we often handle a lot of cruddy people."

Although there are several colleges in the Philadelphia area, Testa said, "We don't have problems with the students. Where we have to be on a close watch is in the New Market area because there is so much pedestrian traffic." When asked about crime as related to the natural elements, Testa said, "Rain is our best friend. When it rains or gets cold, arrests are held to a minimum, whereas during the summer, the heat causes the temperatures to rise in humans also."

At 8 p.m., Testa reported the headquarters. He checked in with the three officers in the Operations Room and while there "Cat Woman" called. Testa explained that when bored, people will call the District and bother the officers. The particular woman "meows" into the telephone but she was promptly hung up on.

We responded to only two other calls. At 8:30 p.m., we arrived at the scene of a car accident. Testa supervised his officers' work, ensuring that no one was hurt and then continued on his patrol. At 9:55 p.m., two males were reported "hanging out" by a state store. We drove to the store and discovered nothing abnormal about the situation. He then reported back to headquarters at 11:30 p.m.

I left the Sixth District with some very good notes for a story, a handshake and a smile from Testa. I had expected a much more eventful night and he commented that for a Saturday, the night was "especially quiet." But to Lt. Testa and me, a quiet night was not bad at all.

Expressing Brotherly Love

By GREG ANTON
and FRED MURPHY

The Main Chapel perfunctorily swallows up the churchgoers only to later turn them loose so they may gather out front. The hullabaloo of friends and neighbors exchanging news items and catching up on the week's gossip temporarily disturbs the serenity throughout the campus. There is virtually nothing going on for it is Sunday morning, a blissful time for most Villanova students. It is often the only time to rest and/or recuperate from the harrowing experiences of the past week.

Yet, in another chapel, 40 students, having voluntarily given up this treasured time, eagerly await the arrival of a certain caravan which is weaving its way up the Schuylkill Expressway. Upon its arrival, the tranquility of the campus will surely be shattered for the cars are transporting the 40 children from North Philadelphia who participate in Campus Ministry's Big Brothers/Big Sisters program.

Brotherhood. Exactly what does it mean? Is it merely obtained at birth by being born into a family, or is it found along the way through contacts and relationships made with special people? It has been said that, "It is chance that makes brothers, but it is heart which makes friends." Clearly, it is heart which allows those 40 students to establish and maintain a very special relationship with the children.

The anticipation and slight twinge of nervousness dissipate as a sea of waving arms and smiling faces emerge from the cars which have finally arrived. Hugs, kisses, and handshakes are exchanged as relationships are renewed. Without further delay, the group disperses, leaving the "big" person and "little" person free to explore and set out on their adventures.

The key to the success of the organization is the children, ranging in age from 8 to 13. They are bright, beautiful and blessed with an innocence that reminds us of how we used to be. The precious moments spent together with the children make the many hours spent each week planning and organizing tolerable.

In response to the aforementioned question, brotherhood need not be limited to people possessing the same last name. It is obtained when two friends realize an appreciation and concern towards one another. Through giving, taking and striving to retain an open-mind stance, a relationship develops which is based on mutual respect and adoration. Such relationships are obvious among the Big Brothers/Big Sisters and the children.

As the day draws to an end, the children are being rounded up for the return trip. They appear tireless after having vented their energy with seemingly reckless abandon all day long. But for the students, the day is slowly beginning to take its physical toll. For many, Sunday evenings will now serve as that blissful time to rest and/or recuperate.

Murphy's Law of Villanova

By S.F. R.C.

Nearly everybody is familiar with Murphy's Law, "Anything that can go wrong, will," but few people realize that there are 20 corollaries to Murphy's Law that apply exclusively to Villanova.

Rule 1: Whenever the cafeteria serves something you don't like, they'll have something worse for seconds.

Rule 2: The books you want to sell will always get revised.

Rule 3: The best parties are held on the weekends you go home.

Rule 4: The plant you buy at the plant sale will die within the week.

Rule 5: Calculator batteries wear out only during an exam.

Rule 6: No pretty girls you know will ever go to the same party as you.

Rule 7: The one time your professor starts class on time, you're late.

Rule 8: The one night you have no work to do, everyone else will.

Rule 9: The hall phone you answer will never be for you.

Rule 10: A dropped pencil will always land on its point.

Rule 11: Your acne will come back the day you get your picture taken for the yearbook.

Rule 12: The one basketball game you go to, the team will get creamed.

Rule 13: The roommate of the girl you're taking out is always prettier.

Rule 14: The most important question on the exam will concern material covered the day you missed class.

Rule 15: The number you draw in the housing lottery is inversely proportional to your desire to stay on campus.

Rule 16: The time you make the lottery cut-off point will be the time they accidently switch the numbers.

Rule 17: The one time "On Campus" asks your opinion, the question concerns recent political upheavals in Guam.

Rule 18: Your chances of being called on in class are inversely proportional to your chances of knowing the answer.

Rule 19: The night your girlfriend finally agrees to sleep over will be the same night someone pulls the fire alarm.

Rule 20: Whenever they finally renovate a sports stadium, a major sport will be dropped.

Taking Time At Christmas

By REV. CEDRIC WILSON, O.S.A.

In keeping with the mood and flavor of the Advent season, a time of personal and profound preparation, I would like to make a few proposals.

Sometimes, we get caught up in the rush of the season (exams, papers, shopping and parties). Too many things happen in too little time. It's a problem that confronts us every year. As the days quickly dwindle down, we wonder how we'll ever get everything accomplished.

In between the busy moments, take the time to think about your life and what it means to you and those who touch you. Take the time to reflect on the real gifts you have . . . health, peace of mind, security, self-respect, good friends. And then take the time to say a prayer for these around us who do not possess these gifts.

Take the time to look inside yourself and evaluate what you see. Then do whatever you can to increase the good while decreasing the bad.

Advent, is a time set aside to prepare for the coming of Christ. Do we take that time to acknowledge our need as Christians for the presence of Christ in our daily lives?

How do Villanova faculty, students and staff look upon Advent? What are our priorities?

Advent taken in this light will be a time to reclaim our humanity, to rediscover how God can be found in our everyday experiences. This is a season which calls us to claim and own our experience: our tears and our laughter, our sadness and our joy, our lows and our highs. Here God calls us to take the gift of life seriously.

The mystery of the Incarnation deals with God binding himself more closely to the people whom he loves. And in reclaiming our humanity, we celebrate the mystery and experience of communication. How do we communicate? What are the different ways we express all that we think and feel? God most fully communicated and revealed to us who he was in the person and life of Jesus Christ.

God most powerfully articulated his love in the Word made flesh. Couldn't Advent be seen, as a time for us to reexamine just how God's love is real in our lives? Wouldn't Advent be the occasion "par excellence" to take time, to praise, to spend 4 weeks remembering?

Since we are all so easily distracted and torn in different ways, since we are preoccupied with many thoughts and worries and things to be done, couldn't Advent be an important time to stop? A pause that not only reminds us of the mystery of God — becoming flesh, but in that very pause re-fleshes us and enables us to become more fully human.

Spring Rush in Bloom

Amid exams, papers and Christmas vacation plans, spring rush may seem like it is a long way off. However, it is not too early to start thinking about it. After all, the newly formed Panhellenic council has been planning it for quite a while. Rushing is now going to be a new and exciting experience for those participating in rush, as well as the sorority members themselves.

In the past years, every sorority has planned their own rush. Now, the Panhellenic council will coordinate activities so that each woman going through rush will attend a party given by each one of the sororities.

Another difference in the new Panhellenic rush is that women will be required to register for rush. To do this, they must fill out a registration form (available in the Student Activities Office) and pay a $5 fee by Dec. 15. However, if anyone decides after that date that she is interested in rushing, she can register until Jan. 20. However, a late fee will be charged.

On Jan. 20, there will be an organizational meeting which all registered women will be required to attend. Women will be given information about the individual socials, which will begin on Jan. 24.

Another change in the present system is the addition of a counselor who will help the women through rush. Not only will she provide the women with general information, but also support, friendship, and personal guidance to help them get the most out of rush.

The new Panhellenic council was formed in accordance with the National Panhellenic Conference. It is designed primarily to make rush an enjoyable and beneficial time, insuring that each woman knows enough about each sorority to choose the one that best fits her needs.

Philadelphia: At the End of the Line

"When I first got there, it was hell," said Angel. "I thought the food was poison; I thought they were trying to kill me. They were always giving me drugs and I hallucinated a lot because of them. I thought they dismembered my mother and put pieces of her body on other people."

Angel is an ex-mental patient. She was committed to the Philadelphia State Hospital, also known as Byberry, when she was 18. Luckily, she recovered and was released in seven months. Many patients never leave.

Most people picture a state mental hospital to be a dirty, uncared for place with crazy people roaming around, big guards ready to inject a tranquilizer into anyone who starts a ruckus and an apathetic staff of doctors and nurses. But Byberry doesn't appear that way. The halls are clean and the staff tries to make the patients feel as normal as possible.

The doctors agree that a patient has the greatest chance of recovery if he is treated in a normal atmosphere. So the patients have the right to private communication inside and outside the hospital. They have access to telephones; they can send and receive unopened letters and they can have visitors of their choices at reasonable hours, unless it would interfere with their treatment.

Many services are offered to the patients. They can participate in physical, occupational, speech, music, art and family therapies. There is also medical and nursing care.

Despite their rights to socialize, most patients remain alone. They feel trapped, isolated, uncared for and frightened. They're usually too scared to even talk. This is because their families and friends have abandoned them. Volunteers are provided to relieve the loneliness and give hope to these patients. They befriend, talk to and take an interest in them. Since a lot of the patients spend their lives in the same two or three rooms, seeing a new face is something exciting.

Most patients agree that having a friend to visit and show concern and love is the best treatment of all. "Volunteers have an advantage over the staff because they don't get paid for their services. The patients know this, so they feel the volunteers are there because they want to, because they care," said Marian McDonnel, musical therapist.

The Philadelphia State Hospital operates under the Pennsylvania Department of Welfare. It's generally known as Byberry because it was started on Byberry Farms in the far Northeast in 1906.

Patients must be suffering from a psychosis to get into Byberry and they must have received at least 30 days in-patient care at a local community facility before referral to P.S.H. Many of them have been victims of incest, come from broken homes, have been beaten and have had trouble in school.

The efforts of the hospital are directed toward the diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation of the mentally ill, so they can function in society on their own. The treatments include drug therapy and psychotherapy.

You might think as soon a patient is capable of functioni normally, he'd be thrilled to le the hospital. But Dr. Knudsen plains this isn't true. "Even w patients can live outside of hospital, many don't leave cause there's no place for them go. They don't want to go out live lonely lives, sleep in subw and wonder where their m meals are coming from when t can stay here and sleep and e

Dr. Fran Hovey has another ory about why they don't wan leave. "They're just afraid they won't be able to function side. On the average, they're very educated. Their educati range from 6th to 11th gr They need the control of an in tution."

Unfortunately, most pati will remain controlled for the of their lives. "Byberry," Mrs. Keane, head of volunteer vices, "is usually the end o line."

As far as practicing goes, the cheerleaders are diligent in their efforts to achieve a high quality of performance. They practice as much as three times a week and again before each game. Added Williams, "We practice a lot, but the pyramids we build and the lifts we do require a lot of timing and accuracy."

But, Williams said it is worth all of the time and effort. "We get to see all the games and we're right there — on the floor. We also get to travel to all of the away games and we have a great time. This year we get to go to San Diego over Christmas for the holiday tournament and who knows, if we make the final four, we go to Albequerque, N.M."

Villanova cheerleaders urge on basketball fans.

Opposite Ends of the Spectrum

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Billy Joel and Linda Ronstadt are two artists who differ in almost every way. The only similarity the two share is that in the past, each has had an enormous amount of success. If their recent performances are any indication, the future looks just as bright.

Joel is touring in support of his new album, "The Nylon Curtain," an LP that has received much critical acclaim. Although he has sold some 35 million albums to date, the critics still tend to label Joel a "cheap lounge act."

As for his recent rave reviews, Joel isn't fazed. "I never paid attention to the reviews before, so why should I now?" he exclaimed.

One thing Joel does pay attention to is his crowd. The soldout Spectrum was treated to a two-hour set that included 21 songs and three encores. Joel knew that the crowd was not yet familiarized with the new album, so he played mostly old material. "Ladies and gentlemen, tonight we will not play for four hours promoting the new album. In fact, only four songs will be from the new LP. They will be strategically placed within the set. See if you can find them," Joel explained.

The "Piano Man" opened up with "Allentown," which the Pennsylvanian crowd embraced warmly. The song is a microcosm of the economic and unemployment situation in today's Amer-

Later, Joel went into "Prelude/Angry Young Man" from the "Turnstiles" album. Joel's speed and dexterity on the piano highlighted this song. His hands showed no ill effects of the much publicized motorcycle accident (that occurred almost six months ago and left Joel with two badly broken hands).

Every song that was performed, at one time had been on top of the charts: "My Life," "Anthony's Song," "Just the Way You Are" and "Don't Ask Me Why." The list goes on and on. The five-time Grammy award winner's stage show is truly enjoyable. Each song is supplied with more power and intensity than those on vinyl.

Billy Joel

Joel's band is excellent, and only Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band comes to mind as being tighter. Bassist Doug Stegmeyer and drummer Liberty DeVito are the band's backbone, and have been with Joel from the very beginning.

Joel is also a very funny man. Most critics often confuse this with arrogance and accuse Joel of having no class. But the man does indeed know how to work the crowd. During his performance of "The Stranger," Joel sat down to his piano, lit a cigarette and began to furiously puff away. "This is all for effect," he stated. Then, as if smoking a joint, Joel took the cigarette, inhaling all the smoke and shouted, "Make believe you're at an Aerosmith concert!"

If one really had to pick out the highlights, "Piano Man" was certainly one of them. Joel, performing his new hit "Pressure," was another. For this critic, the highlight of the show was the performance of "Goodnight Saigon" off of the "Nylon Curtain" LP. This song is truly haunting. In time, "Goodnight Saigon" will become a classic: the definitive song about Vietnam. Borrowing a line from one writer — "This song hits home to the point where one can smell the napalm." Joel's lyrics pinpoint what the war was all about: "But who was wrong/and who was right/we prayed to Jesus Christ with all of our might."

After ending the regular set, Joel returned to the stage performing "You May Be Right" and "Only the Good Die Young." The crowd would not let Joel leave until he returned for a third time performing (the originally underground hit), "Captain Jack."

The crowd stood and cheered for five minutes afterwards. Billy Joel most likely will still have his detractors, but this writer certainly is not among them.

In contrast, Linda Ronstadt made her third career Spectrum performance before a relatively small crowd. The arena was only 3/4 full. But for those who did attend, Ronstadt did not disappoint them. The show basically was very mellow, but one has come to expect that from Ronstadt. Most of the time she just stands in front of the microphone and sings. One does not come to see the band run around or a fancy light show. But rather to hear that voice.

Clad in a red dress with white polka dots, Miss Ronstadt looked like Dorothy from "The Wizard of Oz." Performing nineteen songs, her recent stint on Broadway (she prepared by taking voice lessons) clearly had helped the torch singer's range.

Miss Ronstadt, who is an interpretive singer, opened up the set with "Tumblin' Dice." The crowd enjoyed such favorites as "Blue Bayou," "I Can't Let Go," "Get Closer," "You're No Good" and "Heatwave." For the encore, Ronstadt belted out a rousing rendition of The Eagles' "Desperado." It was a fitting closing to a show that should not have been missed.

New Frontiers for Gabriel

By STEVEN HELMETAG

Peter Gabriel, one of rock's foremost singer/songwriters, made his Spectrum debut in full glory Nov. 16, in support of his fourth solo album, "Security." Since leaving the group Genesis in 1975, Gabriel's growth and success has climbed steadily with each record and tour. The artist has always been a leader in stage theatrics and has always loved being close to his fans while on stage. On this tour, Gabriel must remain in touch with his audience in 20,000 seat stadiums — not an easy task.

The five-man Gabriel band, entered the arena from the area furthest from the stage, walking across the Spectrum floor in the midst of screaming fans. Each member wore haunting white-on-black outfits and carried a beating drum to accompany an eerie synthesizer pattern emanating from the stage. It was rather obvious that Gabriel did not come to play pop music for pop people. The musician came to show off his talent as a performer. To enhance his performance, Gabriel used a cordless microphone strapped around his neck, permitting him to frolic freely from one end of the stage to the other.

Having three full hours of recorded solo material, the former Genesis singer could get away without playing any of his old band's songs. On "Security", Gabriel attempts to cross many musical barriers by utilizing primarily a computerized synthesizer and a drum kit for the important rhythm foundations.

Although previously known only in art-rock circles, Gabriel's latest single, "Shock the Monkey" has already reached top 40 status, after gaining heavy rock airplay. Originally growing out of a rhythm pattern, "Monkey," as expected, was a hit in concert. On stage, Gabriel became the monkey, leaping and swinging his arms in time to the music without hitting a sour note while singing.

"Kiss of Life," a likely pick as a follow-up single, with its Latin American rhythmic feel, was the group's second (of three) encores. After asking the audience to "get up and dance," many did. Thus, Gabriel is succeeding in broadening his image and his musical stance.

During "Lay Your Hands On Me," Gabriel waltzed off the platform and into the crowd which lifted him up and welcomed him into their arms. All the while, the artist continued to chant the song's chorus. As Gabriel gradually finds his way back to the stage, the song ends as he bows down on his knees in sacrifice.

The opening band, Electric Guitars, who according to Gabriel are "sometimes loved and sometimes hated," were introduced by the headliner. Unfortunately, Electric Guitars possess an image not well-liked by the majority of Genesis-/Gabriel fans. Being a new music band, the support act relied heavily on bass and drums. Although not one of the most original bands to come out of England recently, the band produced fine dance music.

Apparently Gabriel, who is progressing toward a more danceable sound, is attempting to give new music wider exposure, having hired Electric Guitars to perform at all of his shows the rest of the year.

Joni Mitchell Still Plays it Cool

By JAYNE M. STUART

Singer/songwriter Joni Mitchell recently released a new album "Wild Things Run Fast." This album is a change from her past albums, but one could not say that it is different from her past releases because Mitchell has no set style of music. Her past releases have ranged from jazz and blues to rock and roll. Mitchell has been involved in the music profession for many years, since the 60's.

Mitchell has had a few hits in the past such as "A Free Man in Paris" and "Help Me," both from her album "Court and Spark" which was her most successful, commercially speaking. She is a multi-talented performer; she writes her own lyrics and music, plays the piano and guitar and has control over an unmistakable voice. Her range is phenomenal and very unique which perhaps attributes to her lack of popularity. She does not sing in the conventional manner but in a way that is foreign to many listener's ears. Mitchell has a particular and faithful following, however, that seems to sustain her. Mitchell has often collaborated with many well-known artists such as David Crosby (who produced several of her albums), Stephen Stills, James Taylor and Jose Feliciano. Her popularity peaked in the 60's with the Woodstock era. She wrote a song by that name "Woodstock" although she did not attend the concert. The song was popularized by Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young.

Mitchell does most of the artwork that appears on her albums and has done some covers for other artists. Her latest album has several paintings on the jacket, in addition to the cover and back of the album. Her development as a musical artist can be traced through the artwork. Comparisons of her early albums' artwork and her later releases illustrate quite a contrast. Her artwork has changed considerably from abstract to more concrete art forms. Mitchell's music has followed this course, from abstract to more specific stories and situations of everyday life. Her most recent album, "Wild Things Run Fast," has creative love songs such as "You Dream Flat Tire" to indicate a lost love. ". . . love is precious/ Everybody knows its precious . . ./ Before they dream flat tires . . ."

The songs are upbeat and catchy and although Mitchell did not seem to calculate it, this album has the potential to be a commercially successful one, even outside her faithful following.

One of the most appealing tunes is one by the name "You're So Square, Baby I Don't Care." It is a song about an odd relationship between two people and the fact that they are going to try to work it out despite their many different interests. "You don't like greasy diners/ you don't like sleazy bands/ you just want to go to a movie show/ and sit there holding hands . . ."

Another interesting song about the middle age crisis is "Chinese Cafe, Unchained Melody." It touches on many different aspects of middle age, such as the generation gap — "And my child's a stranger I bore her/ but, I could not raise her/." And aging: "We look like our mothers did now."

Mitchell has collaborated with many new musicians on this album. The familiar names are absent: James Taylor and David Crosby. This album is a change for Mitchell, yet nothing that could be called unexpected because Mitchell is a very unpredictable artist.

Her music has also followed this course, from surrealism to more specific stories and situations of everyday life.

Musical Benefit Slated for Dec. 9

Craig Shoemaker, the best comedian in the area according to Philadelphia magazine, will appear at Villanova University at 8 p.m. on Dec. 9.

Shoemaker and several other locally famous comedians and musicians have donated their services for "A Night of Music and Comedy" to benefit Villanova's Big Brothers/Big Sisters organization.

Other entertainments for the evening include Todd Glass, a comedian currently touring the East coast; Ben Daniels, a Villanova graduate; and solo guitarists Patty Shea, a vocalist and guitarist who has appeared at several local establishments; and Joe Corcoran, a popular musician along the Main Line who plays folk rock with George Johnson and Maria Delgado.

The benefit program will be held in the Villanova Room of the University's Connelly Center from 8-11 p.m. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $3 with student I.D. As part of the program, Bill Clark, a Villanova senior, will play solo guitar accompanying a slide show of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program.

Squeeze: Good to the Last Drop

By PETE BERKERY

"Too little too late." Certainly this thought must have been on the minds of many who saw Squeeze play for the last time in the United States for two dates at the Nassau Coliseum. How ironic for a band that throughout its history has been forced to play small clubs and concert halls while touring the United States, to play before sellout crowds of over 15,000 for their final appearances. Squeeze has certainly earned this acclaim and hopefully the public's recent enthusiasm will encourage the talented songwriting team of lead guitarist/singer Glen Tilbrook and rhythm guitarist Chris Difford to continue to work together after the group disbands.

Despite the various external and emotional factors surrounding the band's appearance, the fans came to see a show; hopefully a great show. They were not disappointed. Squeeze rocked through a spectacular set of their most popular songs, from "Another Nail in My Heart," to "Can't Hold On" and "Black Coffee in Bed." All of the members played with a high level of intensity and Tilbrook's appealing voice was strong and clear. Difford and bassist John Bentley performed their usual dance routine on their side of the stage without missing a note.

The show was a triple bill and REM showed up. REM is basically a punk band with a lead guitarist who tries his best to imitate Keith Richards. The English Beat quickly followed and played for an hour and a half that seemed like three. Although all the members of the band are accomplished musicians and their sound is an innovative "reggae-punk," too many of their songs are repetitious and much of their effect is lost in a large arena.

By the time Squeeze was ready to come on, the crowd was in a frenzy. When they appeared on stage everyone seemed to go berserk, dancing, singing and screaming. The surge of emotion didn't stop until the band finally left the stage after their third encore. Every time Tilbrook moved closer to the audience to play a lead, or Difford danced near the front row seats, the whole audience screamed and clapped, their reaction reminiscent of the early days of Beatlemania. This caused the band to play even more furiously, increasing the tempo with the mood of the audience.

Throughout the band's history, Tilbrook and Difford have been able to retain their distinct sound despite frequent personnel changes. The original keyboard player, Jooles Holland, left the group to embark on a solo career. He was replaced by Paul Carrack who wrote "Tempted," their first U.S. top 40 hit. Carrack left last year and was replaced by Don Snow, the band's final keyboardist. The group also went through two managers until Mike Hedge took over before the release of their latest album, "Sweets From A Stranger."

Although the band went through their share of ups and downs in the United States and England, their critical acclaim was phenomenal. Tilbrook and Difford were hailed as the greatest songwriting team since John Lennon and Paul McCartney. But things just didn't seem to click for Squeeze and they decided the break up after their present tour.

Squeeze was like a breath of fresh air on a music scene that all too often is stale. Their lyrics were clever and captivating, their melodies simple, but catchy. It was an honor to bid them farewell in person; to have one last Squeeze.

Women Cagers Win Debut

By ROBERT M. HELLER

The Cats opening game was ainst the Tigers of Princeton. erretta utilized a starting lineup Burke and Messenger at for- ard and Beisel, Bernhardt and rton at the guard position.

Neither team looked very spec- ular during the first half. Both ams shot poorly from the floor ith Villanova hitting 13 of 33 ots for a poor 39.4, and Prin- eton hitting 10 of 31 shots for an en worse 32.3. However, both ams were perfect from the foul ne. By the end of the first half, illanova had a nine point lead, 1-22.

The second half saw some im- rovement for both teams. Nova t 16 of 33 shots from the floor inishing the game with a 43.9 hooting percentage. Princeton t 15 of 32 shots finishing the ame with a 39.7 shooting percen- age. Villanova increased their ad and won the game 73-57.

Bernhardt led all scorers with points. She was also the Cats ading rebounder with 10 boards and led the team in steals with seven swipes. Burke pumped in 13 points while Messenger added 11 more. Beisel led the team with eight assists while adding eight points of her own. Coming off of the bench, Vanderslice had a per- fect night from the floor, hitting four shots and scoring eight points. The Tigers were led by Vickie Wallen and Wendy Norris with 16 and 12 points, respec- tively.

Villanova's women's basketball squad opened their season this week facing the monstrous task of trying to improve upon a near per- fect 1981-82 season. It was during that season that school records for most wins in a season (29), fewest losses in a season (4) and best won- loss percentage for a season (.875) were set.

With Nova losing two star play- ers to graduation, Lisa Ortlip and Stephanie Vanderslice, Coach Harry Perretta has a big void to fill. Ortlip is Villanova's all time leading scorer and Vanderslice led the Cats in rebounding her junior and senior years.

The loss of Ortlip and Vander- lice will be felt; however, Perretta still has a pair of outstanding play- ers. The two players are All- America candidate guards Kathie Beisel and Nancy Bernhardt. Bei- sel is Nova's all-time assist leader and the sixth all-time leading scorer. She also was co-winner of the Philadelphia Big Five MVP along with teammate Ortlip last year. Bernhardt, the Cats leading scorer last year and the eighth- ranked scorer of all time, seems to be a cinch to break all of Ortlip's scoring records before she gradu- ates. Only a junior, Bernhardt is a threat from anywhere on the court and is probably the purest natural shooter in the region.

In addition to Beisel and Bern- hardt, coach Perretta has seven returning letter winners from last year's squad: seniors Rosemarie Burke and Courtney Vanderslice, juniors Andrea Burton, Noreen Kemether and Mimi Coleman, and sophomores Sandra Williams and Kathy Razler.

In addition, Perretta has four freshman on this year's squad.

Swimmers Take Two

By COLLEEN LYNCH

Villanova's men's swim team, under the direction of Coach Ed Geisz, opened its season with two victories in a double dual meet at Georgetown on Nov. 20. In defeat- ing Georgetown, 97-13, and Con- necticut, 92-18, Villanova set six pool records and captured every first place except the breast- stroke.

"The team was swimming ex- ceptionally fast for this early in the season," commented Darell Linder, the assistant coach. "They responded well to train- ing."

The Wildcats were led by Pete Malony with one individual and one team medley record, and Matt McKean with two team medley re- cords. The 400-medley relay re- cord was set by the team of Malony, Jose Alverez, Bruce Bal- tera and McKean. The 200-free- style record was set by Dan Nies, and the 200-backstroke record was set by Malony. The 400-free- style relay record was set by the team of John Gargula, McKean, Mike Gallagher and Jack Halla- han. Records were also set in the 200-butterfly and 400-freestyle events.

"I'm very proud of the team," Linder said. "They're strong men- tally and operate well as a team."

O'Keeffe Places 100th at NCAA Finals

By PAUL MACCHIA

While most of us were preparing to return home for the Thanksgiving break, on Nov. 22 one outstanding men's cross-country competitor was busy competing in the NCAA cross-country championships.

Brian O'Keeffe was the qualifier. He earned a chance to race against the best collegians in the nation at Indiana University in Bloomington.

The 10 kilometer course featured rolling hills, but there were several drawbacks to racing that particular day. The course was very muddy, and puddles affected runners throughout the race. And to make things worse, there was a drizzle during the event.

O'Keeffe started out slow and found himself in the back of the field. "I felt good despite the slow start," O'Keeffe later remarked. "However, it was very hard to pass people due to the crowded field."

With two miles to go O'Keeffe suddenly exploded. He passed over 100 runners who were starting to tire from the rugged conditions of the course. He finished in 100th place in a time of 32:06.

When asked about the race, O'Keeffe responded, "I learned a lot from the race and now know what to do in a situation with a crowded field . . . I came off a good season of training and I'm looking forward to the indoor season."

WILDCATS: Two In NCAA. . .

By BEVERLY REILLY

On Nov. 22, two Wildcat women harriers competed in the NCAA Cross Country Championships at Indiana University.

Newcomer Jan Yerkes, who was runner-up in the Big East and fourth in the Regionals, ran a competitive race to place 46th in a field of 136 runners. Along with the honor of qualifying for the meet, Yerkes gained valuable experience for her first time in national competition.

Yerkes commented, "I'm glad I had the opportunity to run at Nationals. However, it was a disappointment when the team missed qualifying by six points. I feel if the rest of the team was there, I would have been more psyched for the race."

Teammate MaryEllen McGowan also attacked the challenging course to place 67th in the highly competitive field.

It had rained for the five days prior to race day. Consequently, the unfavorable conditions affected the harrier's race strategy.

McGowan commented, "The course was really slippery. Therefore, I was forced to go out at a slower pace than usual. I found it hard to make up the difference later on in the race."

Coach Bob Shoudt said he was satisfied with the Wildcats performances.

" Only three individuals qualified from Division I Regionals and Villanova produced two of those qualifiers."

. . .And a Marathon Win

By BEVERLY REILLY

Villanova's Olympic hope, Jan Yerkes, won the Philadelphia Independence Marathon last Sunday in record time.

For many athletes, completing the 26-mile course is an accomplishment. But for Yerkes, it is a natural.

Yerkes, who was ranked fifth in the country last year, crossed the finish line in 2:34.27. The 5-3 ninety-five pound runner not only broke the course record by five minutes, but also set a new Pennsylvania state record.

Yerkes said, "Considering the cold rainy weather, I was real happy with my time. It was a personal best."

Channel 3 covered parts of the race as Yerkes, wearing her Villanova signet, tore up the course.

"I was proud to run for Villanova. I have become a better all-round runner since training at Villanova and I'm glad to give the school the recognition it deserves. It was great to hear the crowds yell — 'Go Villanova!'"

Cross country standout Brian O'Keeffe goes through a rigorous workout in preparation for the NCAA Championships.

Mudgang Makes Clean Sweep

By LAUREN SEAVER

While the guys battled it out on e football field, were the girls nd cheering on the sidelines? s, but when the guys were fin-d, the girls did not hesitate to charge of the field. The en's intramural football ue attracted about 600 Villan-women to comprise 32 teams the 1982 season.

its third year, the women's e has become very popular. y teams had male coaches provided their teams with booke. On the sidelines, hes could be found shouting eir players and arguing with referees as though coaching a ssional team. "Coaching was t," said Tony Sementalli one e Brutal Bunch coaches. "We just as upset as the girls we lost. I'm definitely coach-next year." Many of the en's teams could be seen ticing daily. And when it down to game time, the girls ed to be every bit as tough as guys.

This year there was a better it in the women's football gue," commented senior Mary ise Willcox, vice-president of Intramural Department and President of Women's Intramurals. "The girls knock each other out but they have fun. Last year was a lot more violent." As both coach and referee , Chris Tierney felt that the girls seemed to play with more intensity than the guys. "They weren't afraid of contact. I saw some good hits."

The women's football season culminated on Nov. 7 on the turf at the championship game. During the preceeding week, such teams as the Supremes, TKD, the Beavers, the Straycats, the Mighty Mates, the Hoons, the Mudgang and Butts Babes competed in quarter and semi-final games. The Beavers and the Mudgang ruled the playoffs to face each other on championship turf.

With a large and anxious crowd looking on, the Beavers commenced the game with a kick-off to the Mudgang. Though both made strong showings, neither team tallied any scoring in the first half.

The second half spelled victory for the Mudgang. With their exceptional defense, the Mudgang held the Beavers for two goalline stances and two interceptions. Junior quarterback Annie Hannigan ran for the second touchdown. Beth Hannigan clinched the 13-0 victory for the Mudgang with her catch for the extra point.

Thus, the Mudgang won the 1982 Women's Intramural Football Championship. Amazingly enough, this team had neither a coach nor one practice. According to the team, Annie Hahmigan was the quarterback, the captain, the coach and the general manager for the Mudgang. In the huddle, Annie would simply designate to her teammates in the palm of her hand their positions and where to run. "Since we passed 90 percent of our plays we didn't need any practice. Our defense is strong but we didn't have any special defensive positions," said Annie. This accounts for the Mudgang's unpredictable strategy. "We were unpredictable because we were unorganized," said junior Jennifer Cryor.

According to Beth Hannigan, the Mudgang was terrible last year. "We didn't know what offense and defense was," said Hannigan. "The Mudgang never took football too seriously. We were out there for fun," said Sister Annie. "We never expected to win."

Much of the team's success is due to the girls' natural athletic ability. When asked who was the most valuable player, all fingers pointed to quarterback Hannigan. The girls also named key receivers Hurley and Sharon "Chex" Checchi team MVP's.

The Beavers are also an exceptional team. Known for the raw talent that they possess, the Beavers lost their second championship game. Last year, they yielded to the Supremes for the title. In the two years that they have played, the Beaver's overall record is 16-2-1. The only two losses incurred by the team were in the championship game.

The Beavers attribute their success to their coaches, seniors Jim Jacen and Tony Tracchio. Though they had few practices, the Beavers had many complicated plays. Tracchio, a former Villanova football player, even provided the Beavers with several plays from the former Villanova team. According to junior captain Ellen McCormick, "We wouldn't have made it without our coaches."

At the championship game, the Beavers came very close to scoring several times. "Their defense was unbelievable," said McCormick. Unfortunately for the Beavers, two of their key defensive backs were unable to play in the championship game. According to McCormick, running back Laura "Micki" Maykish was the key offensive player.

Moon Unit Zaps Dick's Leftovers

By LARRY GOANOS

The grueling Villanova men's intramural football season finally came to its climax on November 19 with the championship game between Dick's Leftovers and the undefeated Moon Unit. A Villanova Stadium crowd of 250 people saw the powerful Moon Unit prevail over their opponents by a convincing score of 21-6.

"They were one of the, if not the, toughest teams that we've faced all year," said Moon Unit defensive tackle Pete Anninos after a long afternoon of slugging it out in the trenches. "I expected a much easier game," the junior added.

The Moon Unit had polished off G.B.U., 14-0, in the semi-finals to gain the championship berth. Dick's Leftovers also rode a 14-0 victory into the finals, their win coming at the expense of the Wallbangers.

The Moon Unit opened the scoring with a 45 yard touchdown strike from quarterback Dennis Driscoll to Andy Woznak. Both defenses toughened up after that play as the half ended with the Moon Unit clinging to a slim 6-0 lead.

In the last half the undefeated Moon Unit proved to be too much for the Leftovers, however, as they exploded for two more touchdowns and a safety. John Criqui supplied one of the scores for the Unit with a 10 yard TD run, while junior Mike Scalzo managed to break away for a 25 yard scoring gallop. Dick's Leftovers answered with a 5 yard quarterback bootleg by senior Bob Loscalzo, which was to be their only score of the afternoon.

"We really wanted this one," said an exuberant Scalzo following the final gun." Last year as sophomores we went all the way to the championship before losing to Athlete's Foot. This year we were more experienced so we knew what to expect. It was a great team effort."

Dick's Leftovers, a team comprised mainly of former Villanova football players who were coached by Dick Bedesem, had been touted as the team to beat during the early stages of the season, but two losses quickly sobered them before they finally made their run at the championship.

As for the Moon Unit, only one senior is on the team so they fully expect to be back in orbit again next year. " Now that we're the champs we'll have to work extra hard to repeat next season," concluded Anninos.

Cats Crush Colgate In Opener

Kentucky Next Opponent

By JOE MARUSAK

They've said a lot of things about the Villanova Wildcat basketball team this year.

They have told us, for instance, that the Cats are one of the top five teams in the country. This is the year, they've said. Albuquerque all the way.

Now, all of this pre-season talk has come to an end. The regular season has begun.

It started off Sunday evening, and although there are still a few things they must work on, maybe, just maybe, the Wildcats will live up to the predictions.

Villanova opened its 1982-83 season Nov. 28 at the Field House with an 83-63 victory over the Colgate Red Raiders.

"It was a typical first game," said Head Coach Rollie Massimino several minutes after the victory. "I saw some nice things and some things we have to work on."

For one, the Cats weren't their past selves off the boards. "I was disappointed in our rebounding," Massimino related.

There might have been a reason for that. His name was Rob Giordano, a Colgate guard. He shot 8 of 14 and led all scorers with 18 points.

But there was one other thing. As Massimino pointed out, "our half-court traps weren't very effective."

Fortunately for Villanova, these are minor problems. And hopefully they will be worked out — by tomorrow. That's when they play Kentucky at Lexington in front of a national audience.

"By game time (Saturday)," said Dwayne McClain in the locker room after Sunday's contest, "we'll be ready."

The Wildcats will indeed be ready if McClain continues at the rate he's going. The 6'6" sophomore guard sparked Nova to a 21 point halftime lead against Colgate by scoring nine points, assisting on two and stealing three balls.

"I tried to step into the pocket more," Clain explained. "But my first priority is to get it into the big men."

In that first half, things were close for about nine minutes. Then Villanova took command.

With 8:57 remaining, it was really no longer a contest. Gary McLain's and John Pinone's free throws made the score 25-14. 14 points in a row followed. Colgate was slowly sinking.

Even after all that though, the Raiders remained true to their game plan under first-year coach Tony Relvas.

"This team was deliberate," said Massimino in reference to Colgate. "They executed well (and) . . . made us shoot the ball over them."

But Villanova, despite 14 turnovers in the game, held true to form also. In the second half, they didn't seem to mind the unhurried Raider pace. V.U. still managed to score 34 points over the final 20 minutes.

And almost everyone on the team contributed. Scoring was evenly distributed. Stew Granger led the team with 16 points. McClain, the first-half star, finished with 11.

A pleasant surprise for Coach Massimino was Granger's fellow point guard, Gary McLain. "I thought Gary was very active," the head coach asserted. "He's a spark plug. And he directed traffic."

So next comes Kentucky, another group of Wildcats. Is there pressure?

Massimino doesn't think so. For last year's Big East Coach of the Year, something else is more important. "I think they (V.U.) still have to build up to how good they're going to be.

"We have certain goals we want to reach. We have to live up to them."

REBOUNDS: Villanova has not lost an opening game since 1962, when Princeton conquered the Cats, 68-53 . . . Pinone, this year's center of attention, broke his string of 40 consecutive double-digit games. He had nine points

"It was a typical first game. I saw some nice things and some things we have to work on ...we have certain goals we want to reach. We have to live up to them."

Icecat Win Streak Ended

By TOM KOLON

The Villanova hockey team's winning skein came to a screeching halt just before Thanksgiving break.

On Thursday, the Icecats only tied Drexel, 1-1, at the UPenn rink, and then they dropped decisions to St. John's, 4-3 in overtime, and 7-4 to archrival Delaware.

Thursday night's game was rampant with excessive penalties and apparently questionable officiating. Over 20 fouls were called, of which Villanova had more than their share in a match that was uncontrolled by the refs. Jim Ragold notched a goal for Villanova in the first period, and it appeared as if it would remain that way until Drexel flipped in a shot midway through the final period.

Villanova left the UPenn campus stifled with only a 1-1 tie even though they outshot their opponents, 42-21. Drexel had their goalie to thank for the game, as he came up with some extremely clutch saves.

On Saturday afternoon, the Icecats traveled to New York to face St. John's in an NCAA Division III matchup. The squad jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first period on goals by Frank Segreto — featuring the first career assist by goalie Don Clark — and also by Bob Giordano.

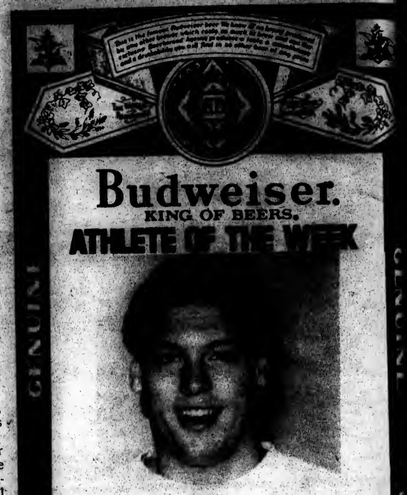
In the second period, the Cats added another tally by John Canuso, but St. John's crawled back into the game as they popped in two of their own. St. John's finally notched the game at three-all to send it into overtime. Villanova let up, however, after the tough three periods, and allowed St. John's to score again and win the game, 4-3.

The Icecats returned home to the Havertown Skatium the next day but didn't find the confines too friendly. Once again, the squad was ravaged by penalties (18 min. to 8 min. for Delaware) and this time they paid dearly for them. Delaware converted five of the eight Villanova penalties into goals.

Following tallies by John Padova and Jim Ragold, Villanova watched a 2-1 lead in the first period get washed down the drain as Delaware scored on four more power plays to surge ahead to an insurmountable lead. Goals by John Canuso and Mike Bufano made the score look reasonable, but Delaware still emerged a 7-4 victor.

After the 0-2-1 weekend, captain Segreto noted that for some reason "the guys' hearts just weren't in the games. We really have to get our act together before we face Upsala (a Division III opponent) and the Wissahickon men's team, which beat us last year."

Hopefully, the short break has given the team time to recuperate and Villanova will once again be on the winning track.



By TOM REUSCHE

In the season-opener for men's swimming on Nov. 26, Dan Nies did more than make waves. The sophomore swimmer set three Georgetown McCarthy pool records, as Villanova easily toppled Georgetown and Connecticut. Nies finished last season as the men's swimming MVP, and opens the 1982-83 campaign as the Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Nies finished first in the 200-freestyle, 200-butterfly and 400-freestyle in the respective record times of 2:00.84, 2:10.6 and 4:20.9.

"I was really psyched," said Nies, "because it was our first meet of the year. They were really good times for me, close to my lifetime best."

Nies' summer training program was cut short by a bout with tendonitis. As his recent performances show however, he is now doing just fine. Swimming Coach Ed Geisz feels Nies' competitive spirit can overcome any battle.

"Dan is without a doubt a great competitor," explained Geisz. "That's the greatest compliment you can give a guy.

"He's very coachable. He'll do anything to win a meet for the team. All he wants to do is win," he added.

As the season continues, Geisz feels the Dean's List student will bring bad news to many Big East foes.

A former New Jersey resident, Nies now calls Houston home. He first entered the water at age six. One year later he was competing.

"It was something I wanted to do," said Nies. "I played baseball and football, but I liked swimming the best."

Urged by his high school coach, Nies visited Villanova. He chose the Main Line campus "because I liked the coaches, the people and the school. I was pretty sure when I came here this was the place."

Nies places his team first, but as for himself, "by my senior year, my ultimate goal is to make the NCAA

Covenant Campaign Discussed

By LINDA BOND

The executive committees of the Board of Trustees and the University Senate met Nov. 9 to discuss progress in the Covenant II Campaign and related projections for the future direction of the university.

President John Driscoll, O.S.A., spoke first and announced the approval of John Murphy, an alumnus of the class of 1951, as campaign chairman. Murphy is a lawyer and past president and CO officer of the Miller Brewing Company.

Driscoll said a lot of preliminary activity for the Covenant Campaign has taken place in preparation for initiation of the campaign shortly after the New Year. The Board of Trustees solicitation is underway. "Consultants in fundraising, Marts and Lundy, have been retained and campaign literature is being prepared," he said.

"The goal of the Campaign is $20 million," stated Driscoll. "To reach the goal successfully requires that 90 percent of the monetary goal can be donated by about 10 percent of the donors and it is extremely important that major contributions be received from a relatively few people."

He also said that the Covenant II Campaign involved a time period of probably three to five years. "It will end when the goal is reached. Three to five year pledges are sought from contributors; it will probably end five years from now," said Driscoll.

The Covenant I Campaign was initiated in 1975 and its first phase financed the Connelly Center.

The purpose of the Covenant II Campaign is to raise money for the capital expenditures in the Computer Science program, modernization of the Engineering labs, the proposed athletic complex, intramural basketball areas, modernization of the olympic-size pool, and proposed dormitories and dining facilities.

Driscoll went on to say that there will be a decline of 25 percent in the college age pool that will develop between 1980 and 1995. He said some colleges will "be going out of business" and that those surviving will be the academically strong. Driscoll also pointed out the need to accommodate students with on-campus residency.

He said that the build-up of tenured faculty in the face of a declining student enrollment is not desirable, and that early retirement and natural attrition might be a solution to this problem. "This is not a completely satisfactory solution," stated Driscoll. "The whole problem is at a sort of impasse."

The question of a possible lack of funds for financial aid to students from the Federal Government and a coping strategy was addressed. Driscoll said that no specific strategy was planned by the university, but that, "every effort will be made to keep the tuition in line, reduce overhead (with cutbacks) and every attempt possible will be made to increase financial aid to students."

Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the executive committee of the Board of Trustees, added that "inflation has been brought down and this helps keep tuition increases down."

Concerning academic programs, McCarthy said, "The needs of the students will determine the academic programs for the next five to ten years. The popularity of certain programs run in cycles in tandem with the availability of jobs at the time . . . There is a pitfall in building facilities and facilities for certain disciplines and then the need for them declines . . . The Board of Trustees has to be sensitive to the needs and demands but also to watch carefully the trends of supply and demand."

McCarthy also said he felt it was necessary that the faculty become aware of the needs of the University and assist the Development Office by seeking funds.

"The goal of the Campaign is $20 million. To reach the goal . . .it is extremely important that major contributions be received from a relatively few people."

— President John Driscoll, O.S.A.

New Pedestrian Crossing For St. Mary's Traffic

By TIM HANLON

Approval has been granted for the installation of a traffic light located between the present traffic light on the corner of County Line Road and Sproul Road (Rt. 320), and the bridge over the Paoli Line. Concern for the safety of students crossing Rt. 320 between the train station and St. Mary's encouraged the introduction of the proposal. There have been minor accidents in the past and several reports by neighbors of the dangerous situation.

Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A., director of planning, said that about 14,000 vehicles cross over the bridge and pass the crossing zone at relatively high speeds. Approximately 300 students live at St. Mary's, and over 1,000 attend class there. Students cross over Sproul Rd. very close to the bridge and enter St. Mary's grounds through an open gate. When the new traffic light operates, the old gate will be closed and a new one will be opened near the light.

The location was chosen because it allows enough stopping distance and sight distance for students to cross safely. There will be a three-way intersection at St. Mary's entrance and Sproul Road. Financing for the actual light itself will come from the Radnor Township Capital Budget.

New Fall Break Proposed

By JACK McHUGH

A new fall break for Villanova has been proposed by Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, vice-president for academic affairs. Gallen submitted the idea to the Calendar Committee which passed it by a vote of 9-0-4.

This committee is an extension of the University Senate, where the proposal will go next if it is passed by the Academic Affairs Committee. If the Senate passes it, it then will go to President Driscoll for final approval.

Even if passed, this proposal would not take effect until the school year of 1984-85 because the calendar for the next school year (1983-84) has already been passed. It is not substantively different from the present schedule.

The main change introduced by this fall break would be students returning a week earlier than usual, according to Gallen, the last week of August. "Nothing else would really change because," said Gallen, "the university would still be required to have the same number of class days as it does now."

Gallen proposed this idea because he felt that the present fall semester is too long. Gallen feels this is due to a lack of an extended break between Labor Day and Thanksgiving break. In Gallen's opinion, "Both students and faculty are too drained by the time Thanksgiving rolls around."

Gallen was also surprised by the ease with which the idea passed the Calendar Committee. He felt that since the committee represented a good cross-section of the university, dissenting opinions would surely surface there. Yet there were no votes against the idea. Gallen takes this as a hopeful sign that it will be passed by the Academic Policy Committee and the full Senate. However, he stated that he had "no idea" of the chances of the fall break proposal in either group.

As for the break itself Gallen had several ideas on it, saying the university could "have it as a block of a week, like spring break, or cut it down to just a few days and let everyone go a few days earlier at the end."

Career Conference

The 17th annual Columbus Area Careers is scheduled for Dec. 21 from 1-5 p.m. at Capital University, Pleasant Ridge Avenue, Columbus, Ohio. This one-day "Job Fair" will permit employers to exhibit career information about their companies. Students will have the opportunity to make contact with a variety of employers without committing to conference-site interviews. This Career Conference provides excellent exposure for students graduating from two-and four-year institutions of higher education between Aug. 1, 1982 and Dec. 31, 1983 at no cost. Students are strongly encouraged to bring resumes for distribution.

The "Job Fair" will be open for registration at 1 p.m. In addition, workshops on resume writing, interviewing, job campaign strategies and identifying alternatives to corporate employment will be held throughout the afternoon.

The Columbus Area Careers Conference is sponsored by the Personnel Society of Columbus, Central Ohio Personnel Association and the Columbus Area College Placement Consortium. For further information, contact your college placement office or call (614) 236-6573.

Attn: Seniors

This is a final reminder for students who expect to graduate in December 1982 or May 1983: If you have not returned a completed "Prospective Graduate" card to the Registrar's Office, 202 Tolentine Hall, you should do so before Dec. 22, the last day of the fall semester final exams. These cards are essential to let the Registrar know exactly how your name should appear on your diploma and in the commencement program, and they must be filled out by Dec. 22.

Study Abroad Workshop

On Jan. 24 at 4 p.m. in 201 St. Thomas, there will be a workshop for anyone interested in studying abroad. This workshop will feature a panel of students who have attended a European university to answer questions you have and to discuss their experiences. Sponsored by the French Club.

Study Seminar

The Counseling Center will sponsor a study seminar to assist students in developing and extending their study skills. They will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Topics include: Preparing a Daily Activity Schedule/Daily Study Schedule (Jan. 27), SQ4r Method of Study (Feb. 1), Cornell System of Notetaking (Feb. 3) and Preparing for Exams (Feb. 8).

If you are interested in participating, please call the Counseling Center (645-4050) since the seminars will be limited to 15 students a session.

Lost: Mailbox

A resident of Curwen Road, not the owner, offers a $50 reward for the return of a beige mailbox, handpainted with a Drake mallard duck, that was stolen the weekend of Nov. 13 and 14. The return of the mailbox is critical to community relations. The mailbox can be returned to the Student Government Office in 204 Dougherty.

RUSH Application

Dec. 15 is the deadline for RUSH applications and fees. RUSH applications may be picked up and dropped off at the Student Activities office on the second floor of Dougherty. A mandatory meeting for all women interested in RUSH will be held on Jan. 20. The fee for registration goes up from $3 to $5 after Dec. 15.

Attn: Organization Leaders

Attention all organization leaders: If you are interested in participation in a second semester activities forum, contact Tom Belmont in the Villanova Union Office (x7280) by Dec. 20.

Student Chairperson

The Dean of Students Office is pleased to announce the appointment of Ms. Jennifer-Ann Cryor to the position of Student Chairperson for the 1983 New Student Orientation Program. She may be reached by directing messages to the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall, ext. 4200.

Administrative Coordinator

The Dean of Students Office is now accepting applications for the position of Administrative Coordinator for the 1983 Orientation program. Applications and position announcements, describing requirements and responsibilities are available in the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall. FILING DEADLINE: Monday, Dec. 13, 5 p.m.

Vita Program

The Internal Revenue Service is seeking members of civic, fraternal, church or social organizations to participate in its Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program.

The purpose of the VITA program is to provide free assistance to low income, elderly and non-English speaking taxpayers who cannot afford professional help in preparing their 1982 income tax forms.

Volunteers will be given free instructions by the IRS in the preparation of personal income tax forms. The Volunteers will then set up "sites" where members of their organizations or community can come for help.

The instruction lasts three days and will be provided in various Eastern Pennsylvania cities during the months of December and January. A volunteer does not need any special background in math, accounting or law. Individuals participating in VITA are not considered professional tax preparers and are not held legally responsible for the return.

Persons or organizations interested in participating in this community service should contact Lyndel Brown by calling toll-free, 1-800-464-4000, extension 0512. In Philadelphia, the number is 597-0512.

Readers Needed

We have a golden opportunity for volunteering right here on Villanova's campus. Readers are needed to help a blind teacher. This volunteering opportunity would require time to read material and would be done here at Villanova. A few friends could get together and share the time. If you are interested, call Sr. Joy or Mrs. Hansen at the Social Action Office, 645-4075 or stop in 121 Tolentine.

Photographer Needed

Anyone interested in working as a photographer for the "Freshman Record" for second semester, please come up to the Villanova Union office.

Rosary

The Rosary is prayed at 7 p.m. in Corr Hall chapel Monday through Thursday. This is in fulfillment to our Lady of Fatima's request of the three children to whom she appeared six times in 1917. She said that "only she can bring peace."

Operation Identification

All residents are encouraged to take advantage of this security program. Engravers for personal items are available through the Resident Student Association. Check with your Hall Council Representatives for details. Remember — Christmas break is around the corner — be safe!

Christmas Drive

The Social Action Office will accept all donations of money, food and clothing in their annual Christmas Drive. Every year the office answers requests from the agencies and organizations at which its students do volunteer work. This year all food and clothing will be shared with a group in inner-city Philadelphia. The food and clothing will enable families to pay their rent and utilities while depending on donations of food and clothing. All money collected will go to the state hospital patients who have no source of income. All money (any amount), food (non-perishable) and clothing (clean) can be donated at the Social Action Office, 121 Tolentine.

Christmas Balls For Sale

Panhell is selling Christmas balls for $4 until Dec. 14. All sororities will be selling the Christmas ornaments to raise money for Special Olympics. Find a sorority sister on campus to purchase one.

Planetarium Show

The Planetarium Show, "The Star of Christmas," will be presented on Dec. 10 and Dec. 17 at 7:30 p.m. The planetarium is located on the fourth floor of Mendel Hall. Admission is free, but seating is limited.

Political Union

The Political Union will hold election of officers on Monday, Dec. 13 at 7:30 p.m. in the Wayne-St. David's rooms of the Connelly Center.

Aerobics

The Dance Club will have pre-registration for the Aerobics class next semester. Registration will be Monday and Tuesday from 12:45 to 1:30 p.m. in the West Lounge in Dougherty. Come and sign up or just come for more information. The cost is $40 for a 10-week class.

Villanova Singers

On Saturday, Dec. 11 the Villanova Singers and the Women's Glee Club will present a celebration of the Christmas season in their annual Christmas concert. The performance will be held in Villanova's Main Chapel beginning at 8 p.m. Admission is free and all are welcome.

Wildcat Investment Club

The Investment Club will hold a meeting today, Friday, Dec. 10 at 5 p.m. the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The speaker is our stock broker Steve Gitter from Drexel, Burnham, Lambert. Schedules for next semester's meetings will be distributed.

Pittsburghers Arise!

On Wednesday night, Jan. 12, at 8 p.m., Villanova battles Pitt at the Pitt Field House. Tickets for this game are now available at the V.U. Field House ticket office. There will be a reception the day of the game for all Villanovans. For further information contact Jim Kaczynski or Bill Parker at 525-9303, Rooms 344-43, Sullivan.

Spring Semester Trips

As you know, the Graduate School office and the Graduate Student Council have for several years sponsored trips during the mid-term break during the spring semester. Some of the most successful have been to Bermuda and Hawaii.

This year we have three choices:

(1) BERMUDA — Monday, Feb. 28 to Friday, March 4 — $429 + $40 Tax & Services

(2) CANCUN — Sunday, Feb. 27 to Sunday, March 6 — $399 + 15 percent Tax & Services

(3) HAWAII — Saturday, Feb. 26 to Sunday, March 6 — $645 + 15 percent Tax & Services

The cost includes round-trip airfare from Philadelphia International Airport, transfers, baggage handling and gratuities, and accommodations. The Bermuda price also includes full breakfast, tea and dinner each day and all gratuities to hotel personnel, including the dining room.

If interested please get in touch with the Graduate Office (Extension 7090). There is a deadline of Dec. 17 for a $100 deposit.

Bon Voyage.

Quebec Ski Trip

Spend spring break in Quebec, Canada. A ski/culture trip will be held from Feb. 26 to March 2. The cost is only $199 and includes lodging at the contemporary Loews Le Concorde.

For more information, come to the "Pre-Trip Orientation" on Monday, Dec. 13 at 4 p.m. in 201 St. Thomas or contact Dr. Mondeau in 212 St. Thomas. Sponsored by the modern language department. All are welcome.

Italy Trip

A reminder to those intending to go to Italy over the Spring semester vacation that the $100 deposit is due by Dec. 20.

The price of $911 includes round-trip airfare; three nights and four days in Rome; three nights and four days in Florence; two nights and two days in Venice; city tours of Rome and Florence; privately designed tours of the Vatican Galleries, the Uffizi Galleries, and San Marco; taxes; transfers throughout Italy; and breakfast and dinner.

The trip is being jointly conducted by Dr. Sterling Delano, English, and Dr. George Radan, art and art history. Contact Dr. Delano at 645-4655 for further information, or leave word in Vasey Hall.

Florida/Bahamas

Finals are here, papers are due and Christmas shopping is pending . . . Get relief! You ask how? Villanova's Florida and Bahamas trips, of course. Nothing relieves the pressure like long days of basking in the sun and long nights of dancing and partying fun. Each package has a lot of extras at a once-in-a-lifetime price. If financing is still a problem, put down the $50 deposit on your own and ask Santa for the balance. Deposits are due in the Connelly Center Ticket Office by Dec. 21. Sponsored by the Villanova Union.

Take a Study Break

Need a break from studying? The R.S.A. is sponsoring coffee and donuts during exams. The Day Hop will be open on Tuesday, Dec. 14; Wednesday, Dec. 15; Thursday, Dec. 16; and Sunday, Dec. 19 from 9 p.m. till midnight. Stop by and relax for a while!

Greek Rules Reviewed

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The administration has "looked into" a policy or program for off-campus greek parties, according to Assistant Director of Student Activities Gary H. Bonas.

"There is a concern for the alcohol abuse and the greek organizations are the most social groups on campus," said Bonas. "We have to discuss what we can do to help

If any proposal were to be made, the use of restrictions would be as little as possible and the fraternities and sororities would be able to make up their mind on a policy based on good sound judgment said Bonas.

"Nothing to bar or do away with the greek system has been proposed among the administration but that is not to say that if a particular organization acts in violation or acts out of control that action will not be taken against them," according to Rev. John Stacks, dean of students. "The group must be able to willing be accountable for their actions."

"As far as off campus parties, we care and are concerned about the drinking. There is a question as to the fact of whether the parties can legally be regulated at all and even if so, another problem is enforcement," said Stack.

The administration can put restrictions on off-campus parties and if violated can say "We will cease to recognize you as an organization on campus," said Bonas.

As a goal, a solution considered would be based on an honor system to inflict a greater responsibility in drinking among the students, according to Bonas and Stack.

"There is no doubt that the administration is looking very hard on the greek system," said Bonas. "The greeks are being scrutinized strongly now. They (the administration) are concerned as to how the greeks fit into Villanova's goals and values."

Villanova's goal, based on the University's mission statement, is community life. "The greek systems are built upon origins of spiritual and fraternal growth. They do bring us closer to our ambitions," said Stack.

"I believe they generate spirit and I see them as a great potential," Stack continued. Stack referred to the recent Greek Weekend held before Thanksgiving break as an example of the spirit and organization of the greeks.

Through the social service projects, Stack said he realized the importance of the greeks but "on the other hand, that does not mean all they do is in good judgment and sensible. The school and neighborhood is given support especially through the fraternity and sorority service projects but by some few members their actions bring down the whole group."

The greek system includes 13 percent of Villanova students. "The fraternities and sororities are very strong, as individual groups and collectively in the Panhellenic and IFC," said Bonas.

Growth in the number of chapters on campus is not predicted to increase in the near future, but an increase in the number of members is expected to rise. "We would like to concentrate on the quality of what we have now,"

Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students said Bonas.

Stack also would rather improve and expand the greek groups on campus "to make sure what we have on campus now is operating the best."

Villanova has the most number of fraternities and sororities of any other Catholic College. "Other Catholic colleges refuse to even consider the subject of a greek system," said Stack.

Although Villanova's greek members are in the process of compiling a group grade point average, other schools have reported that their greek organizations on a whole have a higher grade point average than the average student, according to Bonas.

Residence Life Conducts Survey

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Office of Residence Life is conducting its second annual residence life survey. This year's evaluations should show a marked improvement in "a better sense of communication among hall members," according to the Director of Residence Life Christopher M. Janosik. The dissatisfaction of resident hall programs projected in the past survey caused the concentrated effort in the social program area among the resident assistants this year.

An extensive report is drawn from the survey responses. The report, sent to the Board of Trustees and to various members of the administration, serves as a direct response from the students.

The survey is divided into statistical results for each resident assistant and each hall. Responses are also statistically figured separately for sexes and age. "There is a significant difference in the dissatisfactions of a freshman as compared to a senior," said Janosik.

In the report, a statistical figure of dissatisfaction in one area from a specific dorm is compared to the residents dissatisfaction on a whole. "From this type of direct statistical comparison, we are able to see any major discontent among residents of a particular dorm that is not obviously apparent," said Janosik.

"There is always a dissatisfaction projected from everyone in the area of alcohol and visitation," said Janosik, "but the survey last year did give us new insight to some of the less perceptible needs of the residents.

"We are anxious to learn what the students want," said Janosik. "We will use the information to direct us." As a result of responses from last year's survey, new furniture and carpeting was a priority in improvements scheduled. Lofts in St. Rita's were constructed to help alleviate the problem of limited space.

"Still, there is no doubt that Fedigan, Sullivan and Sheehan are in need of new furnishings and Corr is extremely limited by size," said Janosik. "The need of lounges and expansion are obvious.

"In the dorms with the adverse conditions, the residents usually project concerns in safety and security, which reflects physical dissatisfaction of their hall," said Janosik. "In better living conditions, the residents usually show dissatisfaction in policies."

Evaluative comments on the

staff last year reflected the resident assistants as being fair and consistent with regard to policy enforcement. "I was very pleased with the attitude toward the resident assistants," said Janosik.

In the past, occasional attempts have been made for special interest housing. "I have heard of attempts of academic halls where quiet hours may be more strictly enforced and there has always been talk of foreign language houses," said Janosik, "but we have absolutely no idea if current residents are interested in this."

"We have a lot of neat small houses on campus so the opportunity is there to put those with the same interest together," said Janosik.

Smaller Schools Reviving Football

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

Villanova is just one of several schools considering the possible restoration of a football program to counter the predicted decline in private school enrollment.

Eugene Ruane, director of public relations

According to an article published by the College Press Service, a number of smaller schools have recently moved toward reviving their "once-disgraced football programs, despite high costs and academic scandals."

Villanova Director of Public Relations Eugene Ruane was quoted as saying that "the notion of having a football team is more attractive because we're seeing that it's possible to have a winning team and fine academics at the same time."

Ruane said that it cost the University around $600,000 a year to fund the team before the sport was dropped in April, 1981. Ruane also cited the results of the recent student survey that indicated 96 percent of the students would be willing to pay an additional $35 per year to resurrect the program.

"When 90 percent of the students agree they'd be willing to support football to that extent, the administration and alumni get very impressed," Ruane said. "Right now we're working on ways of funding and underwriting a team."

One school that has approved the revival of football is Kentucky Wesleyan, which will field a football team for the first time in 51 years next season.

Athletic Director Mike Pollio said that the main reason the school is bringing back the program "is to help counter the predicted 15 percent decline in private school enrollment over the next few years."

"We're hoping to attract students who weren't quite good enough to get into a bigger program but who still want to play football," said Pollio. "And we're counting on the program to attract satellite enrollment: cheerleaders, girlfriends of players, and students who simply want a school with a football team."

An attempt to bring back football at the University of California-Santa Barbara failed after students narrowly voted down a ballot measure that would tax them $10.50 a year to fund a Division III football team.

The program was dropped in 1972 due to a poor winning record and a lack of student interest.

UCSB Athletic Director Don Drosher told CPS that he has no regrets over the defeat of the football vote and isn't optimistic that the school will have any kind of football program in the future.

Greeks Face Rules

"The experience of personal relationships is important in a well rounded education and the greek system enhances the development of this aspect in a student," said Stack.

"Greek life forms a type of community at Villanova where a student can find a group to identify with. You search for a group that fits your personality and a special bond of friendship forms," said Kathy Hennebary, president of Kappa Kappa Gamma. "Through the Rush program, a student has the opportunity to find the fraternity or sorority which he or she belongs to."

A fraternity, according to Chris Polk, president of Delta Kappa Epsilon, is a way for a student to get involved in the school. "Some students join a sport or a club, but a fraternity is a unique way because you still belong after you graduate. A frat is a place you can come back to and still identify with.

A greek group is something to be identified with and be proud of. It is a group to be a part of while here at school and as an alumni," said Polk.

The fact that greek students would have parties whether or not they were in a sorority or fraternity was emphasized by Hennebary and Polk. Any regulation of the parties regarded as an infringement on the greeks would depend on how it was enacted. Both presidents also feel that any regulation would have to be self regulated with an honor system basis.

Freind is disappointed in the social acceptance of the argument; "I am against abortion, but every one has a right to choose." This argument leads the other side to mark us as a moral majority," Freind continued.

Freind questioned the future of any society which kills the making of their presence. "Every year we permit the killing of one and a half million unborn children. Four hundred thousand possible students are lost to abortions, and in turn teachers are out of jobs. Economically, abortions are hurting the United States." Freind was quick to add, "But you cannot put a price on human life."

President Reagan, a supporter of the Pro-Life movement, has been invited to join in the march. Pope Paul has also been sent an invitation to join in the March For Life.

R.S.A. Engraves Valuables

By LINDA BOND

Electric engravers are being lent to resident students in a program called Operation Identification sponsored by the Resident Student Association.

In this program, residents are encouraged to borrow an engraver from the R.S.A. and imprint their driver's license number on those items they would like to protect from theft.

Villanova's security office keeps one copy of an inventory card of items which were engraved and the resident keeps a second copy.

If stolen property is recovered, a license number will identify the owner.

The R.S.A. purchased two engravers, said Marianne Clark, vice president of the R.S.A., as a service to the school. "It is totally a precaution. T.V.'s, stereos, calculators and personal refrigerators are all great things to engrave," Clark said. The engravers will be available at every dormitory once before the holiday semester break and interested students should contact their dormitory presidents for the service.

Commenting on the security of the dormitories over vacation periods, Sgt. John J. Harrity, acting director of the Security department, said, "For the last two years we have either been lucky or we are doing something right. There have been minor incidents of theft on campus, but no major problems."

Harrity said that for extended holiday periods security normally chains and locks hall doors. They also change the core key. Harrity added that this past Thanksgiving dormitories were not closed because residents were living in all the halls.

According to Harrity, the last notable incident of theft on campus which was reported to their office occurred three to four years ago. He said the doors of Austin Hall were broken out of their frame and T.V.'s were stolen.

"Prior to Austin Hall's robbery, six to eight years ago, a man was convicted of stealing typewriters on campus," said Harrity. The man's actions were uncovered when an engraved identification number was discovered by a repair shop.

Harrity said he thought Operation Identification was "a good idea." "We've done that with typewriters for years. It's always been available for the offices and sometimes students would come in and Captain Cunnane would let them use the engraver too.

"At one time, the Radnor police use to take the serial numbers from bikes belonging to students. As far as I know, they still do it," he said.

The two engravers purchased by the R.S.A. will be kept in 215 Dougherty Hall.

Freind Supports March For Life

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

State Congressman Stephen Freind, a leader in the Pro-Life Movement, spoke Dec. 2 at the Villanova Law School in support of Anti-Abortion legislation and the need to educate the people on what abortion is.

The Villanovans for Life sponsored the meeting to inform and recruit people to join the March for Life in Washington, D.C. on Jan. 22.

The tenth annual March For Life is expecting 75,000 pro-life supporters to march from the White House to the Capital where the Representative and Senate members will be present.

The participants' goal is Human Life Status, which would give the Supreme Court an opportunity to reconsider the Roe vs. Wade decision handed down ten years ago which legalized abortion on demand. The ultimate goal for Pro-Life is an amendment with the right to life being from the moment of fertilization regardless of age, health or condition of dependency.

Defining abortion as the "killing of an unborn child," Freind emphasized that persons do not know exactly what an abortion is. "Many people think it is painless. Abortion is tremendously painful to the baby who can feel. The name of the game is education. If the facts are told we must win."

Ultimate victory for the anti-abortion supporters can only come from a House of Representative amendment. "Meanwhile, people on the state level must come up with legislation to restrict abortions," said Freind.

Through Democratic power on the state level, Freind has been involved in the bills passed to restrict abortions. In Pennsylvania, no longer can a minor receive an abortion without parental consent and any extraordinary means of abortion are illegal.

On Dec. 8, a bill is going through to require that a second physician who has nothing to do with the abortion be present to do everything in his power to keep the baby alive if it is breathing upon arrival. Freind is directly involved in these bills.

Priorities are set each year, and this year the goal is to eliminate all tax-funded abortions. "Compared to the 13 thousand tax-funded abortions in care of the life or health of a mother," according to Freind, "there would be only about 98 tax funded abortions if the circumstances were to cover all cases of rape, incest and concern for the life of the mother. As soon as the word health is brought in, it is used too broadly."

The use of pictures is a main tool in the anti-abortion campaign. "Once you look at the picture it clearly is not a picture of a fetus or a mass of tissues but a baby," said Freind. "I have never heard a logical argument for abortion. Pro-abortion supporters will use anything to get away from the facts by using technical language and terms," he added.

V.U. Students Assaulted

By DAVID POMA

Two female Villanova students were assaulted Nov. 28, according to Sgt. James Harrity, acting director for Security. The attack occurred at about 8 p.m. as the women, who are residents of Moriarty Hall, walked through the main parking lot on Lancaster Avenue, according to Harrity. They were on their way to the field house to see a basketball game.

A Villanova security guard was alerted by a telephone call from one of the women, both of whom apparently went on to the field house after the incident. The guard immediately called Radnor Police, and the authorities then contacted the women over the P.A. system at the field house. No money was taken, but one of the victims reported that the attacker stole her shoes.

Harrity is concerned about the lack of proof of any crime, since neither of the women was injured.

Villanova security was also informed that a couch and various other pieces of furniture were recently taken from a lounge in Moriarty Hall some time between 3 a.m. and 6 a.m.

Harrity expressed some concern over how this theft was reported by the residents of Moriarty. "The R.A. was told at about six in the morning, and we weren't notified until 7:30 that night. Why did they wait until over 12 hours later to report it?" said Harrity.

Harrity commented that it was unfair for people to complain about Villanova security, which he believes has "a great staff."

Covenant II Requires Effort

Villanova has undertaken the greatest risk in the University's 139-year history with the issuance of a $25 million bond issue to finance numerous capital expenditures, including the erection of new dormitories, a proposed new athletic complex, capital expenditures for improvement of academic programs and renovations of equipment. Villanova has begun its second major fundraising drive in seven years, Covenant Campaign II. The goal of the campaign is $20 million.

For this campaign to be successful, the Board of Trustees has set several goals and deadlines to meet the requirements necessary to refinance the bond issue. The University has hired a public relations firm to present Villanova in a "favorable light" and has appointed a well-qualified alumnus to serve as the campaign chairman. There remains, however, several areas in which Villanova can make marked improvements in its image presented to the outside world and possible campaign contributors.

Foremost, the Board of Trustees must eliminate any unnecessary deliberation on the merits of football at Villanova and give approval to the University to finance a football program on a small-division level. The resurrection of football would produce several major impacts. It would demonstrate the fulfillment of the unity of purpose among the various groups working to see the program reestablished. It would portray the Board of Trustees as a governing body willing to listen to reason. It would also recognize the importance of football as a means of generating public exposure that can provide a "significant positive contribution to the University" as evidenced by a committee study. Most importantly, it would demonstrate that Villanova is willing to review its past actions in an objective manner and introduce changes and revisions to meet new demands and needs.

The ties between the University and the Alumni must be renewed, strengthened and finally, appreciated. All past disagreements and wornout arguments must be forgotten. The Alumni must not be viewed solely as monetary contributors. All have passed through the higher education system at Villanova and can provide valuable input in deciding how Villanova can attain the highest level of prominence possible. Meetings have been held with various alumni groups concerning Covenant Campaign II; future communications must feature new ways of reestablishing a much-needed harmony if the campaign is to be successful.

Finally, student responsibility will allow the University to be seen in a positive perspective on the all-important local level. Many of the projects planned to be funded by the bond issue are dependent upon the approval of the plans by the surrounding community. More than half of the bond's allocated money will be spent on the proposed athletic complex and dormitories — projects that will affect a good number of Villanova's neighbors.

Stealing mailboxes, dumping trash on residents' lawns and scrawling obscenities on sidewalks does not impress the community; it certainly does not present Villanova in the desired favorable light. There can be repercussions from the community's impressions of Villanova students. Students must show responsibility not only in the classroom but in their relationships with neighbors.

The year 1983 will be crucial in predicting the future direction of Villanova. Approval of the campus expansion plans, the possible restoration of football and the public phase of Covenant Campaign II will require a substantial united effort on the part of all involved individuals to present Villanova in a "favorable light" and attain a prominent level in university status.

Substitute Motion Misconstrued

To the Editor:

Last week's editorial entitled "Athletics Motion a 'Slap in the Face' ", is a simple-minded reaction to a highly complex issue.

At the November University Senate meeting, the Senate approved a substitute motion in place of the original motion which had asked that the Board of Trustees reconsider their decision to drop football. The new motion asked the Board, among other things, to make a comprehensive review of the entire athletic program and to look at participation in an intercollegiate football program.

The Villanovan stated that the Senate "refused to stand firm . . . and approved a substitute motion that virtually ignored the presented evidence." In addition, the editorial went on to call the intent of the new motion "partial pacification of the various groups who are working to bring back football."

The Senate felt it was useless to ask the Trustees to reconsider their decision — it was a totally different situation we were in two years ago. Today, we have new evidence and new opportunities. It requires the Trustees to make a new decision — not to reconsider an old one. The substitute motion also included a review of the entire athletic program only because if one makes this review, it can be seen how football provides more to the University than many other sports.

It is amazing how intelligent people like our editors can misconstrue facts and twist them to produce a totally different picture. The Senate has worked very hard in order to begin the healing process which is needed among the alumni, administration, and students. The resolution is evidence of the Senate's progressiveness and maturity. It is disappointing that the editorial was not written in the same spirit.

The intensity of my reaction to this editorial is strong because I feel that to whom much is given, much is to be expected.

Mental Midgets

To the Editor:

The South Campus drainage improvements were an obvious reply to the question, "Where does our tuition money go?" Here, we saw the student government and the administration working cohesively to better the University. Now, what can they show for their effort? In this particular case, $3,000 were wasted to correct the social deficiencies of some mental midgets.

I contend that Villanova's "spoiled brats" must take a larger share of guilt for the vandalism which has occurred, and inevitably will occur. Otherwise stated, those people who are handed everything all their lives by mommy and daddy would tend to appreciate less the costs of a college education. Reality for many Villanova students is a financial struggle.

I am disgusted that my hard earned money and my parent's sacrifices should have to support such lost causes.

MX Plan

To the Editor:

A great deal of discussion has arisen over the latest plans for deployment of the MX missile. Having departed from the realm of conventional warfare, the latest technology is measured in degrees of overkill. But the new designs are not focused around creating bigger explosions; but, rather on minimizing the effectiveness of a first strike.

If the MX is built, will we see another 20 years of deterrence? Will the American economy be able to handle such a concentration of spending on defense? If Congress approves of the plan will President Reagan be able to use the MX as a card-in-hand while discussing nuclear arms reduction with the new Soviet leadership?

Union Reply

To the Editor:

During this past semester, the Union's 200 student volunteers ran events ranging from an Outdoor Concert to a Fall Festival Fashion Show. Some of these events were very well received, but others had less than impressive showings. It is for this reason that we would like to thank those who responded to the On Campus question last week ("What types of events would you like to see the Villanova Union sponsor?").

In response to your answers, we will be trying to run more events outdoors, including a week of outdoor events during the traditional Spring Fever Week. We would like to run additional outdoor concerts but because there is no chance of getting income to offset the costs, this could be difficult. In addition, the Union will be sponsoring monthly theme dances in the Connelly Center starting in January. We are open to any further suggestions which anyone may have as to how to sponsor events or types of events to sponsor.

If you do have ideas, please feel free to bring them to the Union Office. Contrary to the letter submitted by Cathy Marshall last week, we are open to anyone's suggestions. Marshall's letter contained a number of questionable facts. Miss Marshall never consulted with the student in charge and never left a number where she could be contacted. No commitment was ever made to her and we have not talked with her since July, when she reserved rooms without any advisory permission.

It is our hope that in the future we can avoid such misunderstandings and run events which better fulfill the social needs of the student body.

Student Struggles With Alcohol

By JOHN JACKSON

The name in this story has been changed to conceal his identity.

To most people, college would not be the same without alcohol. Some students drink a little more than others, but almost all of them do drink.

Jim Ryan is a senior at Villanova University, and he is just like many of his peers in many ways. He goes out at night to bars, and he goes to as many parties as he can.

Unlike many of his friends, Jim does not drink. Jim is an alcoholic.

Jim started drinking at an early age. "I had my first beer when I was 14," said the brown-haired, blue-eyed 21-year-old. "I hung around with about 15 other boys, and I was in about the middle age group. We were sitting around, and a couple of the 16-year-olds came up to me and stuck a beer in my face and said to drink it. I didn't know what to do."

Jim was still 14 when he became intoxicated for the first time. "Me and my brother (21 years old) played two other people tennis for a case of beer, and we won. I drank seven of them. I got smashed and had the greatest time," Jim explained as he smiled.

Jim said that he did not drink much until the summer between ninth and 10th grade. "It was just before 10th grade that everybody started drinking and smoking, so I did it. I drank more than everybody else to be cool. That summer, we'd go to the drug store and buy candy and ice cream, and I'd steal a bottle of wine. Then we'd drink it in our tree-fort, and I'd get bombed. I'd just tell my mother that I was going over my friends' to work on the tree-fort."

Jim said that it was easy for him to steal booze out of Maryland drug stores. "Then after a while I'd steal vodka. I thought it was easy. Soon, the other kids found out what I was doing, and they started giving me money to steal them booze. I was doing it left and right."

Jim said that he continued to steal liquor and drink it throughout that summer, and into 10th grade. He became braver and braver. "One day at school, I snuck in a bottle of vodka to lunch, and I poured it into everybody's orange drink. We all got a little drunk at school." The school that Jim went to was a very prestigious prep school in Baltimore, Md. "If I ever got caught, I would have been thrown out. I thought I was real cool."

"In 10th grade, I got high a lot — maybe two, three times a week. I always got drunk on the weekends," Jim said.

Jim did not realize that he had any sort of a problem until he was in 11th grade. "I don't know exactly when it hit me, but I said, 'Why am I doing this?' I think it was when my mom caught me with a bong (a marijuana smoking device).

"I drank because I thought it was the thing to do at parties. I was shy with the girls, so I'd get drunk instead of talking.

"Junior year, I calmed down, because I had to pick up my grades. I only drank average. Senior year though, I drank my tail off . . . I had the greatest time." Jim also said that he stopped stealing liquor by this time.

"At the end of my junior year I got my license, but I didn't get into an accident until January of my senior year. I ran a stop sign, and I hit somebody. I was so drunk that I swore that it was his fault. Thank God nobody got hurt. The cops never checked me for drinking."

"I would love to get drunk, because I had the greatest time. I drank to get drunk. I would always drink until the booze ran out or I ran out. If I threw up, I'd just drink some more.

"I would get drunk and then drive the other people home. I'd run up on curbs. Then one day, I fell asleep at the wheel and totaled the car. I wasn't hurt.

"When I came to Villanova, it got worse. I had a friend who would party a lot. I'd get so drunk that I'd drop my beer — I literally could not hold my liquor. Every night we'd sit in the room and get drunk. I was drunk for 15 straight nights at one point.

"Then I started getting blackouts, and that was what scared me. People would tell me what I did, and I wouldn't believe them. The blackouts scared me. Then I would get the shakes."

Jim then explained the event that prompted him to give up alcohol. "I was home on Christmas vacation. I went out to a bar with my friends. I wasn't going to get drunk, but then we started playing quarters. I had to chug six beers in a row, and that was the last thing that I remembered. I drove home, and I don't remember the ride home at all. I woke up that morning in my bed, and I jumped up and looked for the car. I had the shakes. I had no idea how I got home. I was really scared.

"I told my mom, and then I talked to our family doctor. He explained to me that alcohol was a drug, and I had never thought of it as that before. He told me that I should stop drinking for a while.

"I realized that I had never gone to a party without the sole purpose of getting drunk. The first party that I went to was strange. I could not believe how stupid all of the drunken people looked. I thought to myself, 'I must have looked like an even bigger fool'."

Jim has not had one drink since that talk with his doctor three years ago. "I don't think I'll ever drink again for as long as I live," added Jim.

New Psych Course Offered

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova Psychology Department and University College have announced a new course for the spring semester. The course, Psychology of Women, will be taught by visiting professor Susan B. Amsterdam. The course number is 3090 and registration is open to anyone, through the University College office in Vasey Hall. The class is scheduled for Mondays and Wednesdays from 4:30 until 5:45.

Amsterdam, who taught two courses in women's studies in the Villanova Honors Program, is a doctoral candidate at Bryn Mawr College. She expects to receive her Behavioral Science degree in May, 1983.

The course, explains Amsterdam, is "an examination of female behavior from a bio-social and psychological perspective." The readings will include selections from various disciplines of psychology, sociology, anthropology and social history. Amsterdam further develops the course's focus, explaining that it will explore, "various psychological theories regarding women, as well as an in-depth analysis of the socio-cultural context and the ways it impacts the psychology of the individual woman."

In addition to her teaching experiences, Amsterdam brings a wide variety of credentials from differing fields. While women's studies are her primary concentration, children's and family issues also highlight her background. In 1968 she received a B.S. degree from the Pennsylvania State University and earned her Master's Degree in Special Education from Temple University in 1972.

Amsterdam has lectured at Bryn Mawr College, the University of Pennsylvania, Temple University and the Pennsylvania School for the Deaf. Her clinical background includes private practices in Feminist Therapy, individual and group therapy for women, Re-Evaluation Counseling, teaching people how to exchange effective help with each other, and hearing and language therapy for hearing impaired children and their parents.

Amsterdam leads workshops centered around such issues as, "Women and Power," "Goal Setting and Values Clarification for Women," "Money and Sexism." She is the co-advisor to the Villanova University Women's Support Group.

Susan B. Amsterdam

Recently, Amsterdam's article "The National Women's Trade Union League" was published in the Social Service Review and she has several other articles under consideration for publication.

Housing The East And West

By BARBARA SIMON

Every December the beloved home of Pearl S. Buck is transformed into a Christmas wonderland, decorated with items by the shops in Peddler's Village in Bucks County, Pa. Holly greens, red candles and elaborate touchings mixed with the cultural charm of original furnishings, create an atmosphere of splendor.

Although Pearl S. Buck, the only woman to have won both the Pulitzer and Nobel Prize in literature died in 1973, she left her house, her literature and The Pearl S. Buck Foundation.

Her books reveal clear and simplistic understandings to the Chinese civilization. "The Good Earth," one of her best works, presents a picturesque and most emphathetic overview of the Chinese culture. By entering into the lives of a peasant family, the customs and peculiarities of the Chinese no longer appear "foreign," as the estrangement to the eastern culture is quietly diminished.

Located within Pearl S. Buck's enormous house are two libraries built by an old Pennsylvania Dutch builder. In both rooms, bookshelves line the walls, invoking a legalistic effect. The family collection includes classics, biographies, fiction, politics and sociology books.

The most interesting room is the living room because it is furnished with a conglomeration of countless different cultures. The carpets were made in Peking, China. Found in the corner, is a French "armoire," which was used to store the children's toys. On one wall is a modern Indian painting and on another is a Japanese wall hanging. Other foreign collectables include an Egyptian tray and two tiny brass urns from Korea. Another painting is by Redfield, an American artist.

It is for these half-American children that the Pearl S. Buck Foundation exists. Children who are forgotten by their fathers, often deserted by their mothers are ignored by the country they live in. The problem is perpetuated even today as children are still being fathered by the thousands of U.S. servicemen in Asia.

Like the living room, all of the rooms in the Pearl S. Buck house contain furnishings from all over the world. Her house, similar to her writings and her lifestyle, is a unique mixture of the East with the West.

Also located in the house is the Pearl S. Buck Foundation. It is a foundation established to help the Amerasian children in the world. A vacant past, a sordid present and an uncertain future is the life of an Amerasian child. Their fathers are American soldiers and their mothers live in Korea, Japan, Thailand, the Philippines and Okinawa. The children are illegitimate as well as mixed in race and they are treated as outcasts in the Asian countries.

Today, Pearl S. Buck's Christmas house, an east/west assimilation of beauty, can be viewed in delight. Her books, with a special insight into the East, can be read and applauded. However, the Pearl S. Buck Foundation is the link to a graver responsibility in attempts to aid innocent Amerasian children in the east.

Winter Carnival?

By JOHN LOZANO

Suppose a delegation, of a far off land, was sent to the United States to gather information on the Christmas Season. How would their report read?

"During the period from early December to early January, a time of winter carnival seems to ensue upon the American people. Created, in earlier times, as an escape from the doldrums of the winter cold and barrenness. This carnival is characterized by a tremendous surge of merchandise purchase

We examined this strange phenomen more closely to see if anything else was stimulating all this activity. We received some vague slogans such as "The spirit of Christmas" that an advertisement said has been kept alive through the purchase of Chiv Regal. Furthermore, we examined some tendency of emotion towards family, home and "peace on earth, good will towards men." Unfortunately, we discovered this emotion to seldom be strong, and dissipated quickly as the season ended.

Above all, the strangest bit of information we turned up, after much investigation, was an occasional reference to the birth of the historical figure named Jesus. We wondered what the significance of this person was to the season, but could not find any correlation. Perhaps, he had purpose at one time during the evolution of this carnival season, and is simply a hold over from a previous period.

The indication is that this Jesus was believed to be born as both God and man. Many are not sure what that means anymore. Some say it was to give a model of how to be more human. Another, more fascinating view is that this God became man so that mankind might become Godlike . . . a spectacular statement, to be sure, which needs some explanation.

This Jesus did not come into the world in order to tell mankind "You're all great just as you are. Just do more of the same." No, this Jesus came to change man. To give him a life that he could not achieve by his own efforts. A life that shares in the very life of God, now on earth and forever.

What is most extraordinary, this life is available to all. They say that anyone who receives this Jesus has the power to become a child of God.

You see this birth of Jesus makes all this possible. Now, it is said, God dwells on the earth in a new way.

Jesus' birth created a new possibility for mankind . . . a possibility to become fully human, and to overcome the condition of man that is so destructive and live complete full lives now and forever.

Now this birth of Jesus is celebrated on a day called Christmas. The celebration is not a time simply to look back at a birth, but to look what is offered everyday because of that birth.

Indeed, what a wonderful and marvelous day this must be for those who truly believe in this God-Man names Jesus."

Debators Are Undefeated

By DIANN GALLAGHER

The varsity debate team recently became the first team in the history of the Villanova Debate Society to go undefeated at a major tournament. Team president, Vince Pescatore, and Bill Dawson won all six of their debates at a tournament hosted by Penn State University. Pescatore was also the third place speaker among 28 debaters competing.

Pescatore and Dawson again went undefeated at Towson State University's tournament, competing against the top teams on the east coast. They were the only team of 24 attending to win all six of their preliminary debates. En-route to victory, Pescatore and Dawson went on to win all three elimination rounds over Bob Jones University, judged by Dr. Hoke Smith, Towson State University President, Maj. Gen. John P. Cooper and Brig. Gen. William U. Ogletree.

Villanova's other debate teams have also had a successful semester. Shaun O'Leary and Arthur Figueiredo advanced to the quarterfinal round at a tournament, hosted by Marshal University. Tom Janisch and O'Leary also attended the Towson and Penn State tournaments. The topic for these tournaments was "Resolved: That a unilateral freeze by the United States on the production and development of nuclear weapons would be desirable."

Larry Maggitti, a law school student, is presently coaching the debate squad. "Surprisingly," he noted, "after considering issues such as Soviet reciprocity, counterforce doctrine and weapons systems survivability, we found that most arguments against a unilateral freeze, even a unilateral freeze by the United States, are illogical and not supported by the facts."

Villanova's debate team is currently ranked second among schools in the Northeast region of the Cross-Examination Debate Association including Syracuse, Penn State and William and Mary. Pescatore noted that next semester, the team expects to attend tournaments hosted by George Mason, William and Mary, University of Tennessee and Towson State; working towards earning an opportunity to attend the national finals held in Reno, Nev.

The Learning Never Stops

By JIM DENNY

Anyone who has been having trouble maintaining their enthusiasm for Villanova should talk to Joe Carroll and his friend Dallas Rowley. Carroll is one of the senior citizens attending Villanova. Rowley is planning to attend Villanova once he retires three years from now. As far as they are concerned, Villanova is a "fine University," that offers a "great opportunity" for those who take advantage of it.

Joe Carroll grew up in West Philadelphia, where he attended St. Gregory's grammar school and West Catholic high school. Due to the economic realities of the time, Carroll had to get a job upon graduating from high school. He began working with the PTC (Philadelphia Transportation Co.). He then served in the armed forces for three years during World War II. Upon returning from Europe, he picked up where he had left off at the PTC.

He has been married for over 40 years now to the woman he married in 1940. Their marriage produced one child, a daughter, who graduated from Villanova in '73. It was through her that Carroll first heard of the senior citizens program offered at Villanova, whereby people over 65 can attend classes without paying tuition.

Joe began attending Villanova in '77. He graduated in '81 with a B.A. in Communications. Due to his health, he is only taking one course this semester. Still, he plans to "continue going to school till they carry me out." He considers Villanova to be "an island of academic excellence." His only complaint is that "all of my teachers haven't given me A's. Other than that," he says, "I've been treated wonderfully well."

Carroll first caught my eye one day early in the semester, when he told everyone in our history class to put their names on a piece of paper. He then put all the names in a bag, and gave a free bottle of champagne to the person whose name he picked out of the bag. Although he doesn't go to these extremes every day, he frequently offers donuts and other pastry to people as he is sitting at his table in the Connelly Center.

Carroll's friend, Dallas Rowley is willing to bet that Carroll "knows 50 percent of the people here." Rowley also believes that Carroll "has drawn many young people to this college because of his enthusiasm." Carroll himself doesn't appear to be concerned about such things. Perhaps that's because as he says, "I'm happy here."

Carroll asserts that "the milieu of this University is fantastically beautiful." Because of this, he urges all of Villanova's students to "drink in the beauty of this campus, for we pass this way but once."

'Tis The Season To Be What?

By ROBIN LUCARINI

The hustle and bustle of Christmas shopping — line after line, store after store. Searching for just the right gift, budgeting those last few dollars — wrapping, packing, stamping, sealing! 'Tis the season to be what?

As if the commotion of Christmas weren't already enough for any sane person to handle, college students face it every year with an extra holiday present — final exams. This is not suggesting that finals are secondary in importance to Christmas shopping. On the contrary, Mom will understand if you're a little late with her gift because you had no time to shop; but your professor won't be so understanding if you didn't have time to study!

Naturally, finals win out, but why should there even be a battle? Is there any reason why final exam period could not be a good week or more before Christmas, instead of two days?

This would still give us enough time back at school after Thanksgiving break, as well as a little more time to prepare for Christmas day. For once, we could relax and take our time shopping, without biting off all our nails and tearing out our hair.

If the loss in the amount of school days proves to be a problem, we could make that up by returning that many days earlier in January. As it is now, our month vacation is distributed quite unevenly around the holidays. For a less hurried, easier transition from school to home, it would be much to everyone's benefit if some time were added before Christmas day.

No one wants to point fingers, so let's just say it's nobody's fault but the system's — and we know what it's like trying to change a system!

This year nothing can be done, but hopefully, in the near future, the "system" can be revised, in the best interest of every student, by those who have the power to do so.

Every Christmas story must have a bright side — and this story is no exception. Once the shopping is done, the presents are wrapped, the finals are taken, and we've let out that huge sigh of relief, we can finally greet the Christmas season with a spirit of joy and thankfulness for our good friends and loving family. Now, that's a reason to be jolly.

Gift-Giving

By BOB HERMAN

Think back to when you were a child. What would Christmas have been like if you hadn't received anything on Christmas day? That thought is trying to be alleviated in the Philadelphia area by the Archdiocese of Philadelphia Department of Youth Activities, with its program called "Operation Santa Claus."

This is the 16th consecutive year that the program is being sponsored. The program is a gift-giving activity, providing gifts for approximately 10,000 disadvantaged children in the Philadelphia area.

Gifts are collected throughout the area by college and high school students, grade school children and churches.

Once the gifts are collected, they are distributed on Christmas eve by teenage-volunteers dressed as Santa and his helpers.

Anyone wishing to donate a toy may drop it off at 841 Chestnut St., Phila.

Confessions of a Department Store Santa Claus

By GEORGE BROSS

Every year around Christmas time, thousands of department stores and shopping malls around the country hire people to dress up as Santa Claus. In addition to enhancing the Christmas spirit and spreading good cheer, a "store Santa" generates excellent holiday business. Making children happy though, is what makes a store Santa special.

A veteran Santa of many Christmas campaigns, playing the role of St. Nick has taught me the real meaning behind Christmas. There are no special qualifications for being a store Santa, although a cheerful and pleasant personality and a sense of humor help.

After donning the familiar red suit, black boots and snow-white beard, I am quickly overcome by the "Santa mood." Taking my familiar seat in the aisle across from household goods, I ready myself for the onslaught of children of all shapes, sizes and forms.

Sitting there in the big chair with a North Pole scene behind and a couple of helpful "elves" nearby, it strikes me that being a store Santa is a pretty big responsibility. After all, most of the children who line up to ask for presents have seen plenty of department store Santas before, and they generally know what to expect.

As the elves lead the children up to Santa, I adjust my beard, for in only a matter of moments, it will be tugged upon and quickly become dishevelled. One by one, they hop on to my lap and begin reciting their much-memorized list of presents. There are naturally some youngsters who really do not want to see one of "Santa's helpers" instead of the authentic, so they put up a fuss. Invariably, their hollering will be stifled by a peace-offering candy cane from one of the elves.

One of the biggest dilemmas a store Santa faces is attempting to explain the real meaning of Christmas to the children. I perform this task by asking the children what their brothers and sisters would like, hoping that they realize that Christmas entails giving, too. Not surprisingly, mostly every child is full of suggestions for gifts for their siblings.

One of the most touching moments in my years as Santa occurred this year when a 6-year-old girl was asked what she wanted for the holiday. She replied that she was not expecting much since her parents told her that it would not be a present-laden Christmas; but, if Santa could bring "a job for Daddy and a new dress for Mommy," she'd appreciate it.

An interesting aspect of the job is when a child asks Santa what he would like as a midnight snack. To this, I usually respond that a glass of milk and a few cookies would suffice. One time, however, in the middle of a hectic, four-hour stint as Santa, I slipped up and told a young boy that I would like a mushroom pizza and a six pack of beer. I often wonder how her parents reacted when he told them that.

Dear Santa,
It happens every year. We never get what we ask for. Get it together, would you? How difficult can it be to find a man who can satisfy us?
The Girls in Good Counsel

Dear Santa,
All we want for Christmas is a little respect. Or two front teeth, whatever's easier for you.

Letters to Santa

Dear Santa,
Like, we really think you're the most!!! We're sure your suit is just super to the max!!! Like, what we really want, y'know, is some sweaters and pants just like it!!! We're really psyched to have you come up with them 'cause, like, not even Talbot's has anything like it!!! C'mon Santa, make it happen!!!
The Blew Key

Dear Santa,
It's been a tough year, and I need some help. You see it seems that my memory is going. First of all, I keep misplacing my mail. I can't find that letter from Jack anywhere. And last week was the tree lighting, and I forgot all about it and went to Puerto Rico by mistake.
Another thing. Remember I used to be real busy on Saturday afternoons? Now I can't find anything to do. And last year I forgot to go to homecoming.
And to top it all off, I still can't find my St. Christopher medal that I lost in front of the library (and maintenance has been digging for months). The list just goes on and on.
Could you please send me an active hypothalamus? Thank you. Did I sign my name yet? Oops.
Father John, O.S.A.
El Padre Presidente

Dear Santa,
I'm writing you from my car. You see, one day when I went to work, my boys wouldn't let on campus to park. I've been here for weeks. Please send help.
Captain Cocain
Corner of Ithan and Lancaster

Dear Santa,
It's been a tough year and I need . . . wait a second. Did I already write you? Oh, never mind.
El Padre

Dear Santa,
I've been a very good boy all year long, so I hope you'll be nice to me this Christmas. I'm good, cooperative and kind, never ever tells lies, brush my teeth after every meal, help old ladies across the street (not just at election time), and obey the Scout Oath at all times. I do my best to please all of the people all of the time, and am the last person who still believes that a little dab'll do you. So could you please do just one little thing for me? All I want is to be the youngest trustee in this school's history.
Respectfully sumbitted
Paul A. Tufano
Student Body President

Dear Santa,
Could you please do us a favor and make an easy job easier? We know it seems like a petty complaint, but could you please tell the elves to make all knapsacks see-through?
The Guys in the Library

Dearest Santa Claus,
I've been such a good little girl this past year. I always stood by my man Ronnie and made sure my hair and smile never moved. I did not cause any unnecessary problems when visiting my friend Elizabeth in England. I was extra brave and did not cry while my darling son stood in the unemployment line. I did not even once pout when people raised such a ruckus over a few, simple, ordinary dishes (Really — we have to eat off something, don't we?)
So since I have been so peachy, I've got just a teensy list for you:
— New black, blue, tan, burgundy, grey, champagne and mauve pumps from Pappagallo.
— Ralph's entire spring 1983 wardrobe, size 6 (Goodness — I've just got to look my best when photographed next to Ron).
— A year's worth of facials and manicures from Elizabeth Arden.
— The complete set of lily-patterned Lenox dishes (that is a reasonable request — the eagles' faces are starting to fade on the old dishes).
That wasn't a terribly large list, was it Santa? I do so hope that you'll oblige me. I promise to be just as good next year, 'kay?
Lovingly yours,
Nancy-poo

Mr. Claus,
I would prefer to have just two gifts this year: a fake, silver Christmas tree with those metallic blue balls on it, and a stuffed, mounted bald eagle for my den. You know how much I just love the great outdoors.
James Watt
Secretary of the Interior

Editor's Note: The following letter was recently obtained by the Villanovan.

Dear Santa,
Remember two years ago when I asked you for that real big present? Well, I was wondering if you could do me another little favor.
You see, I'm now at a different school, and they have a football team! I know it's not much of a team, but nevertheless, I'm afraid that it might become a training ground for the pros. I'm sure you can relate to my problem. You probably get lots of letters from people with a football mentality. Well, to get to the point . . . Could you please:
1) get rid of this meat market of a football team
2) send a couple elves to stamp out the vociferous minority
3) send the theft ring to some other school
Sincerely,
Daddy Deegs, O.S.A.

Dear Mr. Claus,
We're sorry to inform you that, after a thorough review of your credentials, we are unable to admit you to Vil . . . Wait! We're so sorry. With your first name, we thought you were Hispanorican or something Third World like that. Please forgive our oversight. Of course there's a place for you here.

Cinematic Season Shifts Into Gear

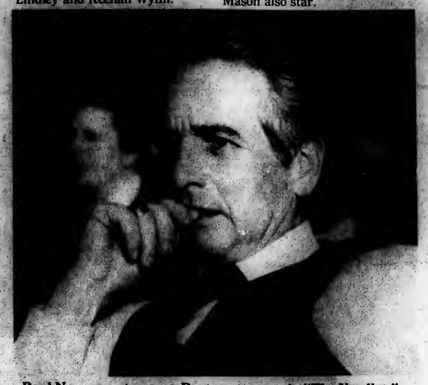
By DEAN BALSAMINI and JAYNE STUART

In the past few months, the motion picture industry has not had much to offer the avid moviegoer. But now that the holiday season is upon us, there are a variety of new films about to open. Here is a brief preview of these films and what kind of success can be expected.

"Gandhi": Produced and directed by Richard Attenborough, this will more than likely be both the year's best and most "important" film. Written by John Briley, "Gandhi" tells the story of the Indian lawyer's transformation into one of the world's great men of peace. Ben Kingsley, who starred in the London production of "Nicholas Nickelby" portrays Mahatma. The all-star cast includes Candice Bergen, Edward Fox, John Gielgud ("Arthur," "Bridehead Revisited" and "Chariots of Fire"), Trevor Howard, Ian Charleson ("Chariots of Fire") and Martin Sheen ("Apocalypse Now").

"Best Friends": Directed by Norman Jewison, this romantic comedy features Burt Reynolds and the charming Goldie Hawn as unmarried lovers who finally "tie the knot." The plot is not anything new, but one can expect to enjoy this film. Look for "Best Friends" to turn a big profit. It's a "safe" film, plus Reynolds and Hawn are two stars who in the past have had considerable box-office success. Also stars Jessica Tandy, Barnard Hughes, Audra Lindley and Keenan Wynn.

"The Verdict" are already touting Newman for another Academy award nomination. Charlotte Rampling, Jack Wardin and James Mason also star.



Paul Newman stars as a Boston attorney in "The Verdict."

"The Verdict": Paul Newman stars in this film directed by Sidney Lumet ("Serpico"). Newman plays a lawyer from Boston who is a "boozer" and whose ideals regarding the law have dramatically changed. Insiders who have seen

"Trial of the Pink Panther": The sixth in the successful series which first premiered in 1964, "Trial" is unique in that it splices together "out-takes" from previous Panther films with new footage. Once agian directed by Blake Edwards, "Trial" is intended to be a tribute to the late great comedian Peter Sellers. Through the magic of cinematography, Sellers once again is the bumbling Inspector Clouseau. Regardless of plot, the Panther series has always had audiences rolling in the aisles. The film also stars Herbert Lom as Dreyfuss, Burt Kwouk as Cato, and a host of new characters such as Richard Mulligan and JoAnna Lumley.

"Honkey Tonk Man": Clint Eastwood directs and stars in this film about a country musician traveling to Nashville. Eastwood, the film industry's top box-office draw, could hang wallpaper and it would sell. Sure to be a hit, but don't expect much in the way of a plot. Also starring Kyle Eastwood (yes, it is Clint's son), Verna Bloom and Matt Clark.

"Tootsie": Directed by Sidney Pollack and written by Larry Gelbart, "Tootsie" is a satirical look at the world of the daytime soap opera. Dustin Hoffman is Tootsie, an actor who assumes the role of a woman and becomes a highly successful t.v. star. Hoffman is the most versatile actor of our time ("Midnite Cowboy," "All the President's Men," "The Graduate," "Papillon") and it should be interesting to see if he can pull this one off. Also stars Charles Durning, Jessica Lange, Teri Garr and Dabney Coleman.

"Still of the Night": One of Meryl Streep's two movies to come out this month is "Still of the Night," also starring Roy Scheider ("Jaws," "The Seven Ups," "All That Jazz"). This movie, written and directed by Robert Benton (who wrote "Kramer vs. Kramer") is a romantic, "whodunit" murder film.

"48 Hrs.": Eddie Murphy, the talented comedian from the new Saturday Night Live, makes his acting debut in "48 Hrs.," a movie directed by Walter Hill and produced by Lawrence Gordan and Joel Silver. Murphy portrays a ghetto black who is sprung from prison to help track down two cop killers. The movie also stars Nick Nolte as Jack Cates, the policeman whom Murphy assists. Insiders have said that Murphy steals the film. It also stars Annette O'Toole and Frank McRae. The soundtrack includes music from the Police and the Busboys.

"Airplane II": From the same people who brought you "Airplane!" comes the cleverly titled "Airplane II, The Sequel." Written and directed by Ken Finkleman, Robert Hays, Julie Hagerty and Lloyd Bridges return to play their original roles. Also features a huge supporting cast which includes Chad Everett and William Shatner. Recommended for people who enjoy a lot of pun (no pun intended).

Song Remains the Same

By JOHN F. LYNCH

"Long After Dark," the new album by Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers, relies on the same formula that gave Petty his former success. Petty on vocals and guitar, has fallen into a musical rut with the arrival of this latest album.

The band has found much success over the past several years climaxing with the release of the album "Damn the Torpedoes" in 1979. Songs such as "Don't Do Me Like That" and "Refugee" were the two hits from this album which helped give the band the recognition that they deserved. Besides the media success, this album was the saving grace for a band which was in serious financial difficulty.

The problem with "Long After Dark" however, is that Petty, the songwriter/composer for the band, depends heavily on his past reputation to carry him through this album. By the end of the first side one becomes so bored, that listening to the rest of the album is sheer tedium.

A perfect example is found in the song "A One Story Town." This tune tells the story of a man who is saddened by the loss of his girl and has decided to leave the small honky tonk hometown. He is going nowhere and is fearful of his future without her. Although the lyrics are insightful on the perils many people face in rural America today, the melody, like the unfortunate young man, goes nowhere.

The song, "You Got Lucky" is the only song which shows any artistic talent. Organist Mike Campbell, provided the melody in a clean, refreshing change from the rest of the album.

Another aspect of this album is the fact that for the most part, the songs are depressing. Songs like "A Wasted Life" which deals with a true love affair where both parties involved are fearful of being hurt, fits into this theme. Similar to most of the tracks on this album, "A Wasted Life" is just another example of a song with a lot of potential which unfortunately falls short.

"Long After Dark" is a collaboration of rehashed songs which follow the "same old style" the band is known for. Although they have experienced success, the recycling of previous hits is no way for a band to present a new album.

What makes this album disappointing is that the members of the band are accomplished musicians who are capable of producing superior sound than is found on this album. The final product of their "effort" seems to have been rushed. It is hoped that the band will sort out its priorities before it is too late. If another album in the same vein as "Long After Dark" is released, one can be sure that Tom Petty is more concerned with singing all the way to the bank rather than producing quality music.

The Roches 'Keep On Doing' It

By JAYNE M. STUART

"She goes steady with the maestro . . ." What kind of group would have lyrics like that? Only the Roches, to be sure. Although their lyrics are at times bizarre, musically speaking, the Roches are a fusion of three beautifully harmonic voices. The Roches are three sisters as diverse as they could possibly be. This fact is clearly evident by the photo of the three women on their latest album cover. One of the sisters is obviously punk in her mode of dress, while one of the others is more "down to earth," while yet another is very feminine in her floor-length skirt.

Their latest album "Keep On Doing" is a collection of very diverse and musically accomplished songs. The opening song on side one is a incredible rendition of the "Hallelujah Chorus." Each of the sisters takes two parts to the song and the result is incredible. The song is a demonstration of their true talent and skill.

The song "The Largest Elizabeth in the World," is a nonsensical song about unrequited love and the nuclear weapons situation. The lines in the song are sung as one word in a rapid fashion in such a manner that without the accompanying lyric sheet, it would be very difficult to determine exactly what is being said.

Every Roches song can be characterized by the beautiful harmonies and melodies combined into a wonderful balance. The three sisters: Terry, Suzy and Margret Roche all have a hand in composing the songs and music. Most of the songs are their own work. All three play the acoustic guitar while Maggie plays the piano and synthesizer also.

The Roaches

The Roches are a rather unknown group that has been performing in small, personal clubs for quite awhile. Their most recent stint was in New York City. Although they don't tour very often, it seems that their music and albums are something they do for the enjoyment, not for the profit.

Their songs and music, as nonsensical as they seem, often do have some sort of message or theme. They have included on this album a song called "Sex Is For Children." It is a little song about the sexual revolution and the generation gap. There is also a song centered around the idea of rampant materialism. "You can tak my house away, I don't care/ Yo can take my job away, I don't ca . . ./ Want not, want not, . . ."

A demonstration of pure n sense is the song "The Scorpion Lament." The lyrics are a rath topsey-turvey — " . . . siren s waited/ Queen Spelling Bee s nailed me/ by name."

The Roches' music is fun a lively. Their creativity has t commended, as do their fine v ces. The music is not terribly i tricate but at the same time it catchy It may take more than o listening before their unusu style grows on you but if given fair chance, the Roches a surely worth the effort.

A Singer's Road to Ruin

By BARBARA SIMON

"Lili Marleen," a German film with English sub-titles was directed by Reiner Werner Fassbinder in 1981. Like his other major films, "The Marriage of Maria Braun" (1979); "Lola" (1981); and "Veronika Voss" (1982), "Lili Marleen" is about the war in Germany during the Third Reich, a woman and love.

The film is explosive, revealing the destructive realities of war within the structure of a simple love story about Willi, a beautiful, struggling singer, who loves Robert, a Jew. Their relationship is complicated and ultimately doomed by the opposing forces of Robert's father and the Third Reich.

"Lili Marleen" is the song Willi sings that becomes an overnight success when recorded in Germany. The song is about a woman who will wait for her lover while he is away. For soldiers across Europe in the midst of life and death, the song becomes a "national anthem" as they succumb to the sentimental seductiveness of the lyrics.

Fassbinder chooses Willi to symbolize the themes of love, sorrow, innocence and corruption through her stardom and reality as the "Lili Marleen." Her undying devotion to her lover is romantic, but as naive as her indifference to the political upheaval in Germany. She survives with the same power, control and optimism that Hitler embraces, except that his success thrives on destructiveness.

Guess Who?
Hanna Schygulla stars as Lili Marlene in Fassbiner's 1981 movie.

By contrasting the powerful and glorified Third Reich with the power and glory Willi enjoys as Lili Marleen, the enormity and horror of the war floods the screen. Flashbacks of battle scenes, explosions, and close-up shots of soldiers' despondent faces were emotionally and sensually effective as the song "Lili Marleen" played throughout.

"Lili Marleen" was shown in the Connelly Center on Dec. 5 and Dec. 6. The film was excellent despite major problems with the projector in the first half of the film. More disturbing than the projection difficulties was the ceaseless playing of "Lili Marleen." Representing more than romance, the song itself became as politically powerful as "Heil Hitler." According to Fassbinder, "Lili Marleen" brilliantly showed the consequences of mass control and how meaningful and meaningless love and war can be.

Dining Out:
Hop On This Express

By BOB HERMAN

The next time you are looking for a good, quick meal look no further than Bryn Mawr to the Kress Express Restaurant.

The concept at the Kress Express is relatively simple: serve good homemade food at inexpensive prices.

For appetizers, one can choose five different soups, selecting from the following: vegetable, chicken pasta, split pea, onion and autumn squash bisque. My dinner partner chose the vegetable soup, which had a delectable broth with plenty of vegetables in it. I selected the chicken pasta soup which is unbelievably close to my mother's chicken soup.

For main platters, one can select from the following: quiche, vegetable gateau, chili, lemon chicken with herbed rice, lasagna, mexican casserole, beef stew or curried lamb. The platters range in price from $1.50 to $3.50. My companion chose the lemon chicken with herbed rice which was quite good. I selected the beef stew which also was quite delicious. Both of the platters were generous in their portions.

One may also select from a variety of sandwiches including fresh breast of turkey, hot ham barbeque, ham and egg salad, white meat tuna and meat loaf.

For dessert, one may select from a variety of goodies including chocolate cake, pecan pie, bread pudding with vanilla sauce, apple brown betty or frozen yogurt. My companion chose the pecan pie warmed, which had an excellent flavor. I selected the chocolate cake which was superb, because it contained pieces of chocolate thoughout the cake and had an excellent chocolate icing.

To complement the meal, the restaurant serves one of the best iced teas I have ever tasted; it was a spiced tea which had an excellent flavor.

Complete dinner for two costs approximately $13 . The restaurant comfortably seats close to 30 people.

Some may not like the fact that it is serve yourself, but one can do this very quickly. The restaurant is also pleasant if one is a non-smoker because smoking is not permitted.

The Kress Express Restaurant is open daily, Monday through Saturday from 11:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. You can eat in or take out. The restaurant is located in the Bryn Mawr Mall and parking is free.

A Fine Addition to Any Collection

By DEAN BALSAMINI and JAYNE STUART

The Clash: "Combat Rock" — Undoubtedly the most popular album of 1982, if not the best, The Clash have hit the big time — commercially, that is. The band has made better albums, namely "The Clash" and "London Calling" but it took "Should I Stay or Should I Go?" and "Rock the Casbah" for people to take notice. Meanwhile the "forgotten" tracks on this album are "Car Jamming" and

"Straight to Hell." Hopefully, The Clash will not rest on their laurels after this album's commercial and critical acclaim.

The Stray Cats: "Built For Speed" — If nothing else, this album helped re-introduce rockabily in its pure form to many uninformed people. The band, which features Jim Phantom on drums, Lee Rocker on upright bass and Brian Setzer on guitar, are originally from Long Island, N.Y. They actually went to England and made a name for themselves before returning to the U.S. and receiving similar accolades. "Rock this Town" and "Stray Cat Strut" are the hits on this LP.

Bow Wow Wow: "I Want Candy" — An important album because it gained its popularity not through radio airplay but from being played in clubs such as The London Victory in Philadelphia and The Mudd and Peppermint Lounge in New York City. The title track and "Baby, Oh No" were the hits on this dance-oriented album.

Dire Straits: "Love Over Gold" — This album was a risk for "Dire Straits" because of the total lack of commercial potential. The title of the album does suggest a change of heart. The only song to receive any airplay whatsoever is "Industrial Disease," which at seven minutes is the album's shortest cut.

Bruce Springsteen: "Nebraska" — A disappointment only to those who want to hear more songs like "Hungry Heart." The man is not afraid to take chances and shows it by coming out with this acoustic album, that is one of his best. "Nebraska" can only be described as "stark." It takes repeated listenings to really appreciate this album. Even though radio stations and his legion of loyal fans have abandoned him for now, "the Boss" doesn't seem to mind. "Nebraska" is the vinyl statement of today's America.

X: "Under the Big Black Sun" — An X-cellent album that proved that the hard-core punks can "sing" and play their instruments at the same time. This band, which calls Los Angelos home, also showed that there is musical life in California. Produced by ex-Doors member Ray Manzarek, X is led by lead vocalist Exene Cernenka, and John Doe (you know who he is) on bass. Billy Zoom supplies the guitar riffs that not only bark, but also bite. "The Hungry Wolf," and "Blue Spark" are only two of the many hits on this album. This band is very talented. The only question is: Can they really be from Los Angeles?

Joe Jackson: "Night and Day" — Joe Jackson is constantly changing and with this album it certainly is for the better. Jackson who now resides in New York wanted to capture the flavor of the city and has hit the mark. Jackson has composed an album full of catchy tunes, bass lines (by Graham Maby) and piano reminiscent of Cole Porter. There is absolutely no guitar on this album and it is not really missed. "Chinatown" is a classy tune and everyone knows about "Steppin' Out." Jackson is one of the most innovative artists in music, not to mention the ugliest. (Sorry Joe).

Peter Townshend: "All the Best Cowboys have Chinese Eyes" — Peter Townshend, the longtime spokesman of the Who, has also had a fairly successful solo career ("Who Came First," "Empty Glass"). With "Cowboys," Townshend has stripped himself naked revealing his "other side." The Who guitarist has composed a sensitive album that explains among other things, his recent bout with alcoholism and his fear of being an aging rock 'n' roller.

Elvis Costello: "Imperial Bedroom" — Elvis the C. is back. His experiment with country music gone by the wayside, Costello's "Imperial Bedroom" presents him as a mature artist rather than the "angry young man" of a couple of years back — without sacrificing anything. This LP is generally optimistic in its writing. The Buddy Holly look-alike is still the best lyricist in rock 'n' roll.

John Lennon: "The John L[ennon] Collection" — Last and [cer]tainly not least, are 15 of [the] greatest solo hits of one of mus[ic]'s all-time greats. With this [re]lease Wednesday being the second an[ni]versary of Lennon's tra[gic] murder, it is only fitting that [he] not be forgotten. Not in all ca[ses] does time heal all wounds — [the] man was simply a genius, a[nd] there are no other explanati[ons] needed.

Kentucky Snipers Hit 63.6%

U.K. Sharpshooters Top Nova

By JOE MARUSAK

The stage was set. The CBS cameras were in place and ready to roll.

It was No. 3 against No. 4. Big East vs. Southeastern. Wildcat against Wildcat.

Last Saturday afternoon, two of the top college basketball teams in the land got together for a shootout at Lexington, Kentucky. From the Northeast came Villanova University. From the South, the University of Kentucky.

For forty minutes they entertained in front of 23,884 wild Kentucky fans at Rupp Arena, and in the end, it was the Wildcat group from below the Mason-Dixon Line that prevailed, 93-79.

It was a 14-point difference, but that didn't really tell the whole story.

"This is a strange thing to say when you beat someone by 14 points," said the Kentucky Head Coach Joe B. Hall, "but I would have to rate Villanova as one of the best teams we have played since I have been at Kentucky."

A well deserved compliment, considering the barriers Villanova was up against. For one, they were playing at the infamous Rupp Arena, where everyone, it seemed, was a Kentucky Wildcat fanatic.

And the fact that the Kentucky team itself had hit 75 percent of its shots against Notre Dame at South Bend a few days earlier didn't make the outlook any brighter.

VU came through though, even when things looked their worst. With 5:40 remaining in the game, Derrick Hord, Kentucky's 6'6" forward who scored a game high 26 points, hit a jumper to give Kentucky a 76-63 lead.

Villanova didn't give up. Four minutes later they found themselves within four, 81-77.

However, forward Ed Pinckney picked up his fifth foul on the last two points of that streak and the tide once again shifted.

"We thought we had a chance to win," said freshman forward Harold Pressley, who started the game for Nova. "But when they called the foul on Eddie, everything fell apart."

After that, VU was forced to foul Hall's team at every possible moment. And Kentucky obviously took advantage.

If Kentucky — which shot 63.6 percent from the floor, their lowest percentage of this young season — is now No. 2, as the latest polls indicate, then Rollie Massimino and Co. should feel confident that that their season is not going to end with the Big East Tournament in March.

Several reasons account for this. In last Saturday's matchup, the Cats outrebounded the 2nd best team in the country, 39-33. VU's inside combination of Pressley, Pinckney and John Pinone was the key.

"They're as tough as I've seen since I've been here," said Hord in reference to the three.

And then there was the effort of Villanova guard Stewart Granger, who was sometimes criticized for his play last year in big games. From all indications, he's disproving the critics. Granger penetrated Kentucky's defense several times in the contest, and finished with a team-high 22 points.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

GENUINE GENUINE GENUINE

By STEPHEN FALLON

When asked about her playing this year, Villanova women's basketball player, Nancy Bernhardt, stated, "I'm not happy with the way I'm playing right now. I don't think I'm playing as well as I could be."

Those do not sound like the words of a player selected Budweiser Athlete of the Week, but if Bernhardt is not pleased with her performance, she has to be the only one. The junior guard from Bishop McDevitt High School in Glenside, Pa., is off to a great start in the young 1982-83 basketball season.

After three games, Bernhardt is averaging a team high 20.3 points per game and has been the leading scorer in all three of the Wildcats' games. The 5-9 guard is also the team's leading rebounder, averaging 8.3 boards per game. Bernhardt also leads the team in steals with nine.

Bernhardt, an All-America candidate, would consider it flattering to receive such accolades but puts the team goals ahead of any personal accomplishments. "I just want to win — we've a lot to prove this year. I think people are looking right over us," said Bernhardt.

As a team, the Wildcats have struggled out of the blocks. After beating Princeton the Cats dropped games to St. Peter's and no. 11 ranked Penn State. "We're struggling a little bit, but it is not anything that can't be corrected," said an optimistic Bernhardt.

"It's still early yet — hopefully everything will start to click for me, and the team," added Bernhardt, who will lead the Wildcats against Monmouth College at the Field House on Saturday evening at 7:00.

Wildcats Humble Marist

By MICHAEL HEALEY

The Villanova Wildcats went on a hunting expedition at the Field House Wednesday night and came up with some prize game: the Red Foxes of Marist College. After a jittery first half, the Cats settled down and easily outgunned the clever but overmatched Foxes and coasted to a 97-69 victory.

"They played tough," said sophomore guard Gary McLain, "but after playing Kentucky away, Marist was a nice confidence booster."

For a while in the first half, Nova's play did anything but instill confidence. After several turnovers and missed free throws, Stewart Granger finally put his squad on the board, hitting a top of the key jumper with 16:16 to go in the half.

The ever-cagey Foxes evened the game at 6-6 but from then on, the Cats, sensing that their prey was weakening, cranked up their running game and began to dominate. Behind the superior board work of Eddie Pinckney (ten rebounds for the half), and the hot shooting of seniors John Pinone and Mike Mulquin, Villanova reeled off 25 successive points and sent the Foxes to their lair at halftime down 45-26.

Mulquin, who hit four of five shots from the floor in the half, seemed to be the catalyst for the Wildcats. "My game is to hustle," he said, "and when we're not really juiced up, I come in and try to add a spark."

The spark that Mulquin provided for the Cats turned into a roaring fire in the second half, giving the Foxes little chance for hope. Freshman Harold Pressley, playing the best game of his young, budding career, ignited the crowd with strong defensive work, and then did his share at the other end of the court as well. Pressley hit for all ten of his points in the second half and also snared 10 rebounds. "I knew sooner or later," Pressley said, "that the shots would have to go in."

Pinone, Villanova's high scorer with 21, fired eight for eight from the floor and literally caged opposing center John Donovan. Donovan, a 7-1, 198-pound junior donned in his red uniform, looked more like a thermometer than a basketball player, as he was overwhelmed by the Bear.

Nittany Lions Pound Slow-Starting Cats

and BOB HERMAN

Last weekend Villanova's women's basketball team travelled to Penn State to take on the nationally-ranked Nittany Lions.

The Cats, who had a poor shooting night in their previous game, did not fare much better against a good Penn State defense. In fact, they fared worse. They connected on 21 of 60 shots for a very dismal 35%. Penn State on the other hand hit 38 of 69 shots for a crisp 55.1%.

The Cats fared somewhat better on the foul line, hitting 10 of 12 shots. Penn State hit 15 of 20. The Cats' poor shooting and poor defense coupled with a strong State offense gave the Nittany Lions a 91-52 blowout; which dropped Nova's record to 1-2.

The Cats were again plagued by foul trouble, committing twenty offenses against State. Freshman starter Katrina Messenger fouled out for the second time in three games while three others had three fouls against them.

Leading scorers were Carol Walderman for the Lions with 24 points and Nancy Bernhardt for the Cats with 16. Villanova's Noreen Kemether pumped in 14 points coming off of the bench. Rosemarie Burke scored six points while Kathie Beisel, Andrea Burton, Courtney Vanderslice and Messenger added four points each to wrap up the Wildcat scoring attack.

Penn State clearly outrebounded the Cats, 48 to 26,with no Wildcat getting more than five boards. Kathie Beisel had five rebounds to lead the Cats. Cheryl Ellison grabbed eight to lead the Penn State team.

The Cats were clearly having problems with the offensive boards, grabbing nine to State's seventeen. Of the nine, no player on Villanova had more than two.

Other game leaders for the Wildcats were Bernhardt with four assists and seven turnovers, Beisel with two steals, and Kemether with two blocked shots. The season has not started off well for Coach Harry Perretta's Wildcats, with losses in three games. The Wildcats dropped their first game of the 1982-83 season Dec. 2 to a strong St. Peter's team.

Both Villanova and St. Peter's were plagued by poor shooting in the first half, shooting 31 percent and 28.5 percent, respectively.

Villanova's coach, Harry Perretta, was charged with a technical foul late in the second half, and was ejected seconds later.

Tennis Tourney Concludes

By MICHAEL BETZ

Wimbledon is known for its long, rich tradition of tennis excellence. Traditions must begin somewhere, and that's the goal of Thomas Klisch, assistant dean of admissions.

When Klisch arrived at Villanova in September of 1979, the University was without any type of athletic program for its faculty and staff. Last year, Klisch attempted to organize a faculty/staff tennis tournament. The tournament was never completed, but, undaunted, Klisch set out to run another one last May.

After some seven months of tennis, the results of the tourney are in. In the singles division, the winner was Mr. Bill Yeager of the Math Department. Second and third places went to Dr. Fritz Hartman and Dr. David Sprows, respectively, also of the Math Department. Hartman and his partner, Dr. Tom Busch of the Philosophy Department, captured the doubles crown. Dr. Bob Langran of Political Science, and Dr. Angelo Armenti, the dean of University College, finished second; while Mr. Ed Rideout of the Development Office, and Ms. Kathy Hermann took third place.

The real story however, is that Villanova has no organized faculty/staff athletic program. "There are an awful lot of the faculty and staff who would like to participate (in sports) if they only had the avenue," Klisch believes.

The problems with inaugurating such a program are twofold. First, Klisch had no help with running the tennis tournament from the Intramural Department. Klisch understands that the Intramural Department "simply didn't have the time." This leads to the second problem. With no help whatsoever, the efficient organization of a tournament borders on the impossible.

Klisch discovered this the hard way. "The problems were organizational," he stated, "like running things and keeping track of everything."

Nevertheless, Klisch is planning for future faculty/staff athletic events. He would like to revise the tennis tournament format so that it could possibly be played in a weekend. This would entail a round-robin type set-up.

"And though the faculty/staff tennis tournament is the only event of its kind, I'd like to start faculty/staff running club, or maybe a swimming club," Klisch said.

TRY THE NAKED BEER TEST.

First of all, it's not you who gets naked, it's a bottle of Today's Schaefer.

What you do is strip off the label and ask a friend to try it. Don't let him (her?) know what beer it is.

What will happen is the same thing that happened when we tried it on beer drinkers in New York.

8 out of 10 liked it. They said it was a smooth, good tasting beer.

And when we tried it on more beer drinkers, they were surprised to find out it's Schaefer beer.

No surprise to us, though. Today's Schaefer is being brewed by the Stroh family, who have devoted their 200 years of brewing experience to making Schaefer better than ever.

Young Pursues the "Rhodes" to Success

By MICHAEL HEALEY

It is indeed a splendid accomplishment when an athlete reaches the level of proficiency at his sport whereby he is breaking records. It is, moreover, a superior achievement when a scholar becomes so adept in the world of academe that he is nominated for a Rhodes Scholarship. If a person has the ability to do both, then he is truly exceptional.

Villanova senior Carlton Young, track champion and Rhodes Scholar nominee, is truly exceptional.

"Carlton Young is a very unusual person," said Dr. Charlie Jenkins, Villanova track coach, "unusual in the positive sense. He is not only good at one thing but good at many things. He is athletically good. He is academically good. And," continued Jenkins, to top it all off, "he's also a very spiritual and caring person."

Athletic and academic accolades aside, perhaps the most striking features about Carlton are his ingenuous nature and his deep and intense religious convictions.

"I suppose that I feel happy and honored at being nominated," said Carlton, "and along with that, I feel responsibility to my school, my fellow students and Jesus Christ. I guess," he added, "it is a personal gratification as well as responsibility."

A graduate of Central High School in Philadelphia, Carlton was a widely recruited scholar-athlete a few years ago. He showed interest in such institutions as Pennsylvania, Princeton, Tennessee and Wesleyan, with Villanova "at the bottom of the list." When Villanova offered him a scholarship though, his mind was set on the Main Line campus.

Carlton Young

"The people here have been fantastic," he went on, "and are always offering encouragement."

Rest assured that Carlton's professors and coaches have not regretted his presence here either, because he has prospered in and out of the classroom. Sporting a cumulative grade average that hovers somewhere around 3.9, Carlton has set his sights on medical school and becoming a surgeon. He has already been accepted at and plans to attend Johns Hopkins because "it fits my personality best."

His scholastic exploits are even more impressive when one considers the long and grueling hours that he has put in on the track. And Carlton is no mundane, run-of-the-mill runner, as a national indoor quarter mile record will attest.

"I have not regretted coming here in the least because I feel that I could not have struck such a balance between academics and athletics at another place," he said.

Carlton set the aforementioned mark last spring in the 440-meter event at East Tennessee State University. Citing that the track was flat and unbanked, he sticks to his humble nature in saying that "the record has a lot of stipulations."

In addition to all this, Carlton has tutored other students, led Bible study classes and worked during his summers at the Pennsylvania Hospital since tenth grade, performing cancer research for the American Foundation for Negro Affairs. He has co-authored several papers with physicians at the hospital as well.

Where does a person find the time and strength to do all these things and do them well? Carlton's answer is simple.

"I have been blessed in so many ways," he said. "I believe that whatever a person is given by God, he is responsible for, so I have just tried to be dedicated and disciplined," he added.

So, barring any unforeseen circumstances, Carlton will enter Johns Hopkins next fall as a first-year medical student en route to fulfilling his dream. Don't be at all surprised, however, if he takes a sudden detour across the Atlantic and ends up studying in England for two years as a Rhodes Scholar.

For as Dr. Michael Burke, chairman of the University Fellowship Fund (the Rhodes Nomination Committee), said, "To the extent that the Rhodes is supposed to represent the academic, athletic and the well-roundedness of an individual, Carlton Young epitomizes this."

Women Swimmers Start With Mixed Results

By LAURA FORTUNATO

Over the last two weeks, the Villanova women's swimming team has been busy meeting the challenges of their new Division I Conference and have compiled a record of 2-2 in dual meet competition.

The next challenge came from the double dual meet with Yale and Maine, which are two of the toughest teams in the East. "Although we lost to powerhouse Yale, we were able to swim right with them in most of the events," commented Coach McKee. Often the differences between first and second places were within tenths to hundredths of a second. The team's performances did allow them to outswim the University of Maine.

Villanova met with Princeton on Nov. 29, losing 84-65. Princeton is one of the top 10 teams in the Northeast Division I conference. "Although we lost, we had a number of very impressive swims," added McKee. Beth Metzger and Genny Mulderig were triple winners, with Metzger winning the 100 Back, 200 Fly, and 100 Fly, and Mulderig winning the 200 Free, 200 Back and the 200 I.M.

Hard work, determination and team effort enabled the Watercats to emerge as victors in the West Chester Invitational on Dec. 5.

"Winning the meet was important for a few reasons," said McKee. "First of all we will be meeting Drexel, Temple and Navy in dual meet competition later this season. The win was a boost to our incentive. Secondly, it was a great way to sum up the hard work of the first half of the season."

He added, "We had many personal best times and some fine performances from our freshmen competitors."

McKee summed up the first ha of the season by saying, "Th women worked hard towar their goals, achieving both tea successes and personal a compliahments. Many are rig on target for qualifying for the B East and Division I National The freshmen have also prov their ability to handle competiti and have posted excellent perfo mances." The next five weeks w be crucial to the swimmers' se son. It will consist primarily of t tense training as they break fro competition to prepare for the s cond half of the season.

Icecats Stumble, 5-2

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Villanova's ice hockey team travelled to New Jersey this past weekend to challenge Division III opponent Upsala. As it turned out after three periods of play, the Cats were forced to accept a disappointing 5-2 defeat.

Upsala was the first team to score, but Villanova managed to fire themselves up and toward the end of the first period sophomore John Canuso drove the puck into the net. He was assisted by the other members of his line, senior Jim Ragold and first-year player Paul McDonald.

Neither team scored in the second period, and in the third period, Upsala scored twice before assistant captain Ken Downey, with the help of sophomore Jamie Huston, was able to score for Nova. However, the Cats effort was not enough and Upsala managed to score once more before the game ended.

Captain Frank Segreto was very pleased with the team though. "We played a very tough game and I was very happy with the overall performance of the guys — we just didn't get the breaks.

"I was especially proud of the efforts of rookies Paul Critchley and Bill Davis," Segreto added.

THE YEAR IN SPORTS

Spring

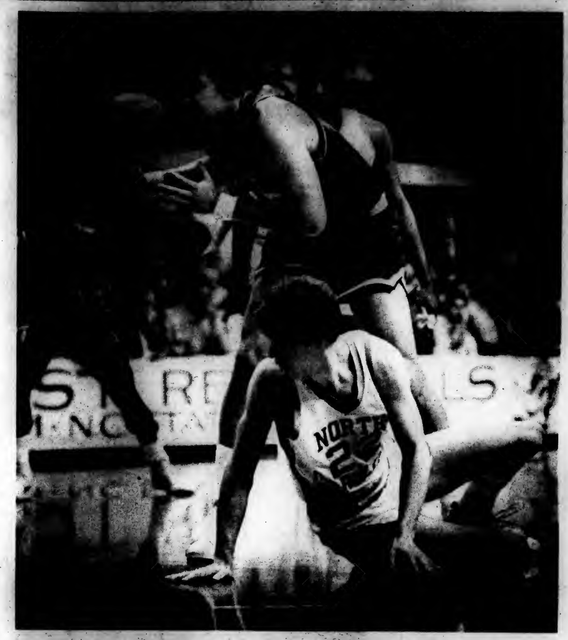
The 1982 year presented great opportunities for many Wildcat teams and Villanova athletes made the most of them.

On the hardwood, the Wildcat men's basketball team won the Big East regular season title with an 11-3 mark. The Cats then battled their way to the NCAA East Regional Finals before bowing to eventual national champion North Carolina.

The women hoopsters refused to be outdone by their male counterparts as they won the EAIAW crown and advanced to the AIAW Final Four before being ousted by Rutgers. The women's final mark of 29-4 earned them the number 11 spot in the final national poll.

The Wildcat track team had another outstanding season, which was highlighted by a national record at the Penn Relays in the 4x800 event. Carrying the baton for the Cats in that event were Marcus O'Sullivan, Mike England, John Hunter and John Marshall.

The women tracksters put forth a great effort earlier this year as they captured the EAIAW indoor and outdoor championships. Eleven Villanova women were honored with All-America status.



Fall

On the artificial turf, the men's soccer team posted an 8-6-3 record, marking their fourth consecutive winning season. Senior Brian Barr set a Nova career scoring record with 28 goals.

A young Villanova volleyball squad hustled its way to a fine 25-20 record during a grueling 45 match schedule.

The women's tennis team recorded a sterling 17-3 mark this year while senior Carol Harrison set a new Villanova career mark with 57 match wins.

Cats Capture Cabrillo Classic

By MICHAEL HEALEY

Game One: Dec. 29, 1982

In a game which coaches and players alike deemed pivotal for a change in the young season's momentum, the Villanova Wildcats turned in a sterling team effort and posted a hard-earned 75-68 win over the Golden Hurricane of Tulsa.

By weathering the Hurricane, the 'Cats advanced to the finals of the Cabrillo Classic, where they played host team to San Diego State, winners over Florida State in the nightcap, 89-85.

Senior point guard Stewart Granger got 'Nova off and running early in the Tulsa game, dishing off three quick assists for a short-lived 8-2 lead. Tulsa, however, mostly off the offense of swingmen Ricky Ross and Steve Harris, stormed back and took a 20-12 lead with 9:03 to play.

Following their first time out, the 'Cats went into a pressure man-for-man defense and seemed to predicate the tempo of the contest more to their liking. Largely due to the efforts of senior go-getter Mike Mulquin and sophomore Gary McLain, who masterfully orchestrated the point, Villanova put in a run of its own, recapturing the lead at 25-22.

The remainder of the first half was touch and go, with the two Top Twenty clubs playing a fast-paced, intense brand of ball. The Wildcats took a slim 35-32 lead into the locker room though, after a late-half surge by Granger.

The 6-7 Ross took matters into his own hands at the outset of the second half, quickly drilling three long jumpers to forge Tulsa to a 43-38 lead. Two of his shots were from deep three point range, but fortunately for Villanova, the Classic was played free of shot clocks and three point lines.

With 14:48 to play and the 'Cats down by five in the matchup, Coach Rollie Massimino sent McLain in to control the ball and switched Granger to shooting guard. The tactic worked wonders, as Granger buried some serious 22 foot jumpers of his own to give V.U. a 46-45 lead, a lead that they would never relinquish.

At the other end of the court on all-important defense, Massimino tried defensing Ross with Mulquin, Dwayne McClain and then Granger, to attempt to slow the sniper down. This strategy eventually worked as well, for Ross tired and did not score another point until the game's outcome was academic.

John Pinone, showing little sign of his painful back injury, scored 19 points and iced the game at the charity stripe along with Granger. The two seniors canned 19 of 23 free throws between them.

"It's really nothing at the foul line," said Granger, who wound up with a team high 24 points. "John and I have been in that situation so many times before," he added, "that we just go out there and stick 'em."

"The kids knew that they needed this one," said Massimino. "Everything is a hurdle," he added, "but this was a very big hurdle. It separates the good teams from the mediocre."

The Wildcats had reached a stage, he continued, where they began wondering "Are we as good as they (the press) think we are?" His squad had gone from being overconfident to underconfident and thus, he said, "Psychological warfare had come into play."

Massimino was also especially pleased about the play of McLain, who turned in 27 key minutes of play, turning the ball over only once. "This game is definitely a McLain, "and I'm happy that I had a part in it."

"I'm used to the pressure of coming into the game," he continued, "because I had a whole year coming off the bench. The only pressure I feel is that which I put on myself because I'm a very competitive person."

Villanova's Ed Pinckney

Massimino, as were the rest of the 5500 or so onlookers, was duly impressed with the play of Ross, possibly the best swingman since Benny Goodman. "That Ricky Ross was terrific," he said, "and he just really drilled everything." Ross finished as the game's high scorer with 29 points on 12 of 22 shooting.

Game Two: Dec. 30, 1982

Basketball, as the Aztecs of San Diego State painfully discovered in the finals of their own Cabrillo Classic, is a team game. If the players on a team are working in unison, as were the starters for Villanova against State, then that team has the clear and decided advantage.

This essential edge translated into a 63-57 victory for the Wildcats, upping their record to 6-2.

Dorm Plans Approved

By LINDA BOND

Preliminary building plans for the University's new facilities on the South Ithan tract of campus have been approved by Radnor Township's Board of Commissioners.

The Board's action follows the submission of a subdivision plan by Villanova to Radnor Township early last fall calling for the construction of two four-story dormitories and a two-story food service building.

Local neighbors living near the sight of the future complex were distressed by the plans for new dormitories and sought changes in the original design, thus delaying preliminary approval.

The building plans then underwent a period of review by Radnor planners and local residents.

Points of unrest for Villanova's neighbors include loud noise coming from stereos and parties, storm drainage on their properties, and the closeness of the buildings to the back property line. Area residents are also distressed by the anticipated drop in the market value of their homes as a result of the construction.

In response to these concerns, Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A., director of planning for Villanova, said that there will not be student rooms on the back of the nearer dormitory and that non-operable windows are being considered.

BOCCA, a national fire code review organization, will examine the safety situation of fixed windows for Villanova's new dormitories and determine the matter conclusively.

Student Body President Paul Tufano expressed his desire to educate the University community about student-generated noise and its control.

McKenzie said a temporary six-foot high cedar fence will be erected along the west property line until an evergreen screen grows in to serve as a buffer for the neighbors.

Water runoff will be handled, according to McKenzie, by a retention basin at the low end of the project site to collect all storm drainage.

Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A.

Easement rights, the right to use or place on another's property, were given to the township and a sanitary sewer easement has been widened from 10 to 20 feet for readiness of access by the township.

The dormitories are expected to be completed in August, 1984. The dining hall is planned but its construction is postponed until it can be financed at a later date. The dorm project is expected to cost $6 million.

Plans for the dorms show two buildings of identical design turned at different angles to the back property line. The dormitories will be of brick and limestone with 160 students housed in each one.

McKenzie indicated that at least one of the two dormitories will be for women. Phone service will be optional and a cable for individual computer hookup is planned.

According to McKenzie, "There is pressure to accommodate a larger number on campus. This historic split of half and half (on and off campus) has drifted and now 40 percent are on campus, but 82 percent want to live on campus. If we put more on the campus, we are better assuring our future survival."

Activities Forum

Isn't it about time that you got out of Falvey and got involved in an activity where you can meet new people and do something you enjoy? Why not come to the Activities Forum on Jan. 27 in the West Lounge of Dougherty from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and find out what Villanova Organizations can offer you!

Readers Needed

We have a golden opportunity for volunteering right here on Villanova's campus. Readers are needed to help a blind teacher. This volunteering opportunity would require time to read material and would be done here at Villanova. A few friends could get together and share the time. If you are interested, call Sr. Joy or Mrs. Hansen at the Social Action Office, 645-4075 or stop in 121 Tolentine.

Auditions

Anyone interested in joining the Villanova Women's Glee Club is asked to come to room 204 of John Barry Hall either this coming Monday or Wednesday night at 6 p.m.

Villanovans for Life

Tomorrow is the 10th anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision handed down by the Supreme Court. The decision made 'abortion on demand' legal for all who sought them. Every year since this decision thousands of people have gathered together in Washington to "March for Life" to show their disapproval of this decision. If you would like more information on the March, contact the Villanovans for Life at 645-7244. Their office is in Dougherty 108. Please stop by.

Their will also be a "prayer for life" service today, January 21, in Corr Chapel at 7 p.m. All students and faculty members are welcome — especially if you will not be able to attend the march for life. Let's make this the year for human rights.

Financial Aid

Aplications for financial aid for the 1983/84 academic year are now available in the Financial Aid Office, second floor, Kennedy Hall.

All students who will need assistance during the 1983/84 year are urged to pick up information and materials immediately!

The deadline for filing is March 15, 1983.

All upperclass students must file the combined Pennsylvania (PHEAA) State Grant/Federal Grant (PELL) Application. Students who are not Pennsylvania residents must also file the proper forms required by their home state. Applications should be completed as soon as possible based on actual 1982 income tax data. Aid will be awarded on a first come-first serve basis after all required information has been supplied to the Financial Aid office.

Photographers

The Photography Department and the Villanovan are looking for Photographers. Requirements: Freshman, sophomore or junior; some darkroom experience; and willing to put in five to ten hours a week.

Applications available in the Student Activities Office, 214 Dougherty Hall.

Photographer Needed

Anyone interested in working as a photographer for the "Freshman Record" for second semester, please come up to the Villanova Union office.

Vita Program

The Internal Revenue Service is seeking members of civic, fraternal, church or social organizations to participate in its Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program.

The purpose of the VITA program is to provide free assistance to low income, elderly and non-English speaking taxpayers who cannot afford professional help in preparing their 1982 income tax forms.

Volunteers will be given free instructions by the IRS in the preparation of personal income tax forms. The Volunteers will then set up "sites" where members of their organizations or community can come for help.

The instruction lasts three days and will be provided in various Eastern Pennsylvania cities during the months of December and January. A volunteer does not need any special background in math, accounting or law. Individuals participating in VITA are not considered professional tax preparers and are not held legally responsible for the return.

Persons or organizations interested in participating in this community service should contact Lyndel Brown by calling toll-free, 1-800-464-4000, extension 0512. In Philadelphia, the number is 597-0512.

University II

Do you have a unique skill or hobby that you would like to share? Why not become a University II teacher? The teacher recruitment deadline is Jan. 26. For an application or more information contact the Villanova Union Office at 645-7280.

Powervolleyball

Anyone interested in playing U.S.V.B.A. Powervolleyball at Villanova, there will be an organizational meeting of the Club on Tuesday, Jan. 25 at 9 p.m. in the West Lounge. Men and women are both invited.

R.A. Selections

Applications for R. A. positions may be turned into the office for Residence Life, 219 Tolentine Hall from January 24 - 26 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Remember to sign up for first round interviews.

Tri-Delts

Delta Delta Delta is awarding a local scholarship. All full time undergraduate women are eligible. Applications may be picked up in the Student Activities Office now. Deadline is Nov. 14.

Used Book Sale

The Pre-Law Society requests that people who brought in books to be sold to pick up their money and/or books in the Public Lounge, from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday, Jan. 24 to Friday, Jan. 28. Books will be bought at this time.

Spring Semester Trips

As you know, the Graduate School office and the Graduate Student Council have for several years sponsored trips during the mid-term break during the spring semester. Some of the most successful have been to Bermuda and Hawaii.

This year we have three choices:

(1) BERMUDA — Monday, Feb. 28 to Friday, March 4 — $429 + $40 Tax & Services

(2) CANCUN — Sunday, Feb. 27 to Sunday, March 6 — $399 + 15 percent Tax & Services

(3) HAWAII — Saturday, Feb. 26 to Sunday, March 6 — $645 + 15 percent Tax & Services

The cost includes round-trip airfare from Philadelphia International Airport, transfers, baggage handling and gratuities, and accommodations. The Bermuda price also includes full breakfast, tea and dinner each day and all gratuities to hotel personnel, including the dining room.

If interested please get in touch with the Graduate Office (Extension 7090). There is a deadline of Dec. 17 for a $100 deposit.

Bon Voyage.

Quebec Ski Trip

Spend spring break in Quebec, Canada. A ski/culture trip will be held from Feb. 26 to March 2. The cost is only $199 and includes lodging at the contemporary Loews Le Concorde.

For more information on this wintertime vacation package program, contact Dr. Rene Mongeau in 212 St. Thomas (645-4704). Sponsored by the Modern Language department. All are welcome.

Florida/Bahamas

The final payment for the Florida/Bahamas trip is due on Jan. 24 in the Connelly Center ticket office by 4:30 p.m. If there are any questions, please contact John Happ or Bill Parker at 645-7280 in the Villanova Union Office.

Study Abroad Workshop

On Jan. 24 at 4 p.m. in 201 St. Thomas, there will be a workshop for anyone interested in studying abroad. This workshop will feature a panel of students who have attended a European university to answer questions you have and to discuss their experiences. Sponsored by the French Club.

Study Seminar

The Counseling Center will sponsor a study seminar to assist students in developing and extending their study skills. They will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Topics include: Preparing a Daily Activity Schedule/Daily Study Schedule (Jan. 27), SQ4r Method of Study (Feb. 1), Cornell System of Notetaking (Feb. 3) and Preparing for Exams (Feb. 8).

If you are interested in participating, please call the Counseling Center (645-4050) since the seminars will be limited to 15 students a session.

English Lecture

Daniel Hoffman, poet-in-residence at the University of Pennsylvania and official poet of the Philadelphia Tercentenary, will read from his book-length poem on William Penn's founding of Philadelphia, Brotherly Love, on Thursday, Feb. 3, 1983 at 4:15 in the Connelly Center Cinema. He will also speak about the use of history in poetry. Faculty, students, and the public are invited. Refreshments will follow in the Public Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Trustee Committee to Review Football

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Responding to numerous requests from various University constituencies, the University Board of Trustees has agreed to review its position on intercollegiate football with the addition of a resolution calling for a committee to define a football program at Villanova.

At the Dec. 15 meeting of the trustees, a resolution was adopted calling for the appointment of a committee of the board to define an intercollegiate football program that would meet three criteria: consistency with the University's academic goals and standards, financial sustainability, and attractiveness to the various segments of the university's constituencies.

Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman, Board of Trustees — John Walsh Photo

The Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the trustees, will choose the committee that is to report its findings no later than December, 1983.

In a statement released by the Trustees "the review was undertaken in response to a recent motion from the University Senate; a November poll of the undergraduate student body which indicated strong interest and potential financial support for a football program; and long-standing requests from leaders of the University's Alumni Association to restore football."

After 87 years of the sport at Villanova, football was dropped suddenly April 14, 1981. Following 20 months of first requests and then, demands, the trustees resolution is seen by many as the first major positive step taken to restore football to the Main Line.

The reaction of many directly related to the situation is "cautiously optimistic."

According to Douglas Murray, president of the General Alumni Association, the official alumni group of Villanova, the trustees resolution should be recognized as a positive move toward restoration of football.

"It is a positive, well-intentioned resolution by the trustees," said Murray. "The University has been supplied with new information concerning student willingness to support football and has certainly recognized the showing of support by the alumni. I just hope they don't waste any time defining a football program."

Murray said his initial reaction to the resolution calling for a definition of an intercollegiate program is that Villanova had such a program three years ago and that continues to be his reasoning.

The president of the association, who called for the resignation of University President Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., on behalf of the alumni last April, revealed that the alumni have been "relatively quiet," waiting to see what happens the past few months.

"We have unabashedly been making some noise because we thought the decision to discontinue football was just not handled right," said Murray, who also stated that while the alumni still formally stand by their call for Driscoll's resignation, it was based on conditions present at the time and events could change the association's position.

Shortly after the sport was dropped at Villanova, a Committee to Restore Football was formed by the alumni and featured comedian Bob Hope at the Academy of Music in a soldout performance that demonstrated the strength and interest of the alumni.

On the one-year anniversary of the dropping of football, Murray called for Driscoll's resignation, citing the failure to recognize the importance of the alumni and the unexpected discontinuation of football.

Driscoll responded to the alumni's demand by dismissing the idea of a resignation and received a vote of confidence from the trustees. In an interview with the Villanovan (April 23, 1982), Driscoll said "I as president would attempt to resolve any of the issues with the one exception being football." The Villanova president also stated that no attempt would be made at a restoration in the immediate future. Eight months later, the trustees agreed to review its position on intercollegiate football.

As the efforts to restore football were intensified by various groups, the Villanovan printed two letters in its October editions that elicited reactions from those on both sides of the situation.

In a letter to Driscoll from then-Vice-President for Student Life Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., Deegan congratulated the president for dropping football and ridding the University of "problems stemming from the football mentality . . . my staff has spent untold hours dealing with discipline . . . football does not contribute to the mission of Villanova University."

A week later, a letter from Thomas Labreque, a university trustee and former chairman of the trustee Ad Hoc Committee on Athletics to Joseph Walters, a fellow trustee, said that "the peremptory process to arrive at the decision (to drop football) was not one to be proud of." Labreque claimed that the decision "is a low point in communicating with each other and in the decision making process . . ."

This past November, in a survey conducted by the Student Government Committee to Restore Football, 96 percent of the 4300 Villanova students polled agreed to support a football program with the payment of a $35 dollar fee.

Paul Tufano, student body president who conducted the balloting, wants the students to see the group who will study all options and information.

Also in November, the University Senate passed a motion recommending to the trustees that it conduct a comprehensive review of the entire athletic program, including consideration of an intercollgiate program.

The motion was passed after the Senate refused to consider a motion that strongly recommended to the trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue football.

Cats Capture Tournament

It didn't take the 'Cats a long time to give San Diego State a taste of basketball, Philadelphia style. Early on, senior All-American John Pinone, serving notice that he would have to be reckoned with, took a crisp pass from Harold Pressley, laid the ball in and was fouled. Pinone hit the ensuing free throw to make the score 3-0.

The play in itself was unspectacular but nonetheless important because it adequately set the tone for the contest: The 'Cats would attempt to feed the ball into their big men, pressure the Aztecs with their multiple defenses and in so doing, dictate the pace of the game.

The squads traded buckets for a brief while, but then 'Nova's pesky one-three-one half-court trap began to take its toll on the Aztecs ballhandlers, forcing them into numerous turnovers. Before long, the score was 13-6, V.U., and State Coach David "Smokey" Gaines called time out.

The timeout seemed to settle Gaines' charges down a bit, and the basically nondescript first half was then played on even terms, ending with Villanova up 32-29.

A personal milestone was set, however, with 11:46 to play in the half when senior Stew Granger knocked in a deep jumper for his 1,000th collegiate point.

Second-half action was initiated with State's junior All-America candidate, Michael Cage, a mirror image of Memphis State's Keith Lee, scoring his third and last basket of the evening. Pinckney held Cage to a whopping 14 points below his scoring average.

The 'Cats played lethargically for the first several minutes of the half and paid for it: the Aztecs took their first and only lead of the game, 33-32, with 13:15 to play.

But soon, where the pupil last boisterous crowd of 7,565 thought that their team would build on that lead, the 'Cats slammed the door on them with consecutive three point plays by Pinckney and Dwayne McClain. Following another Pinckney hoop, the 'Cats were up 46-39 and the Villanova bench could breathe a collective sigh of relief.

With a little over seven minutes to play and with a lead of ten, Coach Rollie Massimino instituted the spread offense to slow things down and eat away at the clock. The Aztecs had been packing their zone in tightly, Massimino explained, forcing the Wildcats to shoot from outside.

"Nothing was going for us," said Massimino, "so we started holding the ball a little earlier than we usually do, but patience and poise are what our team is all about. We think," he added, "that we can beat a fast or a slow team in the country."

Forced to foul to stop the clock, the State players usually fouled the wrong man, Pinone. With the cagey veteran hitting six of seven decisive free throws down the stretch, the Aztecs had little chance.

Pinckney ended the game with a bang, putting home a picturesque reverse slam-dunk to account for the final 63-57 tally.

Pinone led all scorers with 22 points, while Granger had 14 and Pinckney had 16 and 15 BIG rebounds. To reiterate the team concept axiom, consider this: two State starters had 16 points apiece but another two had nary a point.

An obviously pleased Massimino felt that the game's verdict was an encouraging sign.

"Playing away from home is not easy," he said. "You don't win many tournaments on the road, but we hung in there and beat a pretty good basketball team out there tonight."

Tolentine Fires Occurring Often

By JAMES DeLORENZO

Small fires and damage to classrooms in Tolentine Hall were discovered Dec. 14. Other fires have been set in the stairwells, according to Dr. John J. Schrems, an associate professor in the political science department. "I've learned that this type of thing has been a fairly regular occurrence. Someone had set fire to all the flyers in the stairwell, and also to those above some of the water fountains," Schrems said.

The fire, set in a trash can in the first floor men's room, "could have been very dangerous, but burnt itself out," said Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance. The men's room, recently constructed, sustained approximately $23,000 damage.

Also damaged that night were the walls and desks in other classrooms and an electrical control panel. Several desks were also thrown out of windows.

Schrems has written to the administration to request that Tolentine be closed in the evenings. "I've received no response from the administration," stated Schrems. "Several people in the psychology department are upset about this. They had requested last year that the building be closed.

I want to let people know that I, and others, are concerned," Schrems said. "You can either keep the building open and expect the consequences, or close it."

"Kids do want to study there," said Harrity, "and we're going to leave it open for them. No one in the administration has said anything to us about closing it."

"We've been keeping a close eye on the situation," explained Sgt. John Harrity, acting director of security. "This person is sick. We don't know who did it, but when we catch them, they are going to jail."

"According to one of Tolentine's janitors, there had been several cases like this before, but I knew nothing of it," Trucks said. "It scares me that people like that are around. They could do more damage."

"I'm sure others know what happened that night," added Schrems. "This is a community, and one shouldn't allow a member of the community to do this. If someone knows, they should very quietly turn them in. If the vandals need to be squealed on, do so."

"We didn't anticipate any problems over the semester break," said Harrity. "It was a very quiet time, with very little activity on campus."

"It was better than previous breaks, security wise," Harrity claimed. "No one was really here. No one unauthorized entered any of the buildings, no reports of trouble on campus, no real complaints that I know of."

While most of the buildings on campus were closed down for several days to accommodate a new electrical transformer in Tolentine Hall, "the only jobs we had were ones that were already scheduled," said Trucks.

The snowfall this past weekend, was easier to deal with, Trucks said, "because there weren't many cars in the parking lots or students on the sidewalks. We had people in to help on Sunday," Trucks added, "but the refreezing of melted snow was a problem.

PEOPLE LOVE US NAKED.

Recently we stripped the labels off our beer and asked young New Yorkers to try it. 8 out of 10 liked it. They said it was a good tasting, smooth beer.

When we tried it on more beer drinkers, they were surprised to find out it was Schaefer Beer.

They said things like, "I'm shocked that this is Schaefer beer, because I really didn't think that I liked it, and I honestly do."

Today's Schaefer is being brewed by the Stroh family, who have devoted their 200 years of brewing experience to making Schaefer better than ever. Try it. Today's Schaefer will make a Schaefer drinker out of you, too.

Fraternities Suffer Strict Sanctions

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

"Very strong sanctions have been imposed against three fraternities, Lambda Kappa Delta, Lambda Chi Alpha and Pi Kappa Alpha, who involved themselves in activities that were either hazing or flagrant violations of University rules," according to Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities.

Lamba Kappa Delta has lost its recognition as a student organization at Villanova for four years. This is the equivalent of having a charter revoked.

"This sanction was assessed because the chapter required its pledges to act in a highly illegal and immoral manner as part of the chapter's scavenger hunt," according to Bonas.

"There was an invasion of privacy on the opposite sex and a number of invasions by officers without correct information or withholding information," added Bonas.

Action was taken against two brothers of LKD as well as against the fraternity as a whole. "The sanctions are very strict, but this was for the best interest of the Greek system," said Dean of Students Rev. John Stack, O.S.A. "To improve the quality of the Greek organizations and to insure their existence on campus, we cannot tolerate any hazing or violations of University rules."

LKD was the oldest fraternity on campus. "Even after four years, re-installment of the fraternity should be fairly easy," said Stack. "With the old alumni it should not be difficult."

As a local fraternity, LKD's sanction was limited in options. "We had no choice but to revoke their recognition as a University organization. There was no support group behind them as a national fraternity would have," said Bonas. In the case of a national, a membership review could have been run, and "this is what we would have rather done," added Bonas.

LKD has until Jan. 21 to appeal to the University Board on the recognition decision.

Lambda Chi Alpha has been placed on probation for a full calendar year. This action was taken, according to Bonas, "because of the legal difficulties that one of their associate members (pledges) encountered as a result of the chapter's scavenger hunt."

LXA is required to participate in a number of behavioral contracts during the year. A chapter retreat to examine their current position and a weekly discussion with Gary Bonas on their pledge program have been planned so far.

This is a joint sanction for LXA between the University and the National Chapter.

The third fraternity, Pi Kappa Alpha involved their pledges in "what appears to be physical and mental hazing during the last night of their pledge program," said Bonas.

The case will be referred to the University's Pledging Infractions Committee at the beginning of the spring semester.

The group will hear the case, determine guilt or innocence and then award appropriate sanctions.

Trustess Review Football Again

We're getting closer.

The Villanova Board of Trustees has agreed to review its position on intercollegiate football, a move that has been lobbied for by various University constitutiencies since the sport was dropped 20 months ago. This signals that the Board of Trustees is willing to review past decisions in an objective manner and possibly make necessary changes.

According to the trustees, the action has been undertaken in response to the efforts from the University Senate, the student government and the University's alumni association, which provided information and studies critical to the possible restoration of the program.

The board will select a committee to "define" an intercollegiate football program at Villanova. Any restoration of the program will have to meet three criteria: financial sustainability, consistency with the University's academic goals and standards and attraction to the various segments of the University's constituencies.

From the time football was dropped in April 1981, the alumni have repeatedly tried to convince the University that financial sustainability is possible. Various fundraisers by the alumni association have proven that they are serious in their intent to see football restored and will guarantee continuous support.

In addition, an overwhelming 96 percent of the 4300-plus Villanova students polled in November said they were willing to pay an annual $35 fee for a football program at Villanova. The response told the trustees that the students would be willing to assume the responsibility of putting a Wildcat squad back on the gridiron.

Concerning consistency with the University's academic goals and standards, newly established regulations adopted by the NCAA can enforce that the University will adhere to certain academic standards. Naturally, the football players would have to follow the University's academic guidelines.

Finally, studies have proven the attractiveness to the various segments of the University's constituencies. According to a University Senate athletic study, "the public exposure generated by an intercollegiate football program also provides a significant positive contribution to the University," and football would provide "benefits to participating students, visibility for the University, and a rallying point for student and alumni activities."

The Board of Trustees is to be commended for showing the courage to, in effect, admit that they may have been a bit too hasty in their original decision to drop football. They are now willing to take a second look at a program that, if reestablished, can restore Villanova in a positive light in the eyes of many and prove that the communication process here is an open, honest one.

It would also heal many wounds.

Responsibility?

One likes to think, sometimes nearsightedly, that by the time a person has reached college-level age, he or she has attained a certain sense of responsibility. College administrators and educators hope that students fully and clearly realize that they are held responsible for their actions, and whatever consequences their actions might cause. College students, as impetuous and impulsive as some are, should not have to be told time and time again that they are personally responsible for whatever course of action they choose.

Yet recent evidence at Villanova disputes this once-realistic, now-idealistic belief.

Consider the damage done in Tolentine Hall on Dec. 14-15, towards the conclusion of final exams. Apparently, one or more young adults took it upon themselves to set fires in the waste baskets of classrooms, causing considerable damage. In addition, several chairs and desks were destroyed by the unthinking malcontents.

Consider, too, the ignorant but lucky student-pedestrian who decided to cross over the Amtrak-Conrail railroad tracks because he was in a bit of a hurry. Perhaps he deemed that the ten seconds he saved by going over the tracks were worth his life. Fortunately, there was not an accident.

It is indeed difficult to see the logic behind either senseless incident. The sad truth is, however, as these Romper-room antics attest, that few are to the detriment of all, and that some people never fully grasp the concept of responsibility.

Fires, Damage Shoud Close Tolentine

Editor's Note: (The following is a copy of a letter sent to Rev. Laurence Gallen, O.S.A., Vice president of Academic Affairs.

Dear Father Gallen:

On Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning, Dec. 14-15, considerable damage was done to Tolentine Hall by individuals using the building after the faculty and staff had left. Most disturbing were the small fires that were set. Upon inquiring I have learned that the damage and fires are a fairly regular occurrence and that evidence of little fires have been found in trash baskets and in classrooms in the past. I am confident that these destructive acts are the work of only one or two individuals but I am also confident that for every culprit there are five to ten others who know them.

I would request of you that this building be closed until those responsible for the fires and destruction are identified and prosecuted. I realize that closing the building may be regarded as a deprivation for some who would use it for study purposes but this is a community and those who would themselves do us no harm should be reminded of that as well as those who are engaged in these harmful acts. If the argument is raised that students must use Tolentine to study because the library is too noisy then the noise problem in the library should be remedied. If the response of the innocent to such disturbances is each time to seek a quieter retreat they will find that they are in a perpetual escape mode.

Those responsible for the disturbances should be evicted from Tolentine, the library, the dormitories, or even the University.

Sincerely,
John J. Schrems

Man and Universe: No Separation

Man is an artist creating the world. He is also a part of the artwork itself which is creating the artist. Many deny or ignore this circular structure of consciousness, of life. They prefer a linear notion of time and a closed concept of space.

The fact of our incompleteness and interdependency, and the consequent responsibility of needing always to re-create ourselves, is shunned by those who desperately want to "be" someone — once and for all. But our incompleteness is inescapable. At the beginning of this new semester it is instructive to recall that success is never final and failure is never fatal.

It is a Janus-faced illusion of the technological age in which we live that knowledge is thought to equal the manipulation of factual data, and that it is possible to see things the way they "really" are. This kind of narrowmindedness is the product of a mentality that technology has given rise to: a computer mentality. Our technological myopia imprisons us within the safe illusion of a particular social, political, aesthetic, or spiritual view from which we "tell it like it is." And we do not want to hear anything else. What we have lost is the art of authentic listening.

Perceptual and value rigidity pose a greater threat to man than nuclear holocaust. It is this uncritical mentality that produced the bomb in the first place. Now we do not know how to get rid of it. Man is like the universe itself — a changing, dynamic, paradoxical and ultimately mysterious phenomenon, "doing its own thing" in such a way that no one formulation of what that way is will ever be sufficient. An academic community, in particular, should remember and celebrate this. It goes to the heart of what is meant by "university."

Think about this. There is no list that could ever exhaust the qualities of, say, a stone. Even the lowliest of stones always retains the possibility of being seen in a new light (both physical light — whatever that is — and the metaphorical "light" of conscious perception) which can always illuminate more and more of the stone's qualities. The qualities of a stone are infinite. It is arrogant to think that we could ever know any particular stone, or the nature of stoneness, once and for all. If that was possible, artists would have put themselves out of business long ago.

The simple fact of our limited relationship to any object of study does not destroy the possibility of knowledge. Rather, it should rid us of our arrogant attempts to possess knowledge in a manipulative and tyrannical way. The techno-scientific approach to knowing the world and the underlying philosophical principles of this approach (subject/object dualism and a mechanistic Newtonian reductionism) attempt to conquer the world rather than harmonize with it. This creates a kind of technological imperialism which eventually turns on its master — as it is doing today. It is this mentality which is the basic cause of our economic, political, social and spiritual problems.

What is needed is a cognitive ecology that will save the dynamic, unpredictable, serendipitous, passionate and mysterious aspects of knowledge. These qualities have become the endangered species of our intellectual life. But it is not only a holistic and pluralistic view of the world that is in danger of extinction. Ultra-scientific rationalism also destroys these same qualities in the person who refuses to accept them as an integral part of the natural world. This is the more serious problem. It is not so much that we need to fear computers becoming human as it is that we should deeply fear humans becoming like computers.

The universe is not something separate from us, not something "out there" to discover, manipulate and conquer. Given what we have to work with, we must constantly re-create the universe from within ourselves or it will cease to exist. This is the source of man's true freedom and responsibility. We are not only the hand drawing the hand. We are also the hand which is being drawn by the very hand we draw.

May I Have The Envelope, Please

By NANCY C. ALBERICI

There she was, Linda McAllister, the five-foot nine-inch brunette beauty who placed third runner-up in the Miss Delaware Valley Pageant, clothed in gray "sweats," complementing her natural fresh-faced appeal.

Smiling warmly, with her feet propped up on a chair, there was no false air about her; she was genuine and giving. Her sparkling green eyes opened wide as the Villanova senior finance major explained the reasoning behind her decision to compete in the first stage of the Miss America Pageant.

Taking the advice from a longtime friend, McAllister applied to a modeling agency, where she was immediately accepted. During a make-up session, a former Miss Philadelphia, Janice Hamilton, approached her with an offer she couldn't refuse. "How would you like to be the next Miss America?" Hamilton asked her. Without thinking twice, McAllister replied, "Yes, I'd love to!"

For the talent portion of the contest, McAllister chose to sing "I Could Have Danced All Night" from the Broadway musical, "My Fair Lady." Although this natural talent has never had any formal training, her voice has the mature, crystal-clear quality of a professional.

Facing a panel of judges who drilled her with questions concerning such issues as the pros and cons of Reaganomics, McAllister found the interview to be the most pressure-oriented part of the pageant. "There were seven judges firing questions at me — sometimes, two at a time, to see how I reacted," she said.

Linda McAllister

In the past, McAllister held a mental image of pageantry as a cutthroat type of competition. To her surprise, the contestants proved that image wrong. "I expected to go into a lion's den with claws bared. The girls were a lot more friendly and helpful than I thought they would be," Linda recalled.

Will this potential beauty queen try to capture the title next year? "The only way I would do it again is if I needed the scholarship prize money or if I decided to go into the music industry. The pageant is a showcase for new talent and the people I would be dealing with are good and kind. They are just the way they come across; a wholesome group," she said.

Contrary to popular belief, beauty is not only skin deep. One simply has to speak with Linda McAllister to know this.

Singles Make A "Discovery"

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

Panic is beginning to set in. Sixteen years of schooling are about to come to a close and the realities of the "real world" take over. Finding a job is the most predominant thought on seniors' minds but another thought is, "How will I meet people after college?" Attending college, especially one of Villanova's size provides one with almost endless possibilities to meet and interact with new people each year. But what happens in May? Is there social life after college?

For some graduates, meeting prospective spouses becomes an important goal. The trick is finding the right situation in which to carry this out, It is now 1983, computers are becoming a way of life, so maybe computer dating is a consideration. But somehow that method seems highly impersonal and very chancy. Then there are the ads one may place in the back of many city magazines. "WSF looking for man of 27, must be at least 6 feet 5 inches tall and must love canaries." Or, "BDM wants companionship with young, vivacious, sexy female who likes to sleep late in the a.m." Again, another chancy possibility. People may be marvelous writers but may also have psychotic or have strange tastes. Not too safe.

Another possibility is the singles' bar. "Hey, what's your sign? I bet you're a Virgo." "Haven't I seen you some place before? You look familiar." "I've been watching you for 20 minutes and I just can't let you walk out of my life." These lines are commonplace in a singles bar. The bars are often packed, hot and too noisy to carry on a conversation. Eye contact becomes the key, and although someone may have gorgeous green eyes, he may prove to be a real jerk. These places may be good for drinking and listening to deafening music, but not for meeting people.

One night over vacation, a good friend and I decided to go to a "get together" called "Discovery." Upon hearing the name, I immediately thought the outing might be too corny, but I was tired of the bar scene and wanted a change of pace.

"Discovery" is an organization which started about eight years ago. Every Friday night, it holds several "get togethers" at various locations. It starts at 9 p.m. with discussion groups of ten to fifteen people. The discussions last until 10:30 p.m. at which time the dance begins, lasting until 1 a.m.

The major emphasis is to get people together with others; by no means is it a gathering of social introverts. The discussion groups give a person a chance to participate in an intelligent exchange of ideas while "breaking the ice" with strangers. By the time the dance begins, peoples' guards are let down, allowing them to have a relaxed evening.

Everyone has felt lonely at one point in his or her life. Loneliness sometimes creates an internal emptiness which seems so expansive and overpowering. When combating such feelings, a person does not necessarily want to be "picked up," rather he just wants to be with people. What I saw at "Discovery" was a large group of personable and interesting people, ages 21 to 65, enjoying each others' company and not experiencing the societal pressures and anxieties of a singles' bar. Many were divorced, some have never been married, and some were widows and widowers. "Discovery" certainly offers the chance to meet a compatible companion, but it mainly provides a comfortable and unpretentious atmosphere. The most important provision is the alleviation of loneliness.

Relax everyone, social life does not end at 21.

A Salute To Pa. Germans

By BARBARA SIMON

A special exhibition was held to celebrate the arts of the Pennsylvania Germans from 1683 to 1850 in the Philadelphia Museum of Art. The celebration was organized by the Philadelphia Museum of Art and Winterthur Museum and Gardens, Delaware, from Oct. 17, 1982 to Jan. 9, 1983.

This exhibition marks only the beginning of many events to be held in 1983 to celebrate the tricentennial of Pennsylvania Germans in America. The exhibit shows not only the divergent cultural backgrounds of the German-speaking settlers, but it emphasizes geneological data and the origins for their arts.

One part of the gallery exhibits the routine work of most craftsmen — the tanner, the potter, the clockmaker, blacksmith, weaver, locksmith, and gunsmith. Among the many objects associated with trade and production displayed were a pair of flintlock pistols and a double barrel flintlock rifle.

The rifle as developed by Germans in Pennsylvania combined the rifled barrel, a feature of the Tyrolean mountain rifle, with the long and light-weight barrel of the English fowling piece. The earliest gunsmiths were located in Lancaster, Lebanon, Berks, Leheigh, Northampton and Dauphin counties.

The Pennsylvania Germans proclaimed their enthusiasm for liberty and personal freedom, especially those who had come because of restraint of their liberties during periods of economic turmoil in Europe after the Thirty Years' War. Their patriotism is documented in works of inscriptions, flags, The Great Seal of the United States, and drawings of George Washington. In 1776, Johannes Henrich Miller translated the Declaration of Independence for the German readers of his newspaper within five days of its adoption.

The focal point of the exhibition, as it was for the Pennsylvania Germans, is the home. A representation of a full scale house contained traditional furnishings such as a table made of black walnut, the preferred wood for furniture in England and Europe in the 17th century. black walnut wood was worked by the earliest Pennsylvania German settlers at Germantown into bold leg turnings, deeply fielded panels, and carefully furnished case and table framings; details that reveal the lingering preference at first settlement for Renaissance design.

Other kitchen objects included the wardrobe, the iron stove, the tall case clock, and the kitchen dresser. Many other objects, including frakturs (ornamental birth, wedding and house blessings), personal manuscript songbooks and hymnals, needlework samplers, show towels and plates were included in the gallery to show that the focus of Pennsylvania German life and custom was the home.

Many of these Germans, especially those living in Lancaster and Berk counties, were mistakenly called "Pennsylvania Dutch" because the German word for "German" is "Deutsch." These Pennsylvania Germans came primarily from the Palatinate (Pfalz) and from Switzerland.

The legacy of these immigrants resides in the contributions that they have made to the cultural, the social and the technological areas of our way of life. Generations of families and names such as von Steuben, Schurz, Westinghouse, Weyerhaeuser, Eisenhower, Einstein, Reutheo and Wernher von Braun testify to the diversity of their talents.

Things You Should Never Tell A Professor

As a service to students, a few faculty members recently got together and compiled a list of 12 things you should never tell a professor.

1. Could you let me into your class? It fits nicely into my schedule.
2. This exam was a piece of cake.
3. I realize you haven't handed in the grades yet, but I want you to know that this is no B.S. I just wanted to tell you what a great course this was. You are absolutely the best professor on this campus.
4. Everyone says you're a good person to have write recommendations. Remember me, I was in your 8:30 class last term. I realize I didn't show up much . . .
5. My grandfather/grandmother said you are the best professor he/she ever had . . .
6. What are you doing here at the casino? Is this lovely/handsome thing your wife/husband?
7. Do we have to know that for the exam?
8. I didn't know we had an exam today. I lost my syllabus weeks ago.
9. You know that exam we had three weeks ago. Well, I couldn't make it. When's the make-up?
10. Doc, you know that grandmother that died last semester, well she died again.
11. Things not to say during the final week of classes.
   A. What can I do to earn extra credit?
   B. I don t suppose you would consider dropping the two lowest exams?
   C. With two D's and a D+, what can I do to get an A in the course?
   D. You wouldn't flunk a graduating senior, would you?
12. I am sorry I missed class on Tuesday, Dr. Smith. Did you say anything important?

WKWC welcomes all you campers back to this bastion of intellect for another semester of fun and frolic . . . Biff and Muffy are back from spending Christmas break at the condo in St. Croix . . . they're now standing in front of the C-Center waiting for the tanning season to begin . . . speaking of standing . . . WKWC spent quite a bit of time standing in the drop-add line . . . while it's good to see the use of advanced technology, we wish David Smith had taken the time to train those nice ladies to use those new, improved, handy-dandy, super-deluxe IBM 3278's . . . oh well, guess you can't teach old dawgs new tricks . . . while we're on the topic of old dawgs . . . how 'bout them trustees? . . . who'd have thought they'd deliberately want to bring back that football mentality to the ol' blew-and-white? . . . WKWC has a few questions, though . . . will this mean we'll have to buy back all the players we sold on the meat market? . . . will Daddy Deegs be making a return? . . . will Paul Tufano campaign for water boy? . . . we'll never tell . . . while we're on the subject of wins . . . how 'bout that basketball team, huh? . . . WKWC understands they won something called the Brillo Pad Classic over the holidays . . . we hear that next week the women's team will compete in the Brenda Vacarro Playtex Invitational . . . it's no coincidence that this tournament comes at the end of the month . . . what? . . . what do you mean, we can't say that? . . . okay, we won't . . . moving right along . . . what's this we hear about those nasty fraternity boys getting into all sorts of trouble . . . tsk, tsk, shame, shame . . . looks like the geeks really pulled a bonas this time . . . but what does it matter anyway to lose your charter when you're not allowed to have a clubhouse? . . . who knows, who cares . . .

A new semester is a new beginning. A new beginning presents many opportunities. Responding to opportunities before us is an important challenge since the one we choose will affect our development and shape the future we may become.

In talking with graduates who graduated from college, many look back with regret at the many opportunities that they passed by during their college years. They say things like, "I'll never have a time in my life again when I have that will be possible."

The following are some opportunities that you may want to take advantage of, offered by Campus Ministry:

— Interested in helping with liturgical planning and music this semester? You are invited to participate in a music and planning workshop on Jan. 29 from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Sign up in Campus Ministry.

— Need a new time for liturgy here on campus? Two new liturgies, at 4 p.m. and 10:30 p.m. in the Main Chapel are beginning Jan. 23.

— Prayer meetings? Bible study? Retreats? Christian fellowship? Stop by or call Campus Ministry for exact times and locations.

— If you are interested in tutoring some young inner-city children (ages 8 thru 13), we will be working with CENTRO LOYOLA in North Philadelphia. Tutoring takes place on Wednesday or Thursday afternoons, 2-6 p.m. An informational meeting will take place on Jan. 24 at 7 p.m. in the Campus Ministry Center.

— For those of you who would like to volunteer your help with senior citizens of Philadelphia, we are going to help staff a Saturday lunch program, where our students would volunteer once or twice during the semester to help prepare, serve and clean up a meal, plus some recreational activities. An information meeting will take place on Jan. 24 at 6 p.m. in Campus Ministry.

— Misericordia Hospital in West Philadelphia will be starting a Warmth Wagon that will bring meals to four inner-city locations during the weekdays. If you would like to help a staff member of the the hospital distribute the meals, please come to a meeting for more information on Jan. 25 at 6 p.m. in Campus Ministry.

— As the plight of the Philadelphia homeless increases with the federal cutbacks, more and more people enter the ranks of the hungry and the poor. We would like to "brainstorm" to see what our Villanova community can do to help alleviate some of these pains. All who are interested, please come to a meeting on Jan 26 at 7 p.m. in Campus Ministry.

— Looking for a way to give a few hours of quality time to an inner-city child each week? Campus Ministry has an opportunity for you at St. Barbara's Parish (W. Phila.) in the afternoons for children kindergarten thru 8th grade. Transportation provided. Informational meeting will be on Jan. 27 — 5 p.m. — Campus Ministry Office.

Take Charge At 22.

In most jobs, at 22 you're near the bottom of the ladder.

In the Navy, at 22 you can be a leader. After just 16 weeks of leadership training, you're an officer. You'll have the kind of job your education and training prepared you for, and the decision-making authority you need to make the most of it.

As a college graduate and officer candidate, your Navy training is geared to making you a leader. There is no boot camp. Instead, you receive professional training to help you build the technical and management skills you'll need as a Navy officer.

This training is designed to instill confidence by first-hand experience. You learn by doing. On your first sea tour, you're responsible for managing the work of up to 30 men and the care of sophisticated equipment worth millions of dollars.

It's a bigger challenge and a lot more responsibility than most corporations give you at 22. The rewards are bigger, too. There's a comprehensive package of benefits, including special duty pay. The starting salary is $17,000—more than most companies would pay you right out of college. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, your salary will have increased to as much as $31,000.

As a Navy officer, you grow, through new challenges, new tests of your skills, and new opportunities to advance your education, including the possibility of attending graduate school while you're in the Navy.

Don't just take a job. Become a Navy officer, and take charge. Even at 22.

Navy Officers Get Responsibility Fast.

Newman Reaches Back For Extra

By MIKE NOONE

"The Verdict," directed by Sidney Lumet, is a story of one man's battle against society and just as importantly, himself.

Paul Newman stars as Frank Galvin, a down on his luck Boston lawyer who is disillusioned with the law and the judicial system. Galvin, an alcoholic, is bitter towards the system that at one time made him feel proud. Galvin looks at the courts as just another facet of society that has eroded and abandoned the ideals which it once stood for.

Director Lumet says that "Frank Galvin is a man who has all but dropped out of society because he couldn't adapt to the way the game is played."

Galvin, whose worth over the past years has dropped, gets a chance to vindicate himself. Longtime friend Mickey Morrissey (played by Jack Warden) brings Galvin a case that puts him up against the city's Catholic Church. A little girl has become a vegetable because of a doctor's mistake — and everyone is covering it up. All parties involved would like an out of court settlement except for Galvin, who seeks justice, not money.

Lumet has said that one part of Galvin's personality is, "he knows social institutions; therefore he can deal with their imperfections. It doesn't matter if you're talking about medicine, religion or the law, all that any of our institutions offer is the possibility of improving our lot. And all that we as individuals can do is give them the chance to work as they were designed."

Like other Lumet movies ("Serpico," "The Prince of The City," "12 Angry Men") the main character is very likable and charismatic. Newman's Galvin is a man who for the most part is common. As an audience we can identify very closely with him. Galvin is basically a good man who also has his share of faults. He seeks truth and hopes to stay afloat in a world which he doesn't always accept or understand.

Newman, a five-time Academy Award nominee, will certainly be nominated for a sixth for this performance. Newman's portrayal of Galvin is gut-wrenching and his acting is truly memorable.

"It's a very interesting character for me," Newman has said, "because unlike Cool Hand Luke, Butch Cassidy or some of the others who were the cool collected types, he's frightened. He's living on the edge and he's panicked. There are people who really do find their lives in a shambles and decide they don't like it. Some just continue to degenerate and some, like Galvin, can pick themselves up."

Besides Newman's performance, Charlotte Rampling, James Mason and Milos O'Shea also turn in fine jobs.

Mason is defense attorney Ed Concannon. Mason's performance features a bravado that intimidates one. Concannon is the antithesis of Galvin. He's got his act together and quite sure of himself.

"Concannon is a star lawyer, in the sense of a Melvin Belli or someone like that," Mason has said. "When he is center-stage in a courtroom, he is in command, not a blustering type showman but calculating and assured. Behind the scenes he has influence and doesn't hesitate to use it — but quietly, subtly."

Besides the stellar performances Lumet's directing is very interesting. His contrasting of Concannon and Galvin as both people and lawyers is one of the best parts of the film. For example, we see Concannon and six or seven associates in a classy lawyer's quarters. Next we see Galvin and Morrissey in an ordinary public library studying the law.

What Galvin does not lack though is heart. There isn't any law against trying. Galvin will fight to the end instead of not trying at all.

In essence, "The Verdict" is a film that observes various aspects of society. There is the life of a once beaten man who gets up off the mat and the sobering thought that justice is not always served.

Barry Reed, who wrote the book, "The Verdict" feels that the character of Galvin is like the "Fisherman in 'The Old Man and the Sea.' Steinbeck said that you can never destroy a man's spirit. Also Galvin is really a guy who epitomizes the strength and courage of a man or woman who is up against it all. He isn't a white knight. He's like every ordinary human being with faults and problems who has managed, by taking this one stand against insurmountable odds to redeem himself in his own eyes. He has managed to find some value in his life through an act of faith and courage."

Overall 'The Verdict' is an important film. It is also a film with a number of interesting characters; namely Newman's masterful portrayal of Frank Galvin. If Newman does not win the Academy Award this year, he'll never win it. But then as 'The Verdict' has proved, justice is not always served.

Baker Shares Experiences

By JAYNE M. STUART

One often wonders if his life could be interesting enough to merit a biography or an autobiography. The trick is to take a very ordinary, somewhat normal, life and present that in an interesting manner. Russell Baker has done just that in his book Growing Up. Baker has been a journalist for the New York Times since 1954, covering the White House, Congress and national politics. He has written his "Observer" column for the Times since 1962. (It is a very humorous and entertaining column, at that).

The book is about growing up during the Depression with a strong-willed and dominating mother. His mother was widowed very early in Baker's life and made his life a little tougher than average. Since Baker was a slight and small boy he excelled in academics (he eventually received a four year scholarship to Johns Hopkins University) so he would have one up on other boys. His mother was a schoolteacher and expected nothing short of excellence. Baker relates many stories about the "trauma" of his early years, such as his first paper route, getting in fights with boys much bigger than himself, and accepting a stepfather into his family, one which he had been "the man" of for quite some time. Baker describes his first encounter with prejudice and his disappointment in the person who possesses this fault.

He tells of his surprise at realizing his family is truly poor, and he comes to respect his mother all the more for her efforts at making ends meet.

Baker's mother was a hard-driving woman, a real go-getter. She expected these same traits of her children, much to Baker's chagrin as he possessed neither. When he was young he was in awe of his mother (and her college education); as he grew older, he challenged his mother's authority and came to resent some of her views and ideas. In her final stages of life he comes to understand his mother and what it is that pushes her so far and hard.

Through-out his life Baker is associated with strong women: his grandmother, his mother, his sister, and finally his wife. His wife was not an acceptable match for him, according to his mother. At first, Baker felt "marriage was not in the cards" for them but eventually realized Mimi was the right woman for him, after a turbulent relationship. First he used college and the related plea of being too poor to support her, then his first job did not pay enough, finally in fear of losing her, he proposes. Much to Baker's distress, his mother and wife never seem to see eye to eye.

A very interesting and provocative section of the book takes place when Baker describes his correspondence with his mother during World War II. He is in pilots' training camp and never makes it into combat. Their letters reflect a certain graceful oblivion to the atrocities that were occurring in Europe at the same time. "Yesterday I sent you a two-pound box of candy

Fassbinder's Fine Farewell

By BARBARA SIMON

"Veronika Voss," the last (1982) of Ranier Werner Fassbinder's films in German with English subtitles is playing at the Ritz Three in Philadelphia. Like his other major films, "Lili Marleen," "The Marriage of Maria Braun" and "Lola," "Veronika Voss" is about a woman and Germany in the 1950s.Fassbinder reveals the deterioration of life when values become distorted because of unrealistic social ambitions and drugs in the life of a fading movie star. Because of social aspirations, Fassbinder's women become immoral to the extreme of corruption toward themselves and sometimes toward others they drag down with them.

Voss was a famous starlet with material wealth and success. However, she is now older and no longer acclaimed. As a morphine addict, she suffers fantastic delusions that she is a predominant success as she was in the past. In her depressed state, Voss encourages the friendship of a small town sports reporter to help her re-live her glorious past. The reporter is enticed into her life by her fame and later by the helplessness of her situation.

Like other Fassbinder films, the tone is despondent. Effective flashbacks stimulate the despair and futility of Voss' situation. One flashback scene shows Voss in the prime of her career as it reveals the depressing relationship she has with her husband. Poised in a glamorous gown as if ready to be admired, Voss is almost drunk while her husband chooses to ignore her because he is tired of feigning expected admiration. In the present, the marriage is over and Voss is alone except for the doctors who daily inject her with morphine. The drug is her sustaining force in life and her only escape from the truth.

An interesting aspect of the movie is the relationship of Veronika Voss with the reporter. Because he is a man, she clutches at him to fulfill her need for attention. Because this reporter is only middle-class, paunchy, with a hard-working look and even a crew cut matters little to Voss. The reporter represents any man paying attention to a woman. Universally this is important because many women desire the love of a man. For Voss; as long as someone loves her, her fantasy can continue.

This depressing story becomes complicated when the reporter's girlfriend becomes involved to help. The reporter, in trying to become a hero, loses sight of his present relationship with his girlfriend and ultimately disaster ensues tragedy.

Moral debasement spares no one; it thwarts goodness and is triumphant over interception because of evil's omnipotent power. It is interesting to note that one of the sides to the corrupt doctor is an American. He is a 250-pound soldier, always in uniform and always seen either eating like a slob or rolling (cigarettes) or wrapping drugs. It appears that Fassbinder feels the American influence in post-war Germany was demoralizing. More obvious is Fassbinder's anger over (post-war) Germany's general descent into the pitfalls of debasement rather than choosing a moral path in life. For Fassbinder, the extremes of materialism, socialism and ambition can only mean temporal comfort, acclaim and ultimate doom.

for your birthday . . . I am now, cutting a captain's inspection." An atomic bomb was dropped with few reverberations felt in that society, though hind-sight offers a much different perspective to that event.

Baker's Growing Up draws a picture of America in the Depression and afterwards. He offers insight into prejudice, war, love, marriage, yet doesn't get too weighty. His book is not full of sex, romance, action, suspense, or cliches; it is a fine book about an ordinary life.

Men, Women Tracksters Excel

Men Warm Up in South

By JOE MARUSAK

Ask any player or coach and he'll tell you, he wants to start his season at home.

He does not want to begin things in Tennessee.

But that's exactly where the Villanova indoor track team wound up for their opening meet last weekend, and after the last race had been run there, well, Tennessee probably didn't seem all that bad to the V.U. trackmen.

That's because, after all had been said and done on Jan. 14-15, these impressive facts remained for the Wildcats to bring back home to the Main Line:

• Villanova, in this Eastman Invitational Meet, had qualified for three events in the NCAA Indoor Championships.

• The Wildcats, as far as the IC4A Indoor qualifying standards go, had met 11 of them.

• Cat runners, or former runners, had swept first in three different mile events. Current trackmen Marcus O'Sullivan and Pete Carroll each won mile races, as did former Nova standout Ross Donoghue.

• V.U.'s Distance Medley Relay team had run a 9:44.0 to capture first place and a trip to the IC4As.

Most important were those three NCAA berths. John Marshall holds one of them now, as his 2:07.4 in the 1000 yards gave him a 2nd at the Eastman meet.

Besides Marshall, Carlton Young in the 440 and the mile relay team also reached NCAA standards. Young's effort was especially gratifying, considering all the time he had spent with the Rhodes Scholar competition this past semester.

TRACK NOTES: Young, who almost made it to the last leg of the Rhodes competition, plans to attend Johns Hopkins for graduate work. Teammate Mike England was just accepted at Temple Medical School .

Women on the Rise

By BEVERLY REILLY

While many students were either skiing in Vermont, sunbathing in Florida, or vacationing at home over the semester break, the women tracksters were running circles around Villanova.

Returning to campus on Jan. 3rd, the women's track team went through two weeks of arduous training and productive competition in order to prepare themselves for the present indoor season.

Amidst the rigorous training session, the Wildcat women managed to obtain Eastern and National qualifying standards, while breaking numerous school and personal records.

On Jan. 5th the Wildcats placed second in the Mid-Atlantic Track Meet at the Philadelphia Civic Center. Sophomore Mary Ellen McGowan took individual honors by capturing first in the mile run in 5:02. Freshman Vicky Brown placed a close second in 5:02.6. The mile relay team (Patty Bradley, Veronica McIntosh, Joanne Kehs, Tracey Carter) took second place with an Eastern Championship qualifying standard of 3:59.0.

At the Princeton Developmental Meet on Jan. 9th, the women tracksters continued to reach new qualifying standards. Brown gained individual honors with first place in the 1500 meter run and qualified for the Eastern Championships with her time of 4:38.7. Brown also lead off the winning two-mile relay along with McIntosh, Kehs and Bradley. Other Eastern qualifiers were Kehs in the 1000 meter run with her time of 2:59.6. Also, senior Beverly Reilly placed second in the 3000 meter run with a qualifying time of 10:10.4.

The culmination of the two weeks took place at the Lafayette Invitational on Jan. 16th. Seven individual first place honors were captured by the Wildcats.

As Villanova dominated the distance events, Reilly took first place in the three mile run, setting the new Field House record at 17:22.2. McGowan placed first in the two mile run, breaking the Villanova school record with a time of 10:44.0. Continuing the winning streak, junior Eva Marie Berardi captured first in the mile in 5:10.1. Freshmen standouts Kehs and Brown took first and second places respectively in the 1000 yard run, while Nancy Fleming placed first in the 880 yard run.

Both Bradley and McIntosh ran an excellent race in the 600-yard run. Bradley captured first in 1:22.8 and McIntosh was a close second in 1:23.8. Both runners obtained NCAA qualifying standard times. In addition, Bradley and McIntosh joined with Brown and Kehs to win the two mile relay.

In the field, senior captain, Peggy Stewart won the high jump in 5'8". Stewart had already reached NCAA qualifying standards of 5'10" earlier in the season.

Coach Bob Shoudt was pleased with the team performances.

Shoudt remarked, "These past two weeks were similar to a summer training camp. We had double workouts and did not ease up before meets. Consequently, I was satisfied with the performances at Lafayette."

Swimmers Win Two; Blast Navy

By LAURA FORTUNATO

On Jan. 15th, the Villanova women's swimming team captured double-dual victories over Navy 91-58 and East Carolina 101-48. Eight new pool records were set by the Villanova women and the team as a whole produced a number of seasonal best times.

Junior Lisa McFadden captured the 800 meter free (9:18.26), the 400 meter free (4:22.36), and the 200 meter free (2:06.94), setting new pool records in each of these events.

Beth Metzger won the 50 meter fly (29.94) and the 200 meter fly (2:21.7), establishing new pool records in both events. Metzger also won the 50 Backstroke (31.31). To date Metzger has won 16 of the 17 individual events in which she has competed this season.

Freshman Genny Blair won both the 50 meter breaststroke (35.94) and the 200 meter breaststroke (2:48.2), posting new pool records in both.

Winner Genny Malderig claimed a new pool record in the 200 Backstroke (2:22.69). Malderig also won the 200 meter Individual Medley in 2:27.67.

The team is now 4-2 and is shooting for a winning streak including all of the remaining seven meets. "The victories over Navy and East Carolina were important to the team's confidence and excitement and will provide incentive to the remaining dual meets," commented Coach Chris McKee.

Once More, Cats Clip Pirates

By JOE MARUSAK

When the topic is college basketball, Villanova and Seton Hall are exact opposites in one regard: their Big East performances.

The Wildcats are undefeated in conference play. But the Pirates, under new head coach Peter "P.J." Carlesimo, have yet to win a game in Big East action.

So when the two teams met Wednesday night at the Byrne Meadowlands Arena, no great surprises were expected.

And none took place.

Villanova, best in their conference (5-0), easily manhandled the Hall (0-6 Big East) by a score of 75-59.

"Our team played almost as good as we have all year," said Wildcat head coach Rollie Massimino after the blowout. "All week our philosophy was, 'Either you play hard or you don't play'."

Well, the Cats decided to play and they played hard.

Leading the way was workhorse guard Stewart Granger, who did what he's always been known for doing: passing, scoring, penetrating.

Besides producing eight first-half assists, the 6-3 guard scored the game's first four points and helped Nova out to a quite comfortable 15-2 advantage.

And after that start which Granger got going, the Wildcats just couldn't stop. At the 10:00 mark of the first half of action, they were up by 16.

The Pirates crept back to within nine with 8:10 to go in the half. But Ed Pinckney, eventual MVP of the contest, suppressed that comeback attempt with a three-point play seconds later.

Pinckney finished with eight points, three rebounds and four blocked shots for the half.

His friend inside, John Pinone, also blocked a couple of shots of his own. That created havoc for the Seton Hall offense.

"Our defense was probably as good as we've played it," remarked Rollie Massimino.

In fact, the Hall's top-scorers, Andre McCloud and Ken Powell, netted a meager six points apiece.

Surprisingly, Villanova did all this without the services of 6-6 guard Dwayne McClain, who conceivably may have a stress fracture. According to Massimino, tests on the injury turned out negative, but a little recovery time is still necessary.

"We thought it best that we keep him out," the head coach said.

Filling in admirably for McClain was Frank Dobbs, who enjoyed one of his best outings of the season. In his 16 minutes of play, the 6-4 junior produced 10 points.

But of all those who had their nights, it was Granger who kept the action rolling. He hit a jumper to start off the second half and give the Wildcats an insurmountable 50-32 lead.

And Nova kept racking up the points while Seton Hall floundered. With 6:36 remaining in the game, Pinone moved inside and was fouled. He hit the first and missed the second. But in came Pinckney with a follow-up dunk. VU 73, The Pirates 46.

Then the Wildcat reserves came in, and even they of sorts held their own.

All of which had Pirates coach Carlesimo giving praise.

"Villanova is an excellent team," he said. "They are, in my opinion, one of the better teams in the country."

And there was more. "Tonight Villanova was better prepared to play when the game started," Carlesimo elaborated. "They took us out of the game before we were in the game."

REBOUNDS: Attendance at the game was 10,491 . . . The Pirates were without two of their top stars. Senior forward Michael Ingram has strained ligaments in his lower back while center Sir John Collins has been out all year with knee problems . . . Gary McLain also turned in a solid performance, prompting Massimino to say, "Our guard play was excellent."

Attention: The Villanova-La Salle game scheduled for tomorrow at the Palestra has been changed from 12-noon to 3 p.m.

Coaster Ride for Women

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova women's basketball team had a total of 10 games scheduled during the holiday season. The first two games were held at the campus of Rider College on Dec. 18-19.

On the 18th, the Cats took on Georgia Tech. Playing very well in the first half gave the Cats a 33-30 lead at halftime. They improved upon this lead in the second half, finishing up with a 68-59 victory.

Junior Nancy Bernhardt hit seven field goals and added 10 more free throws for a game leading 24 points. Senior Kathie Beisel grabbed eight boards and junior Andrea Burton had four assists to lead the Cats in those categories.

The next day, Villanova took on the host team, Rider College. Neither team was shooting well in the first half and Rider managed to jump out to a 31-21 halftime lead. The second half was all Villanova as they outscored Rider, 41-37, to bring home a 62-58 victory. Beisel played the entire game, hitting 10 of 11 shots from the floor for a high 20 points. Bernhardt grabbed seven rebounds and junior Mimi Coleman had seven assists for the Wildcats.

Ten days later on the 28th of December, the Cats were in Philadelphia on the campus of LaSalle College to take on the University of New Hampshire in a holiday tournament. The Cats came away with their fifth straight victory, 68-65. The Cats scoring attack was paced by Beisel with 20 points, Bernhardt with 16 and senior Noreen Kemether's 12.

The next day the Cats had their winning streak snapped at five with a 72-43 loss to Penn State. The Cats also had problems with Seton Hall a day later, losing 65-47. Bernhardt led the Cats in both games with 16 and 20 points respectively.

After two more losses, one to Providence and the other to Seton Hall, the Cats got their game back on a winning track with an 84-59 romp over Fairleigh Dickinson University. The Cats came out with a well-balanced attack, with 12 players scoring points.

The Cats then hoped to get their new year started off on the right foot when they took on Notre Dame at the Field House on January 3rd. However they lost a close game, 72-68, putting their record at 6-5. Beisel, Bernhardt and Burton all had point totals in double figures for the Cats. One highlight of the game was a 10 for 10 performance from the foul line by Villanova's Burton.

Beisel and Bernhardt were again the Cats' top scorers. In her second game after coming off of a knee injury, sophomore Sandra Williams came off the bench to score 14 points for Nova.

Two days later, on Jan. 15th, the Wildcats took on the University of Pennsylvania in their first city series game of the year. In a very low scoring game which saw a one-point halftime lead, Penn several times in the second semester, V.U. came away with a 54-53 victory, keeping their city series record intact at 13 wins and no losses. This win put the Cats record at 8-7.

Stewart Granger

Cabrillo means "a small goat" in English. To Stewart Granger however, it translated into "MVP" as the senior guard rammed his way through the opposition for 38 points, 10 assists and four steals during the two day Cabrillo Classic in San Diego.

Granger led the Cats past Tulsa in the opening game with a 24 point explosion, powering the Nova squad to a 75-68 triumph. In the championship contest Granger contributed 14 points while performing superbly his role as the Villanova floor general. The Cats turned back host San Diego State, 63-57, to take home the trophy in that game.

Another tournament highlight for the 6'3" senior was the scoring of his 1000th career point at Villanova in the game against San Diego State. Granger became the 25th player in Villanova history to reach that elusive mark.

The Cats headed back East to face Boston College in the colder climate of New Jersey's Meadowlands Arena on Jan. 4, but Granger kept his shooting touch as hot as ever. The Nazareth High School graduate hit 12 of 14 field goal attempts to collect 24 points in

Power Overload Closes Butler

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

After years of overloading the transformer capacity in the Field House, an investigation following the Villanova-Seton Hall basketball game revealed that the fuse capacity was increased to 400 amps to accommodate concerts, leading to what Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance terms a "dangerous situation."

"[illegible] 400 amp fuse we use for the four buildings, the Field House, the Butler Annex, ATRA, and the swimming area, is too high for the terminal," said Ted Aceto, director of athletics. "We need the proper transformer to accommodate the additional fuses we are using."

Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance.

The transformer in the Field House now can adequately hold 208 amps with a maximum overload of 330 amps. "With all of the cutbacks we are pulling in 330 amps. Once you go over that, you'll be blowing fuses as was happening before," said Trucks.

"In overloading the transformer for so long there is now the danger of an explosion or fire when going over the maximum 330 amps," said Trucks. "Furthermore, overloading beyond capacity is illegal, so any damage that would happen, an explosion or fire, would not be covered by insurance," added Trucks.

"There are so many people, stage crew and others, doing their own thing that I have no idea how long the transformer has been illegally overloaded," said Trucks.

In lieu of the problems, precautions have been taken. The Butler annex lights are completely cut and the building is closed "because we have no control over those going in the annex and turning on the lights," said Aceto.

"The lights in the pool area are dimmed, if turned on at all, and therefore it is not an ideal condition but adequate for now," said Aceto.

The ATRA building has cut off all its heat and there is also only limited lighting in there. "We have put a space heater in the ATRA building so heating the area is not a drain on the field house," added Aceto.

According to Trucks, the amps needed to heat the ATRA building is almost half of what the entire Field House transformer can hold. "The ATRA was constructed without my consent and the 140 amps needed to heat the building is just not there," he said.

"What hurts me the most is to see that most athletic teams can only practice until 4 p.m.," said Aceto. "We can only use the skylight and so as soon as it begins getting dark outside, the teams have to quit practice."

Not anticipating the problem to be rectified by Feb. 1, "we will really be in the hole when the rest of the spring teams are scheduled to begin practice," said Aceto. Some of the teams which will be effected are baseball, boxing, track and softball.

Aceto was "very pleased" to see that no intramural games had to be curtailed. All of the intramural games have been rescheduled to either St. Mary's gym or the Alumni gym. "Unfortunately, the hours of the games had to be drastically changed and some of the games will run past 11 p.m.," said Aceto.

Another problem in rescheduling the games to the other gyms is the conflict with the time scheduled for the Law School students and the Karate club. "We had to bump the Law School from one of their scheduled nights and the Karate club was also bumped from one of their two nights scheduled in the gym," said Aceto.

Since the electrical overload cannot be fixed in the near future, "the rescheduling is a problem the athletic department will have to continue to deal with," said Trucks. "When they get used to it they'll get along fine."

"What is bothersome," said Aceto, "is that the students are not aware of the problem and come in at night, turn on the lights and in turn the fuse blows resulting in a complete blackout throughout the building," said Aceto. "We have put a lock on some of the switches in the building and are hoping that will help.

The Butler Annex

"We would like to move back to the schedule as before," said Aceto. "This complex is probably one of the most used on campus. The lights go on at 7 a.m. and are on until closing at about 10:30 or 11 p.m."

Aceto was not aware of the problem until Jan. 13, just before students returned from break. "We really did not have much time to look at alternative solutions," said Aceto.

Those involved in the Field House problem met Wednesday to explain the problem and discuss what can be done to rectify the electrical overload.

According to Trucks, there are three possible solutions. The first possibility would be to get a transformer to give the field house complex the 400 amps it needs now. The cost would be $20,000 and at least one month would be needed to get the equipment. Once the equipment is in, the field house would have to be completely shut for five working days for labor.

Drunk Drivers Punished

By LINDA BOND

New laws for drunk driving and driving under the influence of drugs are in effect in the state of Pennsylvania.

Drivers are now required to submit to breath testing and other methods of measuring blood alcohol if so requested by police under the new law.

A .10 percent blood alcohol level will result in a conviction for driving under the influence (D.U.I.). No other evidence of intoxication is needed to be found guilty of the offense.

A conviction can also result from the testimony of a police officer as to the manner of driving, smell of alcohol, slurred speech, staggered walk, failure of coordination tests, and refusal to submit to a blood alcohol test.

Where drugs are involved, the smell of the substance and dilated pupils is usually considered evidence of its use, in addition to the other methods of police determination.

Persons convicted of D.U.I. will have their licenses suspended for one year, pay at least a $300 fine and go to jail for at least 48 hours.

First time drinking and driving offenders may apply for Accelerated Rehabilitative Disposition (A.R.D.). According to Burke T. Ward, assistant director of the Villanova Legal Information Center, "A.R.D. is a procedure allowed by statute for the non-criminal disposition of some first offenders. The granting of A.R.D. is not automatic," said Ward. "If granted A.R.D., the offender must pay a fine, make restitution for any damage, pay for and complete an alcohol safety course, accept a license suspension of up to one year, and meet any other court imposed requirements such as counseling."

If A.R.D. is withheld, a drunk driver will pay a fine of not less than $300 and serve a mandatory minimum imprisonment term of at least 48 hours. The driver who proceeds in a trial and is found guilty of the offense will pay the same fine and also go to jail.

"Previous convictions for D.U.I. or past involvement in A.R.D. will result in an increased jail sentence," said Ward.

He explained, "If the defendant had a previous conviction in the last seven years in Pennsylvania or any other state, the mandatory minimum sentence will be 30 days. For a third offense the minimum sentence is 90 days. For a defendant with more than three prior convictions the mandatory minimum sentence will be one year."

Burke T. Ward, assistant director of Villanova Legal Information Center

"The .10 percent level does not mean drunk," cautioned Ward, "but under the influence. Four drinks (12 oz. beers) in an hour will give most people a .10 percent reading or higher. Drinking at a slower rate over a longer period of time may still result in the prohibited blood alcohol level."

His understanding of the law is that if the keys to the car are in the ignition or in the possession of a drunk individual who is seated in the front seat of the car, police can charge the individual for D.U.I.

Ward said, "Throw your keys under the seat and hop in the back of the car," if you feel intoxicated and have pulled to the side of the road.

Ward believes that the new law is a response to a serious national problem. He hopes that the Villanova community realizes this new law is "tough" and that police intend to enforce it.

Commenting on the constitutionality of a mandatory blood alcohol test and the conclusive use of its results, Ward added that he personally felt it was "an invasion of rights. To be forced to take the test or lose your license, I feel, is unconstitutional."

He said, "I've also heard that there are certain chemicals in some artificial food colorings that can set off the blood alcohol level. It's not a perfect test. I think it's going to be constitutionally challenged. Blood sample tests and urine tests are more reliable, although I'm not sure I like them any better."

Due to the closing of Butler Annex, the Butler Basketball League has been rescheduled. Please pick up new schedules in the Alumni Office.

College Democrats

College Democrats will hold a meeting on Monday, Jan. 31 at 3:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Officer elections will take place and the spring agenda will be discussed. All interested are welcome.

Model U.N. Club

There will be an informational and organizational meeting of the Model U.N. Club on Thursday, Feb. 3 at 12:30 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr room. Funding has already been provided to send a delegation from Villanova to the National United Nations Conference to be held in New York in April. All are welcome.

Psychology Club

There will be a Psychology Club meeting on Thursday, Feb. 3 at 12:45 p.m. in 305 Tolentine. All those interested in helping plan the Valentine social and/or being an officer for next year are invited to attend.

Freshman Record

Anyone who is interested in working on the Freshman Record during second semester, please come to the meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 2 at 7 p.m. in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center.

Photographer Needed

Anyone interested in working as a photographer for the "Freshman Record" for second semester, please come up to the Villanova Union office.

Philosophy Club

There will be a meeting of the Philosophy Club on Wednesday, Feb. 2 in Vasey Rm. 208 at 3:30 p.m. Professor Regan will lead a discussion on William James' essay on the Moral Equivalent of War in relation to the current nuclear arms race. Refreshments will be served.

Summer Activities

Aplications will be available Feb. 1 for three Summer Activities positions. The Summer Activities staff is responsible for planning, supervising and evaluating a comprehensive activities program during the Summer Session. Programming experience and administrative abilities are required for this paid position that begins May 23 and enda Aug. 12. Applications are available in Student Activities or the Villanova Union Office.

Special Olympics

Applications for two vice-chairpersons and the Games Committee for the 1983 Fall Special Olympics Tournament are now available in the Student Activities Office in 214 Dougherty Hall. We encourage you to please stop by and pick up your application and be a part of Villanova's Special Olympics.

Piano Recital

On Tuesday, Feb. 1, the Villanova Concert and Lecture Series will present Gary Goldschneider, nationally acclaimed pianist; at 4 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Admission is free.

English Lecture

Daniel Hoffman, poet-in-residence at the University of Pennsylvania and official poet of the Philadelphia Tercentenary, will read from his book-length poem on William Penn's founding of Philadelphia, Brotherly Love, on Thursday, Feb. 3, 1983 at 4:15 in the Connelly Center Cinema. He will also speak about the use of history in poetry. Faculty, students, and the public are invited. Refreshments will follow in the North Lounge of Doughertv Hall.

Study Seminar

The Counseling Center will sponsor a study seminar to assist students in developing and extending their study skills. They will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Topics include: Preparing a Daily Activity Schedule/Daily Study Schedule (Jan. 27), SQ4r Method of Study (Feb. 1), Cornell System of Notetaking (Feb. 3) and Preparing for Exams (Feb. 8).

If you are interested in participating, please call the Counseling Center (645-4050) since the seminars will be limited to 15 students a session.

Beta Gamma Tau

Beta Gamma Tau, the co-ed fraternity, would like to invite everyone, men and women, to attend their rush meetings and find out more about what makes a co-ed fraternity better.

The dates and times for the rush meetings are: Tuesday, Feb. 1 at 8:30 p.m. in the Haverford Room; Thursday, Feb. 3 at 12:30 p.m. in the Haverford Room; and Wednesday, Feb. 9 at 6:30 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr Room.

Come find out what this co-ed fraternity has to offer you!

Tri-Delts

Delta Delta Delta is awarding a local scholarship. All full-time undergraduate women are eligible. Applications may be picked up in the Student Activities Office now. Deadline is Feb. 14.

Lost and Found

One girl's navy blue blazer. Reward! Call 964-0948.

A dark blue suit jacket was lost at the Covered Wagon on Friday night, Jan. 21. Call Mike at 527-7165.

A dark pin-stripe jacket was found with an LXD fraternity pin. Call Mike at 527-7165.

Project Sunshine

Attention members of Project Sunshine! If you would be interested in attending a weekend workshop at Yale University dealing with volunteer programs and projects from Feb. 25-27, please stop in at the Social Action Office, 121 Tolentine, for more information.

Mass Schedules

The following is the schedule of weekday masses offered at Villanova:

8:30 a.m. —	Main Chapel
11:30 a.m. —	Corr Chapel
12:30 p.m. —	Main Chapel
5 p.m. —	Corr Chapel
10:30 p.m. —	Main Chapel

The new Schedule for Sunday masses is:

10 a.m. —	St. Mary's Chapel
11 a.m. —	Corr Chapel
11 a.m. —	Good Counsel
11:15 a.m. —	Bartley C.C.D.
4 p.m. —	Main Chapel
6 p.m. —	Main Chapel
9 p.m. —	Main Chapel
10:30 p.m. —	Main Chapel

It is important to note the two newly scheduled masses at 4 p.m. and 10:30 p.m.

Campus Ministry

For those of you who are thinking about possible volunteer work for a summer or one or two years, the Campus Ministry will be having a meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 9 at 6 p.m. in the Campus Ministry Office to present the various organizations in the U.S. which are looking for volunteers. The work will be targeted towards urban or rural poor, in this country or internationally. For more information, please come to the meeting, open to all who are interested.

Rosary

The Rosary is prayed at 7 p.m. in Corr Hall chapel Monday through Thursday. This is in fulfillment to our Lady of Fatima's request of the three children to whom she appeared six times in 1917. She said that "only she can bring peace."

Career Workshops

The Career Development Center is offering these workshops next week: On-Site Interviews — Jan. 31 at 3 p.m.; Job Search Techniques — Feb. 1 at 3 p.m.; Career Decision Making — Feb. 2 at 10:30 a.m.; Resume Writing — Feb. 3 at 3:30 p.m.; Interviewing Skills — Feb. 4 at 1 p.m.

All workshops are 50 minutes and are held in the Bryn Mawr Room of the Connelly Center. Sign-up in the Career Development Center at Corr Hall.

Financial Aid

Aplications for financial aid for the 1983/84 academic year are now available in the Financial Aid Office, second floor, Kennedy Hall.

All students who will need assistance during the 1983/84 year are urged to pick up information and materials immediately!

The deadline for filing is March 15, 1983.

All upperclass students must file the combined Pennsylvania (PHEAA) State Grant/Federal Grant (PELL) Application. Students who are not Pennsylvania residents must also file the proper form required by their home state. Applications should be completed as soon as possible based on actual 1982 income tax data. Aid will be awarded on a first come-first serve basis after all required information has been supplied to the Financial Aid office.

P&W Bridge Painting Prohibited

By JOHN JACKSON

In an inter-office communication sent to all student organization leaders, Lucyna J. Gorski, director of student activities, announced that "... no student group or its members are permitted to paint, or in any way decorate the railroad bridges, tunnels or any other property that does not belong to the group."

The announcement may have brought an end to a tradition that has been a part of the Villanova campus for the last several decades.

The decision to forbid the painting of bridges was announced in reaction to a Sept. 15 accident involving two Villanova students who were seriously injured when they were struck by a trolly while they were painting the top of the P&W bridge on S. Ithan Ave. near Stanford hall as part of a sorority project.

The P&W Bridge

Gorski explained that the fraternities and sororities were asked to stop painting the bridge after the accident, but the practice failed to come to a halt. Under the new rule, any group who paints the bridge will be subject to disciplinary action. "After the accident, we asked the groups to stop, but then it happened two or three more times."

In the memo from Gorski, vandalism is cited as one of the main reasons why the practice is being put to rest. "The practice of bridge or tunnel painting is an act of vandalism against property that does not belong to the group involved," said Gorski.

Gorski explained that vandalism has become an important part of the problem. "It is important, it has become a much more serious part of it."

One of the primary reasons why bridge painting was made illegal was the possible legal implications involved for the University if somebody were to once again become injured while painting the bridge. Explained the Rev. John P. Stack, dean of students, "Subsequent questions were raised whether or not the university had taken a stand. It (the bridge) is somebody else's property, but it's right in the middle of our campus."

According to Stack and Gorski, nobody had really complained that painting the bridge was a problem. "The only time that the neighbors complained was when there was something obscene painted on the bridge," said Stack.

However, Stack noted that obscenities being painted on the bridge was not a problem that had come up often.

Stack explained that appropriate judicial process would depend on many factors, such as if the group was on probation or where the bridge was painted and what was painted on the bridge.

Campus Computers Arrive

By LINDA BOND

The long anticipated campus computer revolution has finally begun to reach students.

For years computers have been nosing into college offices and some college libraries. Now their access is becoming increasingly available to more students on many campuses.

The College Press Service reported that at Idaho State, music majors compose and analyze songs on micro computers. Art students "paint" with special computer graphics tablets that allow them to create video art projects.

At Carnegie-Mellon University, aspiring poets and playwrights consult computer programs to help them with English, and by next fall, students won't be able to enroll at Carnegie-Mellon unless they agree to buy their own IBM Personal Computer, according to CPS.

Just last spring, Harvard students caught administrators unaware when they lugged word processors into class to take finals. Administrators had to scramble to draw up ways of regulating student personal computer use, which according to CPS, is quickly outstripping the centralized computer centers becoming common at Harvard.

Falling microcomputer costs, more and better software available, and lighter, more streamlined hardware on the market promises 1983 to be the year in which micros will begin to change substantially the way students go to college.

Marquette, for instance, is linking dorm computers to the schools two main computers.

Duke University has installed some 200 IBM Personal Computers in residence halls and other buildings around campus to give students "unlimited access to computers."

Some observers say that there will be a computer for every student soon. Colleges will become "wired" so that personal computers can be plugged in and used virtually everywhere on campus.

"In the last five years the number of computer terminals on campus has gone from under 400 to nearly 1000," said Dartmouth computer center Director William Arms, "and we expect that to increase to over 4000 within the next five years."

CPS reported that in a joint experiment with IBM, Carnegie-Mellon is one of the frontrunners in the race to become the nation's first "wired campus." CMU freshmen will be required to buy their own computers next fall at an estimated cost of $750 per year, in addition to their annual $10,000 tuition.

"By 1985, our goal is to build a network of 7500 personal computers on campus," said CMU spokesman Don Hale. "Each student will purchase his or her own computer and take it with them when they leave."

Drexel University will also require all entering freshmen to buy their own computers next year.

"A kid who comes to us next year," explained Bernard Sagik, Drexel vice President of academic affairs, "will graduate in 1988, and will be working in a world that will be totally involved in information and computer technology. It would be an injustice to deny our students the opportunity to learn how to use this new technology."

A second possibility to be considered is to double the capacity to 800 amps which would "give all of the possible fuses I could foresee for the field house building. It would cover enough electrical amps for concerts, ATRA, and other such activities," said Trucks. Doubling the capacity would cost $50,000 and completion is figured to take two months. "To do this job for two weeks at the end of the two month period, the field house would have to be closed with absolutely no activities," said Trucks.

Ted Aceto, director of athletics

The best of the three possibilities, according to Trucks, is "to determine the capacity for the new field house to be constructed and figure the transformer size needed to accommodate the new and old field house as well as the stadium."

No cost figure can be determined yet because no requirements have been set for the new sports complex, but "the best solution is to do it once and do it right," said Trucks.

"Hard pressed," Trucks said, "this job would not be completed until September. I would be lucky if the transformers I needed were here in eight months. Once they are here, it will take two weeks to make the connections." It would take one week to prepare for the transformer and one week to install it. The transformer box would be located outside on concrete, enclosed by a fence.

"The difference in price," according to Trucks, "between the three possibilities is small compared to the overall outcome. The labor cost is approximately the same for all solutions."

To quickly install the 400 amps needed now would be a "panic" answer. "We cannot do anything without completely shutting down the field house," said Trucks.

Trucks requested $142,500 for electrical improvements in the Field House in his '82-'83 budget but "even after emphasizing its importance, was denied the money," said Trucks.

"If the problem is not rectified by the Feb. 8 basketball game scheduled to be played in the Field House, during the game, all power in ATRA, the Butler annex and the swimming area will have to be cut off completely," said Aceto.

"To televise the game a generator will have to be brought in which is extremely costly," according to Trucks. "It's cost is about $500 per game. The expense adds up quickly," added Trucks. A generator has been used in the previous televised Field House games.

Union Major Events Schedules Conflict

By JAMES DELORENZO

While Villanova has yet to take advantage of a contract it signed with the Campus Entertainment Network (CEN) to receive live satellite concert broadcasts, Villanova Union Major Events coordinator Mike Gormley stated, "We're still part of it."

"We signed a two year contract with CEN that expires in May 1984, with an option to renew it," said Gormley. "But we've been disappointed with the way it has turned out."

Gormley cited the problems CEN has had with scheduling shows. "They have't been able to give us the lead time to publicize and plan events. So far, CEN has offered us concerts by DEVO and the Who, and the Broadway musical 'Sophisticated Ladies'," Gormley said, "but we need to get shows on weekend nights to attract people."

"People want to go to weekend shows," added Gormley. "If a show is on a weeknight, people won't go, it won't sell well."

The Who concert, broadcast by CEN on December 17, was publicized with an ad in the December 10 Villanovan. In response to that ad, placed by CEN, the Union received one phone call. "It wasn't a good idea to schedule a show in the middle of finals week, which is why we didn't accept the proposal," Gormley said. In this area, the concert was broadcast at the Tower Theatre in Philadelphia.

A problem negotiating with major concert performers has been CEN's other drawback. "It's been difficult for CEN to get an agreement ahead of time, so they have problems with advance publicity," explained Gormley. "As they become more established, performers will be more willing to negotiate with CEN.

"CEN's original intention was to program their shows in the Field House," claimed Gormley. "It wouldn't be profitable for them to program in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. The Field House's capacity is more profitable for CEN." While Villanova does not have to pay for the broadcast rights, CEN does provide the satellite receiving facilities and broadcast equipment, as well as promoting the shows and setting the ticket prices. For its part in providing a hall and selling tickets, Villanova receives a percentage of the profit.

"CEN's only option is to use the Field House," said Gormley, "but there is a scheduling conflict with the basketball teams on the availability of the Field House."

"Once basketball season ends, we should be able to set something up," Gormley stated. "I'm still very much for the program. I've been impressed with the technical quality of their productions. We'll get one here soon."

Correction

In the Jan. 21 edition of the Villanovan, Doug Murray was incorrectly identified as president of the General Alumni Association. Ed Riley is the current president. The Villanovan regrets the error.

Terminals Installed

By JACK McHUGH

Tolentine Hall recently had 35 Vax 11780 terminals by Digital installed.

The cost was approximately $1,500 to $2,000 per terminal, according to Daniel J. Helmerch, director of University computing and information services, who said, "The cost of the terminals is based on the type and sophistication that is required of that kind of terminal. The more specialized a computer is the more expensive it will be."

The terminals were installed in the fall of 1983 and opened for use this semester.

"An average of more than 2000 hours of work are done on Villanova's terminals a month," according to Helmerch. However, he added that, "the numbers can be deceptive as it is an average of the semester. The number of hours tends to increase as the semester gets on and more people get closer to deadlines."

Helmerch therefore advises that all students work on the terminals as early in the semester as possible to avoid the rush at the end.

The new terminals also have a sophisticated security system linked to both Villanova and an outside agency.

Right now there are 300 authorized users on campus. Helmerch said an authorized user is someone who was given a project number, a user number, and a pass word. These are necessary to gain access to the computer. To become a user it is necessary to get the permission of one's department chairperson. The computer center will process you in "about a day," estimated Helmerch.

"There is steady growth of computer usage, by both students and faculty as time goes on," said Helmerch who added, "This is a cost effective plan which can be conformed to demand."

Villanova, Big East Support Special Olymp-A-Thon

By JOHN G. WALSH

This semester, Villanova will hold its first Annual-Special Olymp-A-Thon in conjunction with all the member colleges and universities of the Big East basketball conference.

The Special Olympics Committee of Pennsylvania is organizing the event in an effort to raise money that will be used to provide training and competitive programs for future Special Olympians. The success of this fund raising effort is dependent on the generosity of students, athletes and sponsors involved.

The program is being run in conjunction with the Men's varsity basketball teams of each member of the Big East. Here at Villanova, as at each of the other participating schools, each basketball player will either run, jog, or walk around a pre-determined 220-yard indoor course on campus. Each player has a 20-minute time limit, and the number of laps completed during that time by each individual participant will be recorded and later transferred into a central computer.

Fifteen Villanova students from the Wildcat basketball club were selected to sponsor a varsity player in the event. Their role, specifically, was to distribute 60 pads, each containing 25 two-way mailer pledge forms.

The completed forms had to be returned within a five day period, in order to allow enough time for them to be mailed and then returned by the pledge person to the Special Olymp-A-Thon Committee.

The pledges will then be matched by computer with the results recorded by each team. Pledgers will be notified by mail as to the number of laps completed by their participant and the total amount they owe on their pledge.

Besides the obvious satisfaction derived from helping out a needy cause, the 910 Villanova students who mailed the pledge forms are also eligible for several rewards including a Big East painter a hat for each individual who participates and completes a minimum of 10 valid and stamped two-way mailers, an Official "Stars in Motion" pin of the 1984 Olympic Games for each individual who completes the above requirement and also recruits two new individuals to participate on the pledge team, or an Official Olymp-A-Thon T-shirt for each person who completes 25 two-way mailers.

The overwhelming response to this effort indicates the willingness on the part of Villanova students to participate in a worthwhile endeavor such as this. The culmination of the whole effort will take place in March at the Big East Tournament, to be held at the Madison Square Garden in New York, when all of the participating schools will present their checks to the Special Olympics Committee.

Activities Surveyed

In an attempt to aid student organizations in their efforts to sponsor successful activities, the Villanova Union conducted a random survey of 1,000 Villanova undergraduates during the Christmas break.

The survey was a detailed questionnaire that asked questions concerning past events, and activities students may be interested in participating in the future.

According to Christine Storck, the Union director, "All the organizations on campus have some problems getting people to come to their events, choosing an event, and this survey gives them a feel for what the students want and how they feel."

Forty percent of the survey's results have been received so far. The complete results will not be tabulated until the first week of February, according to Storck. The information obtained from the survey will be published in a future Villanovan, and sent to all organizations on campus.

An Activities Forum was held Jan. 27 to stimulate memberships in the on-campus organizations.

This is the first time a forum has been conducted for the second semester. Tom Belsheit, president of the Villanova Union, reported that 16 groups were represented; the fraternities and sororities chose to have their own forum.

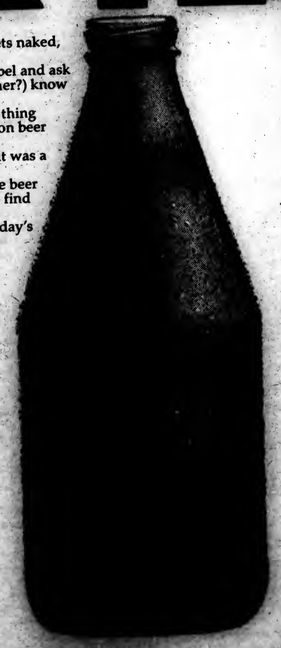
TRY THE NAKED BEER TEST.



First of all, it's not you who gets naked, it's a bottle of Today's Schaefer.

What you do is strip off the label and ask a friend to try it. Don't let him (her?) know what beer it is.

What will happen is the same thing that happened when we tried it on beer drinkers in New York.

8 out of 10 liked it. They said it was a smooth, good tasting beer.

And when we tried it on more beer drinkers, they were surprised to find out it's Schaefer beer.

No surprise to us, though. Today's Schaefer is being brewed by the Stroh family, who have devoted their 200 years of brewing experience to making Schaefer better than ever.

Test it yourself before you try it on a friend.

Today's Schaefer will make a Schaefer drinker out of you.

Tell us about your naked beer test and we may print it. Write to: Schaefer Naked Beer Test, P.O. Box 1703, Grand Central Station, N.Y., N.Y. 10163.

V.U. Students Arrested

By KEVIN MCKENNA

Nine Villanova students were arrested Jan. 21 for underage drinking and disorderly conduct following Lambda Tau Delta's annual New Year's Eve Party at The Covered Wagon Inn located in Strafford.

According to the Tredyffrin Police Department the nine students were arrested as they left the party at approximately 1:00 a.m. In addition, two other students were arrested for disorderly conduct.

A police department spokeswoman stated that the incident marked the first time the Tredyffrin Police Department had a problem with a Villanova party at the Covered Wagon.

It has been suggested that the entire incident might have been avoided had there not been a misunderstanding between Lambda Tau Delta and The Covered Wagon. According to Lambda Tau Delta President Gerry Malanga, his fraternity rented the premises for the entire evening as it had done last year for the same social event.

In the initial agreement reached between Lambda Tau Delta and The Covered Wagon, all students possessing college identification would be admitted to the party. However, only those students who presented proper identification at the bar would be served alcoholic beverages. The initial problem arose when The Covered Wagon refused to admit any college students under the age of 21.

"I really did not understand why The Covered Wagon refused to admit those who were underage because we only rented the room and furthermore, there was no over or underage 21 stipulation," Malanga said.

Realizing the success of the party was in the balance, Malanga attempted to reach a compromise with the restaurant.

"At first I tried to rearrange the situation where students would be admitted with proofing done at the bar," Malanga recalled. "However," he continued, "The Covered Wagon refused because it thought too many problems would occur."

Members of Lambda Tau Delta think an anonymous phone call received earlier in the evening by The Covered Wagon that the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board would stop by seriously damaged their bargaining position.

"I think The Covered Wagon was worried and rightfully so about the L.C.B.," stated ticket chairman John Pisano. "Whether the phone call was valid I don't know, but I can see the restuarant's position.

Even Pisano seems to have been misled about the initial agreement because the tickets that he had printed for the event read that only College I.D. was required.

After failing to persuade the restaurant to change its mind, Malanga made an agreement where no alcholic beverages would be served in the banquet room. Consequently, The Covered Wagon took down the bars lining the banquet room and opened the two bars located in the dining room and foyer area to accommodate those wishing to obtain alcohol. This agreement suited both parties.

"Within the final agreement neither party was liable," Pisano said. "Regretfully," Pisano continued, "the problem arose when underage students obtained alcohol from their upper classmen friends."

Despite this, many bystanders said the Tredyffrin Police Department was more than fair in exercising disgression. In fact, all patrons were warned before leaving to cooperate fully with the police. According to Lambda Tau Delta Treasurer Bill Vaughan the party was still successful.

"Despite the unfortunate arrests, due to circumstances beyond our control, the party was viewed as a success," Vaughan stated. "It's unfortunate that a few had to step out of line."

Campus Corner May Get Liquor License

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Campus Corner, located next to Villanova on Lancaster Ave, posted its application request for a liquor license on Dec. 29. The notice states that the store owner, Eileen Gerson, has filed with the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board for an application for a Malt and Brewed Beverage retail dispenser license.

There is an open market for liquor licenses so Gerson must first find an existing license for sale.

"There are only a certain number of liquor licenses issued per township and that number is figured according to the population in the area," said Chief Hennessy of the Radnor Township Police Department. Hennessy is unaware of any liquor licenses for sale at this time.

Gerson was instructed by the Liquor Control Board not to give any interviews until the control board had given her further notice. "I would be happy to discuss and give information about the liquor license and about the store when I am told I am allowed to," said Gerson.

"There are different kinds of liquor licenses, but all must go through the same procedure to be granted," according to Hennessy. "A Malt and Brewed Beverage License, for example, permits only the sale of beer."

Before the actual purchasing of the license, a lawyer is hired to handle the decision in an agreement of sales and to work with the LCB in running a thorough investigation. The individual owner's financial funds and sources of income are determined and the investigation also deals with the past personal history of the applicant. All employees involved are interviewed and an investigation is conducted in length on them according to the LCB.

The time involved between after finding a liquor license for sale and the final approval, including the investigation period, takes approximately two weeks.

"The posted application is to notify the public of the liquor license request," said Detective R.E. Adams of the Radnor Township Police Department. "We do not want the license to be approved and I do not think the public will either," said Adams, "but they will not even ask us.

"The LCB should ask the people involved in the enforcement but they don't," added Adams.

Hennessy and Adams were previously unaware of Campus Corner's request for a liquor license. "Since people are not notified of the situation, it is important that the posted application is somewhere where the public can see it," said Adams.

"This gives the public a chance to voice their opinion before any final decision is made," said Adams.

The application request posted states that the notice is to be "continuously posted during the period the application is pending in a conspicuous place, . . . in such a manner that it is easily and readily visible to the general public at all times."

Any public protest according to the notice is required to be from a resident who "resides within a radius of 500 feet of the premises proposed to be licensed." The protest is to be written directly to the Pennsylvania LCB and the protest is not considered valid unless the protestant appears and testifies at a determined hearing date.

Commentary

Lack Of Discourse Affects Community

It is a classic case of the lack of communication at Villanova.

A potentially dangerous situation has arisen at the Field House. Without anyone's knowledge, and to the surprise of everyone, the transformer capacity in the building was increased to almost twice its normal load, leading to the possibility of an explosion or a fire at the athletic facility. To reduce the chance of any mishap, Butler Annex has been closed and several other facilities have lost heat and lighting, inconveniencing numerous groups and curtailing many activities. While alternate solutions have been proposed, each will cost the University a great deal of time to implement, as well as costing a significant amount-all as a result of insufficient communication.

This incident exemplifies a much larger problem at Villanova, the dearth of communication between various segments of the University. It would be wrong to place the blame on the shoulders of any one individual if an accident did occur; however, the excuse "we didn't know" is no longer acceptable.

There are numerous examples of the lack of communication, which in turn, result in deficient knowledge on everyone's part. Students who don't know or understand the University's vague alcohol policy is a prime example manifested almost daily.

We realize this lack of communication perhaps better than any other organization on campus. One of the newspaper's primary responsibilities is to communicate to all of the Villanova community as many newsworthy events and happenings as possible. The primary obligation is to keep the readers well-informed and knowledgeable of the events that affect them and shape their lives.

Invariably, we recognize who is and is not informed at Villanova by their awareness of what is going on around them. It would be impossible to expect every member of the Villanova community to be well-versed and informed on all aspects of University issues. However, it is not too much to ask that everyone recognize their part in the communication process at Villanova.

Op-Eds: Chance for Expression

The Villanovan, as the newspaper of record for Villanova University, is designed to function as a voice for all the various people who compose the University: the students, faculty, administrators and alumni. Recognizing that within a community as large and diverse as this,there exists an almost endless variety of opinions and recognizing, too, that we cannot possibly express them all ourselves, we invite any and all who are interested to present their thoughts, opinions and beliefs on our Op-Ed page.

Submissions can be on almost any topic and do not have to be limited to subjects directly affecting the Villanova community. They should be no less than 400 words and no more than 1,000, and all op-eds must be received at the Villanovan office in Dougherty Hall by 2 p.m. on Tuesdays.

We sincerely hope that you will take advantage of this opportunity to have a forum for your views.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. the week of publication. All letters must be signed, although the editors will withhold a name upon request. Because of limited space, the paper reserves the right to edit and shorten all letters.

Letters to the Editor
V.U. Alcohol Policy Questioned

To the Editor:

I would like to express my views about the inconsistencies in the alcohol policy concerning drinking in dormitory rooms. Page 26 of the Blue Book specifically states that "students who are 21 years of age are permitted by the University to consume alcoholic beverages in moderate quantities in dormitory rooms . . ."

As I understand this rule, any student who is 21 is allowed to consume alcohol in any dormitory room, not just his or her own. Furthermore, the alcohol policy, as stated in the Blue Book, does not exclude students who are under 21 from the company of those who are legally permitted by the University regulations to drink.

The problem arises, however, when this clearly stated rule is interpreted by the Resident Assistants to mean something entirely different. The incident I refer to occurred on Friday, Jan. 21, when my roommate and I came back to our dorm room from an off-campus party, accompanied by two friends, Dave and John. We returned to pick up a case of beer (which was not full) and planned to returned to the party. I, one of the inhabitants of the room in question, am 21 and so is my friend Dave. My roommate Mary, however, is only 19. While leaving the building we were stopped by our R.A. who claimed that "no 21-year-olds lived on her hall" and it was not permissible for Dave and I to transport liquor through the hallway because we were with two people who were not of drinking age.

The R.A. claimed her alleged rule book stated that 21-year-olds could only drink alcohol in their own dormitory rooms and she would have to "write us up," because David and I were transporting liquor in the presence of someone, namely my roommate Mary, who is under 21.

Both Mary and I could not understand what the problem was. First of all, the R.A. is misinformed, because I am 21. Second, we were not even drinking alcohol in my dorm room; therefore, the R.A. did not have to inform us of her version of the alcohol policy because it did not apply to the situation in question. Third, Dave and I were merely taking the liquor out of my room instead of having my 21-year-old friends in to drink — which, according to the Blue Book, would have been within my rights. Fourth, we were not aware that a 19-year-old could not be in the presence of someone who is legally transporting beer.

As a result of the events which occurred that evening I am led to conclude that: one, those 21 and over can drink, but only in their own rooms; two, they cannot transport liquor past the R.A. as long as someone under legal age is with them; and, three, they cannot live with someone who is under 21 if they plan to drink in their own room.

In light of the obvious discrepancies which exist here, I ask for a second time that the alcohol policy be re-evaluated in order to attain a uniform interpretation between Resident Assistants and students. The first time I was written up, I cited the inconsistencies to the Area Coordinator and asked him to clarify it for me. At this time he told me that the policy was that anyone over 21 was allowed to drink in any dormitory room, confirming my original interpretation of the policy.

I understand that our R.A. was doing her job and do not fault her for that, but feel that it is not fair to be victimized by the R.A.'s interpretation of the policy (as stated in her manual) versus our interpretation (as stated in the Blue Book). All I ask is that someone tell us what we are allowed to do without getting into trouble.

If I cannot live with my roommate because she is under legal drinking age, then I only have two things to say: does this mean Villanova is violating state laws which allows those under 21 to live with 21-year-olds who are legally allowed to drink (including young children who live with their parents)?; and, I want a room change!

Sororities

To the Editor:

I am a full-time student who lives in the Philadelphia area with my family. I think I've always wanted to go to Villanova, but I never realized just how difficult commuting nine miles would be and not being on campus for activities.

I had heard from some upperclassmen that Villanova has separate sets of students: the people who commute and the students who live in dorms. This seems to be true-so far.

My friends from other colleges suggested that I join a sorority, which I'd like to do. However, I've also heard that the members are almost all girls who live in dorms. Will I even stand a chance of being asked to join if I'm "nobody's roommate?" I don't know many members.

Do they really give everyone a fair chance? I have a good record and would work hard in a group. Do you know how many each group will pledge? Also, does each group have one-fourth seniors, one-fourth juniors, etc.? Also, please explain the difference between the terms local and national. I'm confused about many of these things. Please provide some answers before rush begins.

Get it Right

To the Editor:

It truly amazes me how an academic institution can repeatedly honor a man, then call on him to serve the institution, and in the process get his name or title wrong every time. Each time a different version. Time and time again.

I hasten to point out however, that titles are absolutely meaningless. They bear no relationship whatsoever to anything of significance in today's society. This title in particular cannot reflect to any degree the nature and quality of the man. His devotion to the service of others, his love for family and God, as well as his immense pride in Villanova University, his alma mater, are unequaled. Covenant II could not be in better hands.

As a matter of common courtesy, let's get it right. His name is John A. Murphy. He is chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Miller Brewing Company, and group executive vice-president of Phillip Morris, Inc. His responsibilities include not only Miller, but also Seven-Up, Mission Viejo, one wife, a bunch of children, a mess of relatives, one grandchild (subject to change), a dog, a tractor and a bird named Bird.

He considers it a privilege to serve his alma mater, and the continued viability of private higher education in general. Let us join in support of Covenant II. Let us spread our pride in Villanova University. Let us get his name right!

1 Double your reading speed in one day with no loss in comprehension!

2 Improve your reading memory!

3 Eliminate slow, old-fashioned, study techniques!

4 Cut your study time in half!

NOTE: The One Day Course was offered to Villanova students in October and the average improvement was 302%. Two final courses are scheduled this year: Saturday, Feb. 12, 10:00 a.m.—4:00 p.m. or Thursday, Feb. 17, 9:30 a.m.—3:30 p.m. Tuition is normally $185, but Villanova has arranged for a special reduced tuition of $145. If you cannot attend the FREE ORIENTATION, but wish to enroll, contact the Villanova Office of Continuing Education, 209 Vasey Hall, 645-4303.

ABSOLUTE NO-RISK GUARANTEE
YOU MUST DOUBLE YOUR READING SPEED . . .

Results are so consistent that designers of the One Day Course (The Canterbury Press) offer this unique unconditional no-risk guarantee. If you do not at least double your reading rate by the time you complete the 12 day home study course, (only 25 minutes a day required) you are entitled to a full refund without question.

Priest Well Suited To Cable System

By MARISA BOLINSKI

If there is one thing that impresses students about faculty members, it is when they are not only energetic and interested in their academic disciplines within the confines of the university, but the outside world as well. faculty member here who exemplifies this is the Rev. Jack O'Rourke, O.S.A., a priest who lives in Sullivan Hall rather than the monastery; who crosses campus on his ten-speed; who socializes at student parties and dances; who most of all spends countless hours preparing, planning, sharing and Xeroxing his vast knowledge in the diverse field of communications.

Rev. Jack O'Rourke, O.S.A.

O'Rourke, a recognized expert on cable TV, is actively involved in Philadelphia community affairs, besides his teaching duties here. As chairman and founder of the Philadelphia Community Cable Company, O'Rourke is currently involved in an anti-trust lawsuit against the city of Philadelphia. The suit contends that Philadelphia, in recently awarding cable TV franchises for the city, granted them to companies which are uninterested in expanding the cable systems to benefit Philadelphia's neighborhoods.

O'Rourke says the suit is not for any financial gain, but to "give people a chance to get a communications system they can use and that corresponds to how people live in a community." He wants to "use cable for all types of communication; not just shows, but as shopping guides, for community concerns, interests and patterns."

"Cable," O'Rourke says, "could help neighborhoods continue these things and bring about a feeling of community involvement," which he feels is its main benefit.

His involvement with cable TV began in 1973 when he helped form the Philadelphia Community Cable Coalition. O'Rourke became the group's chairman, and during the next ten years, planned, testified against and studied the cable situation in Philadelphia. His philosophy then and now is that "neighborhoods are important, but aren't being effectively served by the present cable system."

In 1978 and 1979, O'Rourke worked on Philadelphia Mayor Bill Green's advisory commission dealing with cable systems. Frustrated by what he believes was Green's lack of action on serving the special needs of neighborhoods with cable and promoting competitiveness among cable companies, O'Rourke decided to take action on his own. He then formed his cable company, which enabled him to sue the city for anti-trust violations. The suit is currently pending.

O'Rourke is also involved in another major project of more direct impact on Villanova. As he explains it, "There's a broadcast channel for educational purposes being given up by Channel 12 (PBS), and it's available for free. If Villanova takes over the empty channel in conjunction with local churches," he says, "they could form a religious and personal education channel, broadcasting a series of courses."

The communications field is as limitless as tomorrow's technology, so not even O'Rourke knows what his next project will be. The only certainty is that he will go at it with as much determination and zeal as in his former ventures. For all his accomplishments, however, the smiling priest downplays his ceaseless efforts to improve and expand cable television. "I'm just having fun with people," he says.

Newsroom Opens In Falvey

By BONNIE JEAN WHALEN

Seven years of persistence by June Lytel, assistant professor of English, has finally paid off. Lytel has been asking for typewriters which would aid those students taking journalism courses. Over the Christmas holidays, Lytel's idea became a reality that she claims was "one of her favorite Christmas presents."

Villanova University has invested in the most up-to-date typewriters along with professional adjustable tables and matching chairs. The advanced keyboards on the typewriters allows one to change from pica to elite type by merely hitting a key.

In previous years students had to take their assignments home to their own typewriters or borrow a friend's in order to complete their stories. "Students will now be able to gain some practical experience and acquire the taste of the pressures and deadlines associated with the working world," according to Lytel. She further commented, "it will allow for more assignments because of the availability of the typewriters."

The transition from completing one's assignment at home to actually "doing" the story during class time may create more pressure for some students. However, Lytel assures that "it sounds more difficult than it actually is." An obvious advantage is the fact that students will have advanced typewriters at their fingertips.

Warren O. Richardson, chairman of the Communication Arts department, and Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, acted on Lytel's request. "They are responsible for obtaining the typewriters, I just bothered everybody," exclaimed Lytel.

There are only 20 typewriters which limits the size of the class. Students taking either Interpretive Journalism, offered in the spring, summer and fall semesters, or Press and Society, offered only in the spring semester, will have access to the typewriters. Both courses are currently instructed by Lytel. The location of the new journalism room is in Falvey Room FTVJ. It will be accessible weekdays from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. for those students who wish to work on their stories outside of class time.

University College Expands

By NANCY ALBERICI

University College has expanded its curricular to include three new courses. The courses range from the study of the sociological effects of crime on its victims to women' societal values in the areas of film and art.

"Victimology," an examination of the philosophical, sociological and psychological effects of crime victims, is being taught by Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas Judge Robert LaTrone. LaTrone, who has worked with the dilemmas of crime victims on a daily basis, will add credibility to the University College, where enrollment increased considerably last semester. "It ("Victimology") is an exciting subdivision in sociology and criminology," according to Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of the University College.

An examination on the ways in which crime effects the victim's family, the reasons behind why most crime remains unreported by its victims, the relationship between the offender and the victim as well as why certain crime victims provoke crimes, will be emphasized during class discussions. The characteristics of crime will be presented in a typological manner. The victim compensation concept will also be included in the course outline.

A math anxiety workshop been added to the University College program to help apprehensive math students alleviate their insecurities dealing with numbers. Once students overcome their fear, they will be able to solve math problems to their optimum level of proficiency.

Class discussions will encourage students to share their feelings about math. On an individual basis, students will be aided in finding their strengths and weaknesses.

Two more new University College courses, "Women in Art" and "Women in Film" are among this semester's offerings. Women in the visual arts as an expression of societal values will be covered in "Women in Art," as well as if their gender effected their work. "Women in Film," surveys the history of the feminist perspective concerning films.

The University College is designed to meet the educational needs of students who are uninterested in a full-time day program.

RSA Dorm Prizes Won

By GAIL JAKELIS

During finals week, many on campus residents caught up in the Christmas spirit, took a break from studying to participate in the Annual Resident Student Association Christmas Decorating Contest.

Alumni Hall won the best overall prize of $100 while Simpson Hall captured the prize for the best theme. Sheehan Third Floor West and Good Counsel Third Floor Green placed second and third respectively behind Simpson and were awarded $75.00 each for their efforts.

A $50.00 first prize in the best door category was awarded to Good Counsel First Floor Green. A pair of men's dormitories placed second and third as Fedigan Third Floor and St. Mary's Second Floor each won $25.00 for their door decorations. Finally, Good Counsel Second Floor Gold won the prize ($50.00) for the best hallway.

Judges for the contest were Janice Mauk, Tara Austin and Chris Janosik all members of Residence Life and Carl Clapper, Director of Housekeeping.

Core Band Plays Hoopsters' Song

By JOHN F. LYNCH and HENRY J. RYAN

With all the attention given this year to the expected success of the Villanova basketball team, the dedication and spirit expressed by the Villanova Core Band has gone unnoticed. The Core Band consists of over 20 Villanova students who play at all home games and as many away games as their budget allows them.

The unique factor contributing to their success is the fact that Villanova offers no scholarships for band members. In fact, Villanova does not even have a music major. The Core Band consists of members who represent several undergraduate majors. There are very few members who tend to make music their careers; they play for sheer enjoyment.

The Core Band is lead by John Dunphy, director of musical acitivies. Dunphy, who was recently married, is characterized as a devoted man who seems quite pleased by the spirit and talent which is present in all his members. Although the university lacks a music major, Dunphy continues to show his support through his role as the CoreBand leaders.

Another person who should be mentioned for her dedication is Donna Zito, a senior nursing major. Donna is one of the four directors of the band. Her job is the make sure that the band has a place to stay and that everything runs smoothly when the band travels to away games. This, of course, means tedious hours spent on the telephone confirming reservations.

The remainder of the season plans to be a very exciting one for both the basketball team and the Core Band as well. A fine example of the band's spirit occurred last semester when they traveled 15 hours on a bus to play before 20,000 opposing fans at the Rupp Arena in Lexington, Kentucky. Unfortunately they saw the Wildcats fall to their Kentucky counterparts. However, the band's rendition of "V for Villanova" was audible above the noise of the crowd, and heard over national television during halftime.

Besides traveling to various parts of the country, the band also enjoys performing before their home-court fans at the Palestra and Fieldhouse. These games are usually followed by a trip to Kelly's or Smokey Joe's to celebrate a victory or console a defeat. The band members usually wear their uniforms to these fine establishments so people will recognize them. They are a close bunch who really enjoy each other's company on a social basis.

As the season continues, perhaps the spirit and dedication exhibited by the band will encourage Villanova basketball fans to take notice of this talented group.

Tenants: Winterize Your Apartment And Save

The following article is reprinted from New Roots magazine.

"I rent an apartment and freeze in the winter. But I can't invest money in weatherproofing my house. I only rent this place."

Sound familiar? It's the renter's wintertime blues. With ever-rising energy prices, an increasing number of landlords make their tenants pay winter heating costs. If you rent an apartment or house — do not despair. You can easily winter weatherproof your home to save energy, cut down on heating bills and have a warmer living space. Moreover, you can buy most of the materials at a hardware store, apply them with simple household tools, and your investment can be paid back in just one winter.

Winter energy conservation covers two areas: not wasting heat and preventing heat loss. The first step is to know where heat enters and leaves your living spaces. Following are some tips on what you can do this winter.

One of the most obvious ways of wasting heat is by setting the thermostat higher than is needed. You do not need to shiver through your meals, but by putting on an extra sweater and turning the heat down just one degree you'll save about 3 percent of the bill. Unused or rarely used rooms can be closed and the heat turned off in them. You probably don't think of a closet as a room, but keep the door closed because each closet can cost as much as eight dollars a year to heat.

Hot water heating is another place where energy is often wasted. Unless there is a dishwasher, a setting of 120 degrees or "low" is adequate for a household of five. A low consumption shower head can save a considerable amount of hot water. Always fix leaking faucets with new washers because one drop per second wastes as much as 60 gallons of hot water a week.

Heat also leaks through openings like doors and windows. Windows are especially susceptible to temperature loss, so they are an important area to winterize. Storm-windows should fit properly. A landlord may provide them if there are none in the house. If you cannot obtain storm windows, put plastic or vinyl over the windows. After the sun goes down, curtains or shades should always be closed. Make sure that the window covering extends below and beyond the edges of sills, and the heavier the curtains, the more they will insulate against the cold. You can feel air leaks by holding your hand in front of the window on a windy day. If you feel cold air between the top and bottom window sashes, the lock may need to be replaced so that it pulls them tightly together (replacing the lock costs under one dollar). Any other leaks around the window can be filled with caulking cord or sponge rubber. Remember that a one-eighth inch gap around a window can cause as much heat loss as a six inch hole in the wall.

All of the quick work described above is paid back in one year or less, and some of it creates immediate savings. To make all of this even more worth your while tax credits are available for energy-saving measures. If you spent over 10 dollars during the weatherproofing, and the receipts are saved, you can ask the IRS for a 15 percent credit of the cost.

"Guidelines"

By STU and RON

There are many rules and regulations on the books at Villanova that are not widely obeyed by students, such as the alcohol policy and the visitation policy. However, there are even more laws not recorded anywhere that are obeyed by virtually all students and administrators.

Here for the first time is an "official" list of Villanova's unwritten laws.

1. There must be a markup of at least 200 percent on all items in the bookstore.
2. It is illegal for more than one Bryn Mawr Trust teller to be on duty at the same time.
3. Ice and snow removal by Villanova maintenance is strictly prohibited during the winter months.
4. Security guards must be at least 65 years old.
5. It is illegal to wake up an on-duty security guard.
6. During course pre-registration, only sections taught by "unpopular" professors may be open.
7. All department heads, whether busy or not, are required to make students wait at least 30 minutes to see them.
8. Liberal Arts majors may not study more than one hour per week.
9. Attendance at any Union event shall not exceed five persons.
10. It is unlawful for the amount of WKVU's listeners to exceed the amount of people in the studio.
11. The Villanova food service may not serve food that can be recognized on sight.
12. Students living within a five mile radius of Villanova may not live on campus, unless Uncle Chris says it's OK.
13. The temperature in Falvey library must not fall below 80 degrees.
14. It is against the law for the Connelly Center movies to be audible or in focus.
15. It is illlegal to read the Blue Book from cover to cover.

Guidelines

By JANET HORSELL

In the Western culture we think in terms of pairs: black and white, normal and abnormal, life and death, pro-life and pro-abortion or pro-choice. We are a culture based on counterparts. We can learn much from the Eastern culture which believes in "allness"; someone is both good and bad simultaneously. The East lives comfortably without the need to separate into opposing categories.

By substituting the words "respect life" for "pro-life," what Western concept of opposites exist? Are there really people in the world who do not respect life in any forms, including their own? The point being pro-life or preferably one who respects life, the issue is not solely anti-abortion. Respect life is a belief that includes many issues such as capital punishment, world hunger, war, infanticide, genocide, suicide, homocide, nuclear arms and nuclear power. The list is endless.

Respect life should be an underlying premise for one's decision on a position of such issues. After this premise is laid down one needs to search for the facts — scientific, statistical and experiential — surrounding the issue in question before stating one's views on such an issue.

Anti-abortionists and pro-abortionists have dreaded Jan. 22 for the last ten years. This date saddens anti-abortionists because it represents another passing year in which one-and-a-half million unborn children are killed each year.

Pro-abortionists fear this date knowing that thousands of people pour into Washington, D.C., and into other areas to show their belief that the Roe V. Wade decision was wrong and made out of ignorance. This is the one official day on which the country's conscious is questioned. Yet, not one day should pass that one does not make a statement, whether verbally or through action, on the sanctity of life.

Being pro-life is not limited to saying, "Yes, I am pro-life." It means caring about the protection of the unborn child. However, this is not where the issue ends. Many pro-choice people fail to realize that pro-life people do care about the health of the mother physically, emotionally and socially. We realize that the mother needs just as much support and assistance as the unborn child. She too has an inalienable right to life.

When people say they are pro-life they are saying that, "Yes, I will with confidence state and support my views to all regardless of another's view. However, I will not stop at speaking, I will try to educate those who are not aware of all the facts. I will try to in some way extend a helping hand to help those mothers, whether through prayers, donations, or by actively and personally being involved with them. I will keep myself and others abreast of current legislation. I will write to my congressmen. I will march on Jan. 22. I will not be afraid, pessimistic, grow weary or give up."

People who are pro-life do not keep respect life feelings inside themselves; they celebrate their love of life everyday and pass it on to others. If all had taken this responsibility seriously, Roe V. Wade would not have overridden the 1973 American public pro-life values.

Events Planned

Villanova University will present a series of free public lectures and concerts starting in February. These events will take place on Tuesdays at 4 p.m. in the Connelly Center as part of Villanova's cultural events programming.

The series begins on Feb. 1 with a piano recital and lecture by Gary Goldschneider and continues on Feb. 8 with a performance and demonstration by Wimmer, Wimmer, and Dancers. On Feb. 15 Harold Cohen, a visual artist working with computers, will be featured.

Events scheduled for March are a guitar performance by Chuck Anderson Mar. 15, and a chamber music concert by the Manor House Trio on Mar. 22.

Goldschneider is a concert pianist, lecturer and teacher. His concert will range over the history of music, illustrating the parallels between various types of music, including jazz, classical and popular music, as well as the music of Wimmer, Wimmer, and Dancers will present a program of short works. Some of the pieces will be demonstrations of the variety of dance techniques and problems; others are performances which will reflect the company's interest in dance as a reflection of human emotions and relationships.

Cohen is probably the best known of the contemporary artists who work with computers. According to Cohen, the computer is a tool to be used just like any other. He will lecture with slides of his computer set-up and the drawings he makes.

Anderson will combine the modernism of the guitar with the tradition of the classical concert artist, performing some of his own compositions as well as some of his transcriptions of traditional concert works.

Art Museum Hosts Events

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

To those students who say that there aren't enough activities on campus to keep them busy, take heed. The Philadelphia Museum of Art is sponsoring a number of events through February designed to attract the attention of students with diversified interests.

Continuing through Feb. 6 is a collaboration between the museum and the Pennsylvania Ballet "Dance in Pennsylvania: The Nation's First Steps," an exhibition of dance memorabilia from the past two centuries which will be available to viewers in the Director's Corridor. The program is sponsored by a grant from the Pennsylvania Humanities Council.

Opening Feb. 5 is "Minor White, Photographs," a display of over 100 images by one of the most influential American photographers. The exhibit is a compilation from the museum's permanent collection and will be shown in the Print Gallery, located on the ground floor of the museum.

Minor White, who died in 1976, was a photographer, editor, critic and teacher whose lifelong interest in spiritual development attracted him to many young artists seeking direction.

In a salute to Black History Month, the museum will show an African film each Sunday during the month of February at 1 p.m. in the Van Pelt Auditorium.

The first film, to be shown Feb. 6, "The Independence of Zimbabwe," is a color documentary that follows the course of independence in a newly-emerging African nation. Haile Gerima, Ethiopian filmmaker and visiting professor at Howard University will introduce the film and highlight a discussion afterward.

The following Sunday, "Ceddo," a political film examining the confrontation of opposing forces in the face of Moslem expansion will be shown. The following two Sundays, "Boesman and Lena" and "Xala" will be screened.

In celebration of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, free performances of "Abraham Lincoln" by Will Stutts on Feb. 18 at 1:30 p.m. and Feb. 20 at 3:30 p.m. in the Van Pelt Auditorium. Through the use of slides, music and taped voices, "Abraham Lincoln" explored the history of the Civil War era president who struggled to keep the nation together. The audio visual production, written by Stutts, reveals Lincoln as a man of humor, understanding and love.

Stutts travels across the nation nine months of the year to bring his production to the public. A founding member of the Los Angeles Shakespeare Company, Stutts is a veteran of many Broadway and off-Brodway roles. Stutts received an M.F.A. from the Yale University School of Drama and studied with Lee Strasberg at the Actor's Studio in New York.

The museum, located at 26th and Benjamin Franklin Parkway, is open Wednesday thru Sunday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Writing Just For The Love Of It

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

The World Series ended several months ago and the winter trade meetings have also passed. If you are a baseball junkie you are no doubt badly in need of a fix. Well, here it is. Anthony J. Connor's "Baseball For The Love Of It." Connor's book is not a book per se. It is more like a vault of treasures from some of the greats of the baseball world.

Connor has compiled anecdotes and interviews from players who have reached the pinnacle of success — the Hall Of Fame. The book is broken into three parts: the players as young dreamers, in their prime at the height of their success and finally at the twilight of their career, when realization has set in.

Connor has written every day since high school in developing his writing style. "Baseball for The Love of It" is his second book. His first "Blues," was a critically acclaimed documentary on blues musicians. Born in Massachusetts, Connor now resides in New York City. As he himself has said "New York City is the only place in North America where pedestrians, through their sheer numbers, have the upper hand in traffic."

Recently the Villanovan had a chance to talk to Mr. Connor about his book, writing and in general, baseball.

Villanovan: "How long did it take to compile the information necessary in completing the book?"

Connor: "Well, in total it took over two years."

Villanovan: "How did you distinguish and sort out which quotes to use?"

Connor: "Well that was very hard work. Basically, in the research phase I gathered together 260,000 words in the first draft. But I did two things. Number one, in one part of my brain I figured out the structure of the book which includes chapters and subheadings. In the other part of my mind I picked out the quotes from the players chosen for my book. The quotes were then arranged in order to fit the structure I had originally set up."

Villanovan: "At times the quotes seemed arranged as if each player were conversing with the other. Was this purposely done?"

Connor: "Yes. That was the effect I was hoping to achieve. One of my fears was that the quotes might sound jumbled or disjointed. I was covering so much ground and I wanted to keep myself out of it if possible. I am orchestrating the whole thing, but I did not want my "voice" in it. James Joyce was the one who said, "the perfect work of art was the one that leaves no trace of the artist."

Villanovan: "The book had a certain warmth to it. It contained lots of trivia and little known quirks of some of the players."

Connor: "Yes. Such as Duke Snider wearing number 4 because Lou Gehrig was his idol. I tried to bring across the players as more than just that — players. I also included little known facts such as that of the Negro Leagues. They too have a place in baseball history."

Villanovan: "Through your interviews with many of the Hall Of Famers, what was their reaction to the city of Philadelphia and its fans?"

Connor: "Well, it's a good sports town. The late Ty Cobb had recalled that one game in which he had spiked Home Run Baker, a fan had threatened to shoot him! Philadelphia fans are fickle but they do have a deserved reputation of being tough fans."

Villanovan: "The book also includes some amusing antics of the players."

Connor: "Right. Such as with Dizzy Dean who had his catcher purposely drop a foul ball in order to strike out Joe DiMaggio for a fourth time. And he did too!"

Villanovan: "Do you have a favorite baseball team?"

Connor: "Yes. The Boston Red Sox. I grew up not too far away from Fenway Park."

Villanovan: "Do you think there is a difference between the American and National leagues?"

Anthony Connor

Connor: "Yes. In fact Monte Irvin and Willie Mays had pointed this out. The key to the superiority of the National League is that the black player emerged earlier in that league while the American League was wary of signing black ballplayers."

Villanova: "Do you think that the players years ago were more dedicated to the game of baseball; in that the game was not so much a business? Or were the players just naive?"

Connor: "The players years ago reflected the country just as today's player reflects the country as it is now. I think the country as a whole was a bit more naive back then. It was a younger country that had gone through a lot."

Villanovan: "Do you think the player of today is better than that of years gone by?"

Connor: "I don't have a lot of perspective on that but I will say they are bigger and stronger. They appear to be better conditioned. But the oldtimers that I have spoken to say this is not so."

Villanovan: "Of today's players, who would you categorize as being an "old-time" ballplayer?"

Connor: "Definitely Pete Rose. He's always hustling. The late Thurman Munson. Also Gorman Thomas. He even looks like a player from years ago with his thick moustache and baggy uniform."

Villanovan: "Who has inspired your writing?"

Connor: "James Joyce. I'm not saying I write just like Joyce but our styles are similar. Especially if you have read his letters or essays."

Villanovan: "What was your biggest 'baseball' thrill?"

Connor: "My biggest thrill was on my twelfth birthday. My dad took me to Yankee Stadium in 1958 to see the Braves play the Yankees. Yankee Stadium. World Series. Warren Spahn versus Whitey Ford is what was a great pitching duel. What artistry!"

In "48 HRS." A Star Is Born

By JOHN F. LYNCH

"48 HRS." is an urban thriller starring Nick Nolte and Eddie Murphy. Directed by Walter Hill, the film centers around two very different men and the crazy escapades they are forced to go through to catch a menacing killer.

Nolte is "billed" as the lead character in the film. Originally noted as a television actor, especially in the mini-series "Rich Man, Poor Man," Nolte has adapted from the tube to the big screen with unusual ease. His role in "North Dallas Forty" has been his best performance to date, with adequate acting achievements in "Who'll Stop the Rain" and "The Deep."

In "48 HRS.," Nolte plays the role of Jack Gates, a sloppy San Francisco detective who is hated by his peers on the force because he is not unlike a vigilante. As the movie progresses, one gradually sees through the tough guy image and realizes that Gates is a fairly decent guy who just likes to do things his own way. Nolte gives us a realistic portrayal of his character but the true scene stealer of the film is Eddie Murphy, who gives a splendid performance.

Murphy, in his first major motion picture, plays the role of Reggie Hammond, a ghetto black criminal who is a slick con-man who loves to smile. He is released from jail by Detective Gates in order to help catch the killer, a former partner in crime with Hammond.

Murphy's performance is so realistic in this film that it's scary. Throughout the film he is in complete control of his character and also knows his limitations, something first time film actors find difficult.

Beginning with performances at local bars in his home town of Hempstead, N.Y., Murphy's career sky-rocketed when he joined the current "Saturday Night Live" company at the age of 19. His hilarious style has been a vital part of the continued success of the late-night comedy show.

The success of the film centers around the special relationship which forms between Detective Gates and "con-man" Hammond. When they first meet, one senses the hatred which exists between the two men. As the film progresses, however, they realize that they both must work together to achieve their individual goals. Gates wants to catch the killer and Hammond wants to settle the score with his partner who has done him wrong. Gates and Hammond eventually reach a level of respect and friendship which is not only genuine but very emotional as well.

"48 HRS." is a turbulent look at society today. It gives us a bleak picture of inner-city crime which is so prevalent and makes us understand how difficult it is for the law to handle this problem. The film wants us to laugh and cry at the same time while trying to bring across the elementary, yet necessary point that we must work together, whether black or white, cop or con, to solve the problem of crime which effects us all.

As for Murphy and Nolte, this team will certainly be heard from again.

"Best Friends" Tie the Knot

By BARBARA SIMON

"Best Friends" is apropos to the attitudes and confusion towards marriage in the '80s. This PG film, directed by Norman Jewison makes a serious statement about the meaning of marriage in a humorous manner.

Goldie Hawn and Burt Reynolds star as successful screen-play writers in California who work well together and are indeed best friends, who are deciding whether or not to get married.

Richard, played by Reynolds, represents the traditional view of marriage as the ultimate commitment — his statement to the world is that they love each other. Richard is handsome, in love, stubborn and sometimes chauvinistic.

Paula, played by Hawn, is an intelligent but dizzy and charming character who apologizes too many times. She is adamantly against marriage because of the social expectations and roles she feels will be forced upon her, and her fear that this commitment will eventually end in divorce. When Paula reluctantly agrees to marriage, she begs Richard, "If we get married, promise me one thing — we won't tell anyone." Thoughtfully she adds, "Because if it doesn't work out, I'm going to kill you in your sleep."

This type of dry, communicative humor keeps this light, yet emotional movie alive. It is emotional because Paula is a highly sensitive and nervous woman who tries to retain her independence within the framework of her marriage.

The main flaw in this romantic-/comedy is that the movie only devotes five minutes of film to before their marriage and 55 minutes to their trials and tribulations after the wedding. This imbalance of the time span of their entire relationship creates an ambiguous reality. Richard and Paula have known each other for five years, have lived together for three years and their relationship was beautiful until day one of their marriage. Their honeymoon was spent first at Paula's parents for a few days and then with Richard's for a few days. The strain of being with the in-laws is more often funny but heart-breaking to Paula and Richard. In one scene, Paula witnesses her tottering old dad trying to attack the cleaning lady.

Goldie Hawn and Burt Reynolds in "Best Friends"

laughter and struggles that many couples face when they love each other and decide to make a commitment. Despite a few despondent scenes, the movie is basically optimistic. Hawn is the spark in "Best Friends" and Reynolds just looks great, as usual.

One forgets that these two are acting; that is how good the on-screen chemistry is.

Some Food For Thought

By JOHN F. LYNCH AND DEAN C. BALSAMINI

"30 Days to A Flatter Stomach For Women" by Nancy Burstein is a fitness book which deals with the tedious process many women go through in order to ward off the deadly inches of fat which seem to dwell around the abdominal region.

Combined with photos by Ron Contarsy, Burstein lays out a step by step program which will help aid over-weight women who feel there is no hope for their sad state of existence.

Chapter one deals with the problem of getting started in a fitness program. Many women find it difficult to get motivated. Burstein states that a simple cure to this lack of enthusiasm is to take out the tape measure and "survey the damage." This should make women realize that a problem exists.

The following section of the book describes the many different exercises which help tighten the stomach area. The exercises are simple enough for most women to do, plus they are very effective for any sized woman.

From this point, the book plots out exercises which can be done with a partner (preferably someone of the opposite sex). The "Tandem Tummy Toners" and the "Body Bumpers" are illustrated in the book and resemble something out of a pornographic magazine. However, they are a vital part of the total physical fitness program which Burstein tries to teach us.

The advanced training which women can use in their programs consists of aerobics, a process by which music and exercise combine to form an energetic form of physical activity. Aerobics is for [illegible] isn't afraid to keep going when the "going gets tough."

At 61 pages, "30 Days to A Flatter Stomach For Women" is not exactly "War and Peace." Burstein is obviously taking advantage of the fitness craze. Although not to be taken too seriously, these exercises can be effective.

If one strictly adheres to the program, losing pounds and inches can be a piece of cake. Oops! Sorry about that.

Cultural Film Festival

Villanova University's Cultural Film Series for spring 1983 has been announced. Series chairman Dr. Joan Lynch of Villanova's theater department has scheduled an assortment of American and European films, including many acclaimed works from recent years.

In the main series, entitled "Gender/Genres," films range from classic visions of crime and warfare to incisive explorations of contemporary male and female roles. Diane Kurys' "Peppermint Soda," a delightful French comedy about adolescence, will open the series on Sunday, Jan. 30, with showings at 3:30 and 7 p.m., and again on Jan. 31 at 7 p.m., in the Connelly Center Cinema. In following weeks, these films will be presented: "City of Women," Sisters or The Balance of Happiness;" "The Godfather;" "My Dinner with Andre," "Prince of the City," "Diva," "Das Boot," "Atlantic City," and "Lola."

As a complement to the main series, a Wednesday evening mini-series entitled "Limitation/Liberation" is being presented. The films in this series trace a fascinating progression in the presentation of women on film.

The series opened Jan. 26 with "Pandora's Box," a rarely-seen 1928 German classic starring Louise Brooks as a femme fatale. "Dance, Girl, Dance," a unique 1945 musical directed by Dorothy Arzner, will be shown Feb. 23, followed by Claudia Weill's 1978 "Girl Friends" on April 20.

Admission for all events is $3 for the general public and $1.50 for students. For more information, call 645-7262.

VILLANOVA, PENNSYLVANIA 19085

Office of the Student Body President

January 27, 1983

Dear Villanovans:

As many of you have read in last week's Villanovan, the Board of Trustees decided to appoint a committee which will define a football program for Villanova. In defining this program, the Trustees want three areas of concern taken into consideration. The program must be financially viable, meet academic standards, and fufill the needs of the various segments of the University(i.e. students, alumni, etc.). Needless to say, this is quite a big step on the road to reinstating football, and I feel it is something we all should feel good about.

The recent Student Government survey results regarding a $35 fee played a key role in the Board's decision-making process. Many thanks to all those who worked on the survey, to the students who responded to the survey, and to the entire student body for taking an active and responsible role in this effort.

It is my hope that the Board's committee will form its recomendations soon. We will keep you posted on the progress and will continue to do our best to see this through.

Sincerely,

Paul A. Tufano
Student Body President

Student Government Board

Athletic Facility Progress Report

The Student Government would like to clarify the specific details concerning the proposed construction of a new indoor athletic facility as well as improvements to be made on the existing field house.

The new facility will be designed by Daniel F. Tully Associates of Melrose, Mass. Tully Associates is one of the premier architectural firms specializing in innovative athletic structures. They are responsible for the deisgn of similar projects at Amherst, Boston College, Brown, and Georgetown.

The largest portion of space will be concentrated into a multi-purpose arena with five basketball courts encircled by a six-lane, 200-meter track. The courts can also be used for tennis, volley ball and badminton. Also included will be practice facilities for hurdles, long jump and high jump. The seating capacity of the new facility, for the purpose of intercollegiate basketball, will be 7,000. The addition of floor level chairs can add 2,000 more seats for such occasions as commencement.

A second area of concentration will be in the renovation of the existing Field House. These renovations will include an eight-lane, 25-meter swimming pool with a diving tank for one-meter and three-meter boards. The seating capacity for the pool will be approximately 400. Other features of these improvements include racquetball and handball courts, squash courts, powerlifting and weight training rooms, a multi-purpose, acoustically-isolated area for music activity and general exercise areas. The preliminary estimated cost for the entire package is approximately $9.5 million.

Las Vegas Night

The Student Government, in conjunction with the Interfraternity Council, is sponsoring a Las Vegas night on March 12 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. There will be entertainment, refreshments and first-class gambling tables. Chips will be used as money, which at the end of the night will be traded in for prizes. The theme is "Prohibition," all workers will be dressed in the garb of the '20s and all are invited to do the same.

This party is not being held to raise money for any group or organization. Its purpose is to enable the students to promote positive community relations. This will be a great opportunity to work with our neighbors and faculty members in order to establish a better rapport among the various groups. Other schools have done this quite successfully. Please leave March 12 open and consult the Villanovan for more information. If you have any further questions or ideas, please contact us at the Student Government Office, 204 Dougherty Hall.

Committee Members Wanted

A sub-committee of the Student Government has been formed in order to recognize the businessmen in the immediate area who give discounts and contribute to the benefit of the Villanova community.

a second sub-committee has also been formed to improve relations with the residents of Curwen Road. In the forming of this committee, the Student Government seeks to strengthen the University community.

Anyone interested in participating in either sub-committee, please contact the Student Government in 204 Dougherty Hall.

Wallowing In Mediocrity

By MIKE NOONE

Todd Rundgren's latest album, "Tortured Artist Effect," is yet another example of his experiments in mediocrity. His career has been marked by a series of albums which seldom include anything substantial with the exception of an occasional hit. Because of his long career, which now includes producing the Psychadelic Furs' new album, one would expect a product of true artistic value. However, Rundgren seems satisfied with an album of moderate entertainment value. Perhaps this explains why he has not received the nationwide attention of other Philadelphia-based talents such as Hall and Oates.

The first side of the album consists of four ballads espousing the pains of relationships. The songs seem to drone on endlessly, with a constant beat which makes all the songs sound similar creating one big mush of earnest crooning. Mr. Rundgren certainly has a lot to say, but it has been said before and is endlessly repeated in most of the songs. The songs become so pretentious, it is sickening.

The song "Don't Hurt Yourself" tells us: "You burn your bridges when your cross/ There's nothing left when you cool off/ You can't go back so you're lost like a rolling stone." After he has finished all the verses, Rundgren insists on dragging out the songs with monotonous refrains. Rundgren forces too much down the listeners throat with his slurring vocals; the songs become a melange of tiring cliches. Musically, Rundgren and his band are quite talented. But they insist on employing hollow organ sounds which, in songs like "Chant," cause the whole song to sound off key.

One song which keeps the album from becoming a complete flop is a short, upbeat tune called "Band the Drum All Day." This song is a welcome change, for it is the only song in which the tempo is radically different. It is also the only song which does not force profound statements on the listener and is truly enjoyable with its simple lyrics.

The other highlight is called "Drive." This song is much more melodic than Rundgren's ballads and incorporates a creative use of the synthezizer. It offers a simple message: "Don't sit and cry/ While the world passes by/ Stop tagging after the other guy/ Just get a line on that mother and drive."

"Drive" and "Bang the Drum all Day" are most certainly the best tracks on the album. Tightly put together, they do not linger or seem didactic like so many of the first side songs, but somehow they ended up on the "B" side.

This album is clearly a disappointment for, like so many of Rundgren's earlier albums, it gets bogged down and offers little enjoyment. Rundgren must learn that good music does not have to have a profound statement. Rundgren has enormous potential, but when is he ever going to live up to it? Maybe never. But the fact is that people are tired of hearing how well the band plays and how talented they are. As for his latest effort, a more appropriate title would have been the "Tortured Listener Effect."

As Easy As ABC

By MIKE NOONE

Recently this reporter saw England's latest entry for popstardom, ABC, at the Tower Theatre as part of their debut American tour. The group, labeled as a "new direction in music and extravagance," lived up to its billing. The members of ABC are vocalist Martin Fry, David Palmer on drums, Stephen Singleton on saxophone, and Mark White on guitar.

ABC's sound is noted for its complicated bass runs and a strong rhythm section. The music is created by layering different instrumental sounds and vocals to produce the syntho-pop effect. The final result resembles early Roxy Music but is distinct in both its strong rhythms and vocal style of Fry.

The stage was set up on multilevels that was reminiscent of the big band era. The additional band members traveling with the group consisted of: a singer, two horn players and two keyboard players.

As for the performance, it was the best this writer has seen in several years. Each performer was clad in a tuxedo and had complete command of his instrument. They were tightly conducted by Fry and exuded an air of true professionalism and class. The concert was divided into three segments. The first consisted of upbeat dance songs such as their current popular single "Poison Arrow." For the duration of this part of the show, sax player Singleton and Fry led the crowd in what turned into a huge sing and dance along.

The second segment was made up of slow orchestrated songs which did not go over quite as well with the crowd. But that does not mean the set was not interesting. The band played a slowed-down version of "Poison Arrow" which was highlighted by vocalist Fry's outstanding solo performance. Afterwards Fry asked the audience if they would like to meet the band members.

The third part of the show was performed in high style and with all its gaudiness, one felt as if one were watching a Las Vegas production. If the band has one shortcoming it is the similarity of several songs. But this is not uncommon when a new band is trying to establish a style for itself. The next album will be the telltale answer as to whether this is a major problem.

If ABC represents a new direction in music, then what is in store is a creative and talented sound which offers a refreshing change from much of the recent hardcore. ABC proved that they could perform their music just as flawlessly live as they do on their album "The Lexicon of Love." They are an entertaining band that does not force social commentaries down your throat, but offer a lighter melodic alterative. This is a simple formula that is as easy as ABC.

Wildcats Nip LaSalle at :01

By TOM KRUSCHE

The Wildcats' 72-71 nail-grinder victory over the LaSalle Explorers Saturday proved that old axiom that championship Big Five schools take the court starting lineups, records, national rankings and Vegas Vic's line and throw them all in the can.

"The Big Five is the Big Five," said Rollie Massimino, Villanova's victorious but wearied coach. "No matter what, you can't predict what will happen."

LaSalle entered the game with an 8-5 record, minus the nation's leading freshman scorer of 1981-82, guard Stevie Black, and his backcourt companion, superjunk Chris Gennaro.

The nationally-ranked Wildcats, without a nine-game winning streak, and a miserable LaSalle on paper, but City Series games are played on the historic floor at the Palestra. That is why it took a spectacular driving bank shot with one second remaining by Ed Pinckney to rescue the Wildcats.

John Pinone bettered LaSalle for 13 of his team high 21 points in the first half, as the Cats eased their way to a 29-16 lead.

The Wildcats' defense allowed no LaSalle layups, so the Explorers' Dallas Philson pulled his rainbow jumper out of mothballs. Philson, shooting 36 percent from the field prior to the game, eventually hit 11 of 19 attempts to burn the Cats for 'Explorer high 23 points.

On the strength of Philson's shooting, LaSalle outscored the Wildcats 21-17 in the first half's final 10:16, and the half ended with La Salle up, 37-35.

The second half started with an Albert "Truck" Butts jumper to put LaSalle up, 39-35. But Harold Pressley followed Stewart Granger's missed breakaway dunk to retake the lead, 40-39.

Three Frank Dobbs jumpers boosted the Cats' lead to 54-49 at 10:06, but LaSalle then mounted its second charge.

Philson pumped in three field goals, and Dave Kerina, who replaced the foul-plagued Tom Piotrowski, drove the left side and tied the contest at 59-59.

The lead then see-sawed, and the stage was set for the dramatic final minute, as the Cats desperately clung to a 68-67 margin.

Two Pinone free throws made it 70-67 at 0:41, but 11 seconds later, Ralph Lewis closed the gap to 70-69, with an eight-footer in traffic.

Granger then tried to bring the ball upcourt, but was double-teamed and pressured into throwing a long pass to Dobbs. Butts stole the errant pass and dished it off to Philson for a short jumper in the lane.

With 12 seconds remaining, and 71-70 lead, LaSalle smelled an upset, while Villanova planned an escape route.

On a set play, Dobbs threaded the ball to Pinckney, who drove the right side and banked it home at the buzzer with three LaSalle defenders draping him.

"Actually, I thought he (Dobbs) was going to shoot it," said Pinckney, who added nine rebounds to his 14 points. But when he got the ball, "I just went straight to the basket."

"He had to make a shot to win," said LaSalle Coach Lefty Ervin. "We were all over him."

Women Win 2 of 3

By LAURA FORTUNATO

As if the first week of classes did not create enough readjustments, the women's swimming schedule required them to meet the demands of three aggressive opponents.

Collecting their physical and mental stamina, Villanova met with the University of Pennsylvania, Syracuse University and the University of Connecticut in a single week. The team emerged victorious in two of the three competitions, losing to Syracuse by a single point.

Villanova's 95-54 win over Penn produced a number of first place finishes: Lisa McFadden, 100 yd. and 200 yd. freestyle; Beth Metzger, 50 yd. back and 50 yd. fly; Genny Blair, 50 yd. and 200 yd. breaststroke; Carolyn Ryan, 50 yd. and 100 yd. freestyle; Genny Muldering, 200 backstroke.

Metzger, Muldering, Blair and Ryan combined their talents to defeat Penn in the 400 Medley Relay event. Villanova also captured both the one meter required and one meter optional diving events with performances by freshman Lori Bukaty.

Although the meet against Syracuse resulted in a loss of 74-75, the Villanova women created challenging currents.

Victors were: Ginny Blair, 100 yd. breaststroke; Genny Muldering, 200 backstroke and 400 Individual Medley; Lisa McFadden, 200 yd., 500 yd., and 1000 yd. freestyle events; Beth Metzger, 100 yd. backstroke and 100 yd. butterfly.

Carolyn Ryan joined Muldering, Metzger and Blair to win the 200 Medley Relay.

The swimming women of Villanova reclaimed their winning waves by defeating the University of Connecticut, 91-53. Nancy Bauman and Cindy Cerami swept first and second places in the 1000 yd. freestyle. Lisa McFadden and Rita Edge teamed up to win first and second places in the 200 d. freestyle. McFadden and Baur.an claimed first and second in the 200 butterfly.

The diving events were also secured by winner Lori Bukaty and second place finisher Maggie Cunningham.

Other first place finishers were: Genny Muldering, 100 Individual Medley and 200 breaststroke; Beth Metzger, 50 yd. and 200 yd. backstroke and 50 yd. butterfly; Rita Edge, 500 yd. freestyle; Carolyn Ryan, 50 yd. freestyle; and Nancy Campbell, 200 yd. Individual Medley. The 200 yd. Medley team of Muldering, Blair, Ryan and Metzger was also victorious.

O'Sullivan Paces Track Triumph

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's track team competed in the 2nd Annual Joe Hilton Indoor Track and Field Meet which was held on Jan. 22 at the University of North Carolina.

The Wildcats had an outstanding day on the boards, winning eight out of ten events they entered. The Cat's victories and all-around performances earned them the title and a trophy.

Perhaps the most outstanding performer of the meet was Villanova's Marcus O'Sullivan, who broke the 4-minute mile for the first time. O'Sullivan's best time previous was 4:00.1, which occured at the Martin Luther King Games in April. His fastest time indoors was 4:04.

O'Sullivan said he felt great for the first half-mile during which a pace setter pulled him through in 1:57. After the first half-mile O'Sullivan was out in front running a solo race. The last quarter-mile (run in 61 seconds) O'Sullivan said he was in pain. But he gutted it out to break the tape in 3:58.84, easily ducking under the 4:03.20 qualifying time for the NCAA Indoor Championships. (At this point the time is the third fastest in the world indoors this year.)

O'Sullivan's margin of victory was a whopping 6.97 seconds. For his effort, O'Sullivan was presented with an award for the most valuable performer in the distances.

Senior Rod Wilson also had an outstanding day, qualifying for the NCAAs in the 60-yard high hurdles. In the trials he clocked a winning time of 7.42. In the finals he aped to victory in a blazing 7.27, ducking under the NCAA qualifying time of 7.29.

Later in the meet Wilson won the 50-yard hurdles in 6.15 seconds.

For his fine performances Wilson was awarded the Most Valuable Performer award in the sprints.

The Cats had successful performances in the other events. Junior Craig Morris won the 600-yard run in 1:12.75 while freshman Chip Jenkins was third in 1:14.37.

Senior Carlton Young had a :51 [illegible] in the 440-yarder [illegible] finishing a 49.64. Junior Jim [illegible] finished fourth in 51.25.

[illegible] John Marshall ran away with a 2-second victory in his specialty, the half-mile, with a time of 1:52.72. Freshman John Keyworth took third in 1:55.55.

In the 1000-yard run, senior Mike England was edged out for second place by Ed Koech of Richmond, 2:11.01 to 2:11.19. Freshman J.J. Clark was fourth in 2:17.40.

Martin Booker was fifth in the 60-yard high hurdles in 7.42. Pete Carroll was fourth in the mile in 4:11.53. In the 2-mile run, Anthony O'Reilly was sixth in 9:02.1 and Brian O'Keefe was seventh in 9:02.9.

The Wildcats performed dynamically in the relays, blowing out their opponents by huge margins. The mile relay team of Adams (50.4), Booker (49.6), Morris (49.4) and Young (48.9) ran to an easy victory.

In the two-mile relay, the Cats were once again victorious. The team of Carroll (1:59.6), Keyworth (1:54.7), England (1:51.5), and Marshall (1:52.9) put their talents together to run 7:37.66 and leave the second place team of Richmond behind in the dust.

Coach Dr. Charles Jenkins stated, "I am especially happy with the team's performance." He added concerning the 10 lap-to-the-mile track, "It is a good one but a tough one to run on."

Sports Notes

By JOE MARUSAK

One of the finest indoor track meets in the world gets underway today and Villanova is there and ready.

"The meet falls a little earlier this season then it has in the past," said Wildcat Head Coach Dr. Charles Jenkins in reference to the Millrose Games, which are being held in Madison Square Garden this weekend.

"Nonetheless, we're hoping to do well, and I'm looking forward to some very fine performances," Jenkins commented.

A big performance is expected from the two-mile relay team, which took first place at Chapel Hill last weekend. But that hinges on the participation of Marcus O'Sullivan, at last notice an alternate in the Wanamaker Mile.

"I wouldn't want to ask him (O'Sullivan) to double this early," Jenkins commented. "I feel it's much too early."

Is the Big East the best basketball conference in the country?

The best teams in the league — Villanova, St. John's, Georgetown, Syracuse — are all top 20 material. And Boston College has gotten off to a fast start.

But from there the quality drops. The Connecticut Huskies are rebuilding after the loss of Corny Thompson, Mike McKay and Chuck Aleksinas. P.C. and Seton Hall need a couple of franchise players. And Pitt is new to all of this.

If any of those second division clubs improve in the next couple of years, then yes, the Big East could become the best.

Concentrating on this year, the league title is up for grabs. But whoever wins will not come out of the battle unscathed.

"I still kind of think four losses is going to win our league," Wildcat Head Coach Rollie Massimino remarked last week.

Team that will pull biggest upset: Providence. They do it every year.

Speaking of the Big East: Each year the conference awards a Commissioner's Trophy to the team showing the best performance in all league sports combined.

In the men's standings, VU, through the fall sports is fourth. Nova's best showing was in cross country, while the worst was in soccer. St. John's leads.

Likewise, the women are fourth. Cross country was solid and tennis weak in the standings. Georgetown is on top.

Congrats Dept.: To John Waraksa. The halfback on Howard Graff's soccer team was named to the Division I All-Region Soccer Second Team.

Swimmers Rip Penn

By MICHAEL BETZ

The Villanova men's swimming team, under the leadership of Coach Ed Geisz, improved their record to 6-4 with a 63-50 win over the University of Pennsylvania last Saturday. Wildcat swimmers won 7 of 13 events, icluding four of the first six.

In the 400 meter medley relay, the Water Cat squad of All-American Pete Maloney, Jose Alverez, co-captain Bruce Baltera and Jack Hallahan defeated the Penn four by nearly six-and-a-half seconds. Maloney also took the 200 meter backstroke. Villanova's other All-American, John Gargola, captured the 200 meter freestyle along with a second place finish in the 400 meter freestyle relay medley and a third place in the 200 meter fly stroke. Matt McKean also performed well, winning the 200 meter individual medley and teaming up with Gargola to form half of the 400 meter free-style relay second place finishers. Other racing standouts included sophomores Dan Nies with two second place finishes and one third place, and Bill Slankowski, also with two second places.

The dynamite diving duo of Steve Leonard and Carl Sparo finished one-two, respectively, in each of the diving events.

The win against Penn was an important one for the squad coming off successive losses to La Salle and Big East rival Syracuse. The Cats, 6-4 overall and 2-1 in the Big East Conference, have already won at Georgetown and Penn State, while two of their losses have been at the webbed hands of powerhouse Yale and Syracuse teams.

Women Tracksters Sparkle

By BEVERLY REILLY

The women's track team sunk three ships at the U.S. Naval Academy last Friday.

At the quadrangular indoor track meet, the Wildcats beat Navy 83½-30½, Towson State 84-30, and Catholic University 94-11.

Exhibiting tremendous team strength and versatility, the women tracksters captured ten first place finishes out of 14 events.

Figuring the clock and the measuring tape to be their strongest competitor, the Wildcats pushed themselves to six new Field House records.

On the track and in the field, junior Patty Bradley captured four first-place victories. Bradley took first place honors in the 60 yard hurdles, setting a new Field House record at 8.3. Freshman Judy Palmer followed in third place. Bradley also ran a leg on the 4x220 meter and 4x400 meter winning relays. The 4x220 meter relay (Sharon Margaretha, Joanne Kehs, Bradley, and Veronica McIntosh) captured first with a time of 1:45.8. Anchoring the 4x400 meter relay was Bradley, who along with Margaretha, Kehs and McIntosh, set the new Field House record at 3:57.9. Moving to the field, Bradley won the long jump as teammate Anne Silknitter took third.

Bradley, the team's only quadruple winner, commented on her performances.

"I was happy with my hurdle victory the most because I felt strong and my steps finally hit right for each hurdle."

Also in the field, senior captain Peggy Stewart took first place honors in the high jump, setting a field house record of 5'8¼".

Other Field House records were broken by freshman Vickie Brown and sophomore MaryEllen McGowan. Brown captured first place in the 800 meter, setting the Field House mark at 2:15.1. In the 3000 meter run, both McGowan and senior Beverly Reilly broke the Field House record. McGowan captured first setting the new record at 9:46.8 and Reilly took second in 10:00.5.

Brown and McGowan teamed up with freshman Beth Lyncs and Nancy Fleming to win the 4x880 relay. They set a new Field House record of 9:16.8.

The Wildcats also dominated the 400 meter run. Margaretha took first with a time of 58.9. Kehs and McIntosh were close behind in second (59.1) and third (60.2) places respectively.

Renowned road runner Jan Yerkes proved her talent on the track. Yerkes won the 5000 meter run in 17:29. Freshman Janice Rau took second in 18:27.1.

Also in the 1500 meter run, Jane Ashton and EvaMarie Berardi took second and third places.

The results depict the intensity of the Wildcat squad. The women's coach, Bob Shoudt commented, "There were some fine performances at this meet. I can see improvement through the times. I think we are ready for some tougher competition."

And tougher competition is right around the corner in the Milrose Games this Friday at Madison Square Garden.

Icecats Hanging Tough in MACHC

By TOM KOLON

The Villanova Icecats continued the second half of their season by splitting their first games, 5-2 victory over the Wissahickon men's team on Tuesday night and a 7-6 overtime setback at the hands of the St. John's Redmen on Sunday. Although on paper the facts may not appear too prodigious, the underlying story is nothing but encouraging for the young Cats.

After a week of renewed practice, Villanova exploded against Wissahickon with goals by Paul Critchley, Mike Brown, and Doug Simo (the first of his Villanova career) and jumped to a 3-0 lead. In the second period, Wissahickon dumped in their first but Jamie Huston answered back only to have the opponents close the gap to 4-2 by the end of the period. Bill Davis finished the scoring in the third period and Nova returned home with a 5-2 victory. Juniors Frank Segreto, Paul Lafond, and Jeff Beck each tallied 2 assists.

Fred Christie turned in a stellar performance with 24 saves to keep his 90 percent save ratio intact and his goals — against average to under two. Coach Skip Probst was quite pleased with the performance and commented that the future looked promising since the team had lost nine of their 29 players for the season to academics and injuries.

On Sunday afternoon St. John's visited the Skatium and as in the previous 4-3 OT Redmen conquest, a raging battle ensued. St. John's broke out to a 1-0 lead but assistant captain Beck answered with a breakaway as the last seconds of the first period ticked off. The rest of the game see-sawed back and forth as Nova would take the lead only to have the Redmen fight back and tie.

In the second period, Jim Ragold (Brown, Canuso) scored and Mike Bufano netted a pair with help from Segreto and Tim Curran as the game was notched at 4 apiece. The final period witnessed Simo (Canuso, Ragold) and Segreto (Bufano, Curran) each beat the opposing goalie, yet St. John's sent the match into OT with less than 2 minutes remaining. The hyped-up Redmen then scored again in 3 minutes to take a 7-6 win back to New York.

Fred Christie had another solid game in the nets with 26 saves and V.U. outshot their opponents 37-33.

"The loss is nothing to be ashamed of," explained captain Segreto. Commenting on their "fantastic" performance, he claimed that "If everyone plays that way, we shouldn't lose another game the rest of the season. The team as a whole exhibited a lot of character in their tough play."

The Icecats, now 8-7-2, face University of Pennsylvania in a MACHC matchup on Sunday at the Havertown Skatium.

College Basketball Review

by Al McGuire

Editor's Note: Al McGuire is a former college basketball coach and a nationally known television commentator. His column will appear here from time to time.

Understanding the Referee

Being a college basketball official is an impossible job. No matter what he does, he can't please anybody. I've always said, only God could ref . . . and he'd prefer the home court.

There is no way these guys do it for the money. The Big Ten, for example, pays $300 per game, plus mileage, with a $75 per diem, and a percentage if they stay over. But most refs have to have another job, because the NCAA says they can only work three games a week. It's done for their love of sports — so they can remain a part of the bucket game, stay close to the well.

I truly believe, there's no such thing as a dishonest official. He's like a weather man. He doesn't decide where the snow falls, he just points out where it does. But I do think sometimes the crowd can work on the subconscious of the official. He might make some calls trying to appease the howling mob, that sort of thing. But it's subconsciously.

If a coach is going to be successful, there are certain things he must recognize about officials, like fast and slow whistles. The first thing a coach must find out in a game, are the refs blowing a fast or slow whistle?

A fast whistle is a high school whistle that normally doesn't allow any contact. Normally you can get this early in the game. We call these type fouls "tickle fouls," and right away, as a coach, you must immediately call off all pressure, full or half-court.

On the other hand, if it's a slow whistle, a pro whistle, you play man-to-man, apply the pressure. But if it's a fast whistle, you go to the zones.

Normally, the ref that works in front of the bench, which we call "static row," is the more mature official, the leader of the group. He's the one you don't yell at. You usually jump on the guy who's farthest away, because when you jump an official, always remember, it's not for the call he just made, but for the next one. You're planting seeds you hope will germinate in his subconscious.

An example: If you play against the big man, a Keith Lee, you say to the ref, "Hey, that guy is camping in the lane! Four, five, six seconds!" Or if you're against a great quarterback, you say, "Watch that Foster! He charges on his drives!"

These are all just tricks of the trade. But now, all of a sudden, you've planted the seed. The ref is overconscious of a certain thing, and every so often from the bench you remind 'em. It's something you learn over the years, and adds up to experience.

All officials have idiosyncrasies and the smart coach plays to them. Some know the rule book frontwards and backwards, so maybe before the game you ask him about some crazy rule, stroking the official, like "What if you take a shot with two seconds to go, and the lights go out?" That sort of thing. To butter him up.

Some coaches keep a book on officials. Some favor charging, some favor blocking, some have quick or slow whistles. Some allow you to play like it's football, others think the game is crumpets and tea. Some are wilters. That is, if you yell at 'em, they fade out of the game. Others are rednecks, you yell at 'em and they come back at you. Some are politicians, thinking of next year's assignments, because in some conferences where officials are rated, they drop off the back 25% and add new officials the following year.

A mortal sin in basketball is a split crew, which means one ref is from one team's conference and the other is from the other team's conference. This, in my opinion, is wrong for two reasons: It's difficult for the officials and it's not morally right for the game. The officials have never worked together before, so you're going to get inconsistencies. And the visiting coach feels the one guy is there to protect him, the other guy to hurt him, that sort of thing.

In my opinion, in an intersectional game the refs should come from the conference or area of the visiting team. All contracts are two-year contracts, so the next year it's done in reverse.

For the NCAA tournament, each conference assigns official crews. During those early games, the NCAA has people observing the crews, grading them, and allowing the best ones to keep going along as the tournament progresses. So there's pressure on them, too. If the crews produce, they go on. It's that simple.

Cats Fall From 1st in Big East

Redmen Comeback Drops Nova

By JOE BAGLEY

With 1:14 left in the game and St. John's Alumni Hall in a deafening roar for "Defense," Harold Pressley squeezed off a 12-foot jumper from the corner that hit the rim, bounced sidways against the glass and then gently dropped in.

The shot muzzled the crowd, inspired the Wildcat bench to its feet and brought Villanova to within four points of a big Big East win.

Coach Rollie Massimino then called time to gather his troops, sighing and screaming like he is prone to do. He had come into Monday night's game with an enormous amount of respect for St. John's, whom he revered even more as he tried to outmaneuver their dogged defense.

St. John's came in at 16-1 and started the same five players (David Russell, Billy Goodwin, Jeff Allen, Bob Kelly and Chris Mullin) that it had started since November 1981, forty-seven consecutive games.

"The first four minutes of the game were great," Massimino said later. "We dug in, they dug in. I knew that it was going to be a great game."

LOOIE: St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca stalks the sidelines on the way to another Redmen victory.

After four minutes of play, helped by six Pinone points and jump shots from Eddie Pinckney, Frank Dobbs and Stew Granger, the Wildcats were up by nine and the small contingent of Villanova Basketball Club fans tucked away in the stands cheered wildly.

The Redmen chased the Cats for eight minutes before David Russell tied it 24-24 by dropping the ball in amid a crowd of bodies. St. John's threatened for a few minutes, but Granger had things well in hand, stealing the ball from guard Kevin Williams and driving for the lay-up. Later he iced another before the half ended, 37-35, with Villanova on top.

After the previously mentioned Pressley jumper, Massimino looked at the 1:14 remaining in the game and substituted Mike Mulquin — who had only one foul — to force the Redmen to the line or to commit a turnover.

The Cats took up their positions for the inbounds pass. Mulquin fouled seven foot Bill Wennington who sank both free throws. Villanova refused to give an inch though, and Dobbs sank a jumper identical to Pressley's, bringing it back within four. Time Out.

The first half was "perfect for us," in Massimino's words, because Chris Mullin, Saint John's second highest scorer, had been successfully taken out of the game. "We tried seven or eight defenses before we found the one we wanted and stuck with it."

While Mullin was held to a single field goal in each half (he averages 17.5 a game), he broke free of the hold Nova had on him earlier and began playing smoother as the game rolled on.

Time In. Once more the Wildcat warriors, down by four again, took their stances for the inbounds pass. They would be forced to foul whoever got the ball and everything — the game, the Big East standings, the national rankings — depended on St. John's foul shooting.

The ball was thrown in, Pressley fouled Williams and suddenly Villanova was down by six with :43 on the clock. They could still pull it out. But a few seconds later Dobbs fouled Mullin, who sank both from the line. From then on it was out of the Cats' reach.

Actually, it was close to flawless foul shooting on St. John's part that took the game away. They made 13 of 15 clutch free throws in the last two minutes, shooting 90 percent from the line for the game, with Mullin 10 for 10 and Williams 8 for 8. Villanova had an 83 percent free throw mark but had nearly half the opportunities from the line (19 to Saint John's 36).

Massimino was cool and collected after the game.

"It was a great game because Louie (Carnesecca) and I are friendly and the players all know each other. It's a friendly rivalry."

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Beth Metzger

This week's Bud Athlete is a consistently outstanding swimmer on the Villanova women's swim team. Not only did she set four Villanova records last year but she recently broke five records in three out of four events at a single meet. Her name is Beth Metzger, a junior from West Palm Beach, Fla.

It was at the meet against Navy on Jan. 15 that Beth set three Navy pool records and two Villanova team records. According to Assistant Coach Nick Edge, Beth broke Navy pool records and Villanova team records in both the 50 yard backstroke and the 200 yard butterfly events with times of 31.31 and 1:21.70, respectively. She also proceeded to set another Navy pool record with a time of 29.94 seconds in the 50 yard butterfly. Thus, Beth continues to hold Villanova records for the women's swim team in the 50 and 100 yard backstroke events and in the 100 and 200 yard butterfly events.

A swimmer for 12 years, Beth qualified for the 1980 Olympic Trials, placed as a national champion in the Division II Nationals last year and is an 11 time All-American. Her aspirations this year are to make the Division I Nationals. "This season has been a lot better than last year," commented Metzger. "For pre-season, my times are a lot faster and we've been working a lot harder."

Though this season is the first for the women's team to be in Division I, Head Coach Chris McKee has high hopes for Metzger. "She's an exceptional and very versatile swimmer with a super attitude," said McKee. "She's won a lot of clutch races and is working extremely hard to get to the Division I Nationals."

Women Cagers Split Two

By BOB HELLER

Last weekend, the Villanova women's basketball team was on the road at the campus of the University of Connecticut to take on the Lady Huskies in a Big East matchup.

Both teams were fairly equal shooting from the floor in the first half, with Connecticut having a slight edge. The big difference came on the foul line as the Lady Huskies hit almost 89 percent to the Wildcats 63 percent. Despite both of these advantages, the score was close at 36-32 Connecticut lead at halftime.

The Cats were ready in the second half and completely dominated the Lady Huskies, outscoring them 50-32, giving the Cats a 82-68 Big East victory, their first in Big East competition.

Villanova had five players in double figures led by Sandy Williams' 14 points from the bench. Kathie Beisel and Andrea Burton had 13 points apiece while Nancy Bernhardt and Rosemarie Burke had 12 and 10 points respectively, balancing out a team oriented attack. Connecticut's Cathy Bochain led all scorers with 22 points.

Andrea Burton was the top playmaker for the Cats recording 7 assists and Nancy Bernhardt was the Cats leading rebounder with 12 boards. It was the effort by everyone on the Wildcat team, not just the play of a few individuals that helped make this victory possible.

In more recent hoop action, the Cats took on the Lady Owls of Temple University at McGonigle Hall on Temple's campus in a city series matchup on Tuesday.

Temple came out playing aggressively in the first four minutes, putting six points on the board before Nova's Rosemarie Burke got the Cats on the scoreboard with a 15-foot shot from the corner with 16:20 left in the half the make the score 6-2, Temple.

'Nova slowly battled back and took a 14-13 lead on a Kathy Razler free throw. Noreen Kemether sank two free throws shortly thereafter, giving the Cats a 3 point lead, 16-13 with 6:53 left in the first half. The Lady Owls regained the lead at 5:40 with a lay-up by Mimi Carroll to make the score 17-16. Temple never relinquished their lead and led at halftime 23-22.

Temple scored two quick buckets to open the second half giving them a 27-22 lead. After a Nova timeout, Beisel and Bernhardt each hit a shot to bring Nova within one point, 27-26. Temple again began to increase its lead, taking their biggest lead of the game, a ten point bulge, 52-42 with 2:56 left in the game. Villanova then began its attempt to make a comeback and win the game. Bit by they reduced the Lady Owls lead, but they came up four points short as Temple held off the Cats rally to win 62-58. The loss dropped Villanova's record to 9-9, and 1-2 in City Series competition.

The Cats defense did an excellent job controlling Temple's All-American Marilyn Stevens, holding her to just six points, all in the second half.

Villanova's Kathie Beisel led all scorers with 20 points on ten field goals. Nancy Bernhardt added 11 points for the Cats. Dawn Hoover led the Lady Owls with 15 points.

The Cats will on the road this weekend when the travel to New Brunswick to take on the nationally ranked Lady Knights of Rutgers on Saturday afternoon.

Housing Lottery Computerized

By SUZANNE REYNOLDS

Students will be randomly assigned numbers by a computerized system in the Housing Lottery this semester. "This system improves the integrity, since students cannot switch numbers, and it eliminates the possibility of the same number being distributed twice, or that the box containing the number is not mixed properly," according to Chris Janosik, director of residence life.

Chris Janosik, director of residence life.

• The Housing Lottery will consist of three phases. In Phase I, students will receive their assigned lottery number through the mail. Previously, students drew their lottery number from a box.

During this phase, students may reserve or tentatively reserve their rooms. Phase I will occur before Spring Break.

The lottery cutoff numbers will be posted prior to Spring Break. Those eligible for on-campus housing will enter Phase II.

In Phase II, students may change current residence to another room or dormitory. Students will be assembled according to the exact order of their lottery number and by class status. Janosik specified that students must be on time to obtain their numerical position.

Previously, Phase II required students to assemble on days designated for each class. "With this revision," Janosik said, "students will benefit in terms of not having to stand in lines or coming at certain hourly segments."

An additional phase will enable students to improve their newly acquired room assignment. Students may switch rooms obtained in Phase II for another available room. Phase III will occur in March or April.

Students not eligible for on-campus housing may request to be placed on a waiting list. The waiting list will give students an opportunity to later obtain available housing. Students will be positioned on the list in order of the lottery number drawn.

In addition to the changes in the lottery procedure, all incoming freshman for the 1983-1984 school year will be guaranteed on-campus housing. "However, for the school year 1984-1985, two consecutive years of on-campus housing will not be guaranteed," according to Janosik. Janosik noted that the availability of housing also depends upon the completion of a new dormitory. Construction of this residence will begin in the spring.

According to Janosik, "The quota for incoming freshman will be 200 more than the present year. Juniors and seniors should anticipate the cutoff number to be lower, thus lower their possibility in the lottery."

The new Housing Lottery System was planned by a committee consisting of RSA President, Ted Wilm, Head Resident Assistant, Dan Berninger, two resident assistants and Janosik. The committee has been meeting for one year to revise the present lottery system.

"This computerized system will be less costly since it requires less time and manpower and it will be easier for the students," said Janosik. "It is conceivable to computerize the whole system," Janosik added, "but whether or not this is desirable is left to the students."

Students will receive a brochure next week explaining the revised housing lottery system.

Annual Alumni Fund Drive Expects Sharp Increase

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Alumni Annual Fund Phonothon, being held on Villanova's campus for the first time, is expecting to collect $75,000. The phonothon began Jan. 23 and will run through March 22, every Monday through Thursday evening.

During the 30 nights of the phonothon, an average of 2500 pledges are called per night. "At this rate, we are expecting about $75,000 in pledges," said Edward Rideout, director of the Alumni Annual Fund.

In the past, 80 percent of the alumni paid off their pledge, "except last year the honest pledges dropped considerably, down to 50 percent," said Rideout.

"Eighty percent is fantastic for any school, but 1982 was adversely affected because of the football decision as well as the economy," Rideout added. "I do not know what that leaves me with for this year."

Rideout said, "The increase in the number of college educated people being laid off, including Villanova alumni, and the decrease in the number of bonuses being pledged are just two of the factors contributing to the drop in alumni pledges."

In the past years, the calls were made in the major metropolitan areas where there is a large alumni population.

Due to the lack in help from the alumni in making the calls and the cost increase of traveling, the phonothon system was changed.

"Even though we were always able to have free phone service, the cost of the phone calls and labor is considerably less than the total cost of traveling. The expense of the hotel rooms and the food add up quickly," said Rideout.

"We are using the 20 phones at the Villanova Law School so there is a concentration of about 75,000 calls from one place," said Rideout. "However," he continued, "the phone system at the law school is very economical.

"Due to the new phonothon approach, we will talk to more alumni, get more who have never given before, and increase the number of honest pledges," said Rideout.

The outlook is optimistic, according to Rideout: "We have a better quality of trained students on

Exam Cheating Discovered

By LINDA BOND

"Irregularities" in the administration of a physics exam last semester prompted student retesting in physics 1000-02 this week, according to Dr. Alain J. Phares, chairman of the physics department.

Following the exam last semester, several students reported "obvious cheating" during the testing period to the Rev. John P. O'Malley, dean of arts and sciences.

When questioned about University action in the matter, O'Malley responded, "When any office receives a report like that you have to follow it up. You have to verify it and do something about it."

O'Malley said the cheating was verified by the testimony of students.

Students enrolled in the core curriculum physics class had their course grade suspended on semester academic reports and an unexplained blank space appeared in its place. When the students returned to school in January, they received a letter of explanation from Dr. James J. Markam, associate dean for sciences, directing them to attend a makeup session of the final exam.

O'Malley said there wasn't enough time over Christmas break to notify students of the reason for the suspended mark. He said academic reports are sent to students quickly and that the University cannot interrupt the process to incorporate other kinds of information.

"The problem is of two types," he continued, "to express a very real concern about the integrity of the grading process and to be terribly interested in the reputation of the institution."

O'Malley said, "Our main concern is for the students who did study and whose class standing is hurt by those who received unfair and inappropriate grades.

"I suspect there were not enough proctors. There couldn't have been adequate surveillance," said O'Malley.

A two-hour review session held on the Saturday prior to the retest was conducted by department chairman Phares, not the original instructor.

Students were told it would be a cumulative exam of the semester's work. Those not in attendance at the retest would receive an incomplete grade for the course changing to a failure in four weeks if the second exam was not taken.

Commenting on the situation, Phares said, "The students who reported the irregularities were very much upset and they had the right to be upset. Something had to be done.

"The incident," said Phares, "is not fair for anybody. It is not fair to Villanova University which represents such high ethical standards. It is not fair to the students or the administration who now must give up their time to the situation.

When asked if cheating has been a problem in the past, Phares answered, "I think this is a good opportunity for the administration to speak up for their standards. You cannot keep crime out of the system. However, I do think Villanova should represent another set of values and that we should take the lead in this matter. We will not allow it to occur again," said Phares.

O'Malley said that individual instances of cheating had been reported in the past on the part of individual faculty members but never on a large scale as with the physics class.

Last week approximately 50 class members appointed a committee to go to the Dean to ask about the new method for determining a final grade in the course as well as to ask about the upcoming test. The procedure for the determination of a final grade was not decided then and is still not decided.

Said one physics student after the test, "I know I did not do well on the retest because it was cumulative and the hardest test we had all year. The original exam was not cumulative. I hope I didn't fail the final."

Florida/Bahamas

There will be a mandatory Florida/Bahamas meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 8 at 12:30 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. Just 22 days left till fun in the sun . . .

Bahamas

Due to cancellations there are now three open spaces for the Nassau, Bahamas trip. The first people to bring $399 to the Union Office will be guaranteed space, so get your payments in and get prepared for the sun.

Quebec Ski Trip

Final payment: Feb. 9! Spend spring break in Quebec. A ski/culture trip will be held from Feb. 26 to March 2. The cost is only $199 and includes lodging at the contemporary Loews Le Concorde.

For more information on this winter-time vacation package program, contact Dr. Rene Mongeau in 212 St. Thomas (645-4704). $75 deposit is due now!

Study Abroad Workshop

On Feb. 7 at 4 p.m. in 201 St. Thomas, there will be a workshop for anyone interested in studying abroad.

Association of Commuting Students

This Thursday, Feb. 10 at 12:45 p.m. in the C.C. Cinema there will be a general meeting of the Association of Commuting Students.

WKVU

WKVU Radio will be holding an informational meeting for new members on Feb. 9 at 4:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Orientation Program

The Dean of Students Office is pleased to announce the selection of Paula Aigner to the position of administrative coordinator of the 1983 New Student Orientation Program and the selection of the Steering Committee members: Jeanne Bohmert, Sharon Cecchi, Anne Clavin, Maggie Coyle, Alicia Dames, Theresa Donaghue, Terri Englert, Mike Gormley, Annie Hannigan, Barbara Mayer, Bill Parker and Steve Wyrsch.

The discoveries continue . . .

Hughes Story.

In 1947 a man flew the Flying Boat, "Hercules" — the largest airplane in the world.

The man was Howard Robard Hughes.

His ingenious ideas and explorations brought new discoveries in aerodynamics, communications, avionics, electronics.

And the early years of Hughes Aircraft Company.

Today, Hughes no longer builds airplanes but the discoveries and exploration of ideas continue.

The company's long history of technological firsts, including the first working laser, first 3-D radar, and first synchronous-orbit spacecraft, position Hughes as a world leader in today's electronics industry. Company-wide opportunities:

- Electrical, Mechanical, Manufacturing or Industrial Engineering
- Materials
- Computer Science
- Physics
- Industrial/Electronic Technology

Requirements may vary. Check with your placement office for more details. Find out how you can be part of the continuing Hughes Story in twelve Southern California locations and Tucson, Arizona.

New Locks Deter Key Duplicates

By JOHN JACKSON

In response to reports of many unauthorized persons having master keys to St. Mary's dormitory, maintenance has changed the locks on all of the residents doors and issued new keys. Unlike the old keys, the new keys have the inscription warning that duplicating the key is unlawful.

St. Mary's Hall. Francisco Martinez Photo

According to Richard A. Neville, vice president for student life, "the locks were changed because there was an apparent problem. There were complaints, and the article in the Villanovan (Sept. 24, 1982) helped. It was fairly well established that there were an excessive number of keys out. Things were being stolen, and that was the bottom line."

The Head Resident of St. Mary's, John Morrissey, said "There have not been any problems that I have heard of since the keys have been changed. Nothing has been reported to me. The residents are very pleased to get the locks changed," continued Morrissey. "The process of changing the locks went off without a hitch."

Neville explained that it is very difficult to keep control on such a large number of master keys. "If one key gets out, we could be facing the same problem again. We hope that everyone will be responsible," said Neville.

Morrissey explained that the R.A.'s have always had a rule that they could not, under any circumstances, lend their master key to anybody.

The cost to change all of the residents locks in St. Mary's was $4,108.70. Neville explained that although it was several thousand dollars to change the locks, there was no problem in getting the project approved by Father Driscoll. "We had to get some supplementary money, and Father Driscoll was very supportive," said Neville.

"We feel that we are responsible for the students needs," continued Neville, "and the new locks should help the security in St. Mary's dorm." According to St. Mary's resident Mike Serra, the dorm is now safer. "There have been no thefts I have heard of. The keys say, 'do not duplicate' on it, but I don't know if the stores will honor that," said Serra. Serra also acknowledged the fact that there were many master keys circulating and that new locks seem to have solved the problem.

Chris Trainee, another St. Mary's resident, also feels that the new keys have at least temporarily solved the problem. "Now R.A.'s are not allowed to give their keys to anyone to open their door. They are being much stricter," said Trainee. "The dorm seems more secure for now, until somebody gets a key."

At the time of the thefts, the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, stated that the locks would be changed if it was discovered that there were master keys circulating.

At least one student has bought a chain lock to insure security. The University policy, however, prohibities students from putting extra locks on doors the phones than in the past," said Rideout. The phonothon should be back up to 80 percent in honest pledges."

Alumni Drive Increases

"We are expecting more pledges to actually send in the money they donate over the phone due to the better automated system," said Rideout.

A follow-up letter, stating the amount pledged, is being sent out to every alumnus within two days after being called. "This letter, serving as a reminder to the alumus, helps the percentage of pledges who come through," explained Rideout.

"So far the phonothon is running smoothly," commented Rideout, "But it's sending the follow-up letter out the next day which is harder." There are two coordinators working each night while the calls are being made to collect the pledges names and start on the follow-up letters. This way as much work as possible that can be done each night is being accomplished.

The goal of the Alumni Office is to raise unrestricted money. "We would like the alumni to contribute money to the University for it to use at the discretion of the University," said Rideout.

"It is perfectly acceptable," Rideout added, "for an alumnus to donate money to the college he graduated from, or even to a specific department." In the past, approximately 11 percent of the money donated in the phonothon is considered restricted. "We do accept restricted money, but our set ambition is to raise the unrestricted money for the University," said Rideout.

A phonothon itself has many advantages according to Rideout. "Three outstanding benefits of a phonothon are the amount of money we are able to collect; the access to update addresses, and the ability to generate good will," said Rideout.

"Just by talking to an alumnus, whether he or she gives or not, is generating good will.

"Recently graduated alumni usually give us a home address and within a few years have a new address and phone number. Through the phonothon calls we are able to update the addresses of all of the alumni," said Rideout.

A separate group of alumni are those who do not specify over the phone the amount of money they'll donate. "Only 30 percent of the alumni who say 'I'll send in something to Villanova' actually send in a donation," said Rideout. "They apparently just want to get off the phone.

"Even if we get only 30 percent from that group of alumni," continued Rideout, "when added to the 80 percent received from the 75,000 calls that will equal the $800,000 generated in from the phonothon alone."

During the training, the 50 students hired by the alumni office were taught to handle each call carefuly. The callers are to politely find out why an alumnus answers 'no' when asked for a donation. "This is where the goodwill aspect comes in," said Rideout. "The important thing is, once an alumnus gives, no matter how much, he is hooked for life. That is why we are out to get those who in the past do not have a history of pledging," explained Rideout.

The annual phonothon is one approach the Alumni Office takes to generate money from the alumni, "but it is not the most profitable," said Rideout. "A second approach, personal solicitation generates the most money.

"We research on any potential alumni or parent who may have the ability to donate over $1,000. If he or she can, we go face to face to ask for the donation," said Rideout.

A third approach, and the least effective is direct mail. "A letter is sent annually to the alumni, but the problem here is if they are upset with the school in any way, they will not even bother to read the letter," said Rideout.

The rate of increased donations was cut in half between the 1980-1981 letter and the 1981-1982 letter.

An October letter sent out in 1981-1982, which generated $605,108, was a 20.2 percent increase over the 1980-1981 letter. The 1980-1981 letter, which generated $540,837 was a 40.4 percent increase from the previous year.

An alumnus' donation can be increased if he or she works for a corporation which matches donations to colleges or universities. "There is a long list of corporations who match-up an alumnus' donation to Villanova," said Rideout. "Some corporations match an alumnus' donation up to a 1 to 3 ratio. This can turn a $100 donation into $400."

Besides handling the alumni donations, the Alumni office works with the parents fund through direct mail and personal solicitation. In the 1980-1981 year, the parents fund donated $130,906.

Engineers Receive Teaching Grant

By TIM GALLAGAN

Due to the generosity of RCA Corporation, there are four retired industrial engineers teaching at Villanova. A $25,000 grant was given to the University by RCA for this specific purpose.

"The program," according to Dr. Robert Lynch, dean of the college of engineering, "is much better than the programs of some schools who are using graduate assistants to teach the courses. The students receive the benefit of years of experience that the men have accumulated in working at actual engineering professions.

"Many schools are finding it difficult to find staff to teach engineering and therefore turn to the graduate assistants," said Lynch. "This program makes it more of an apprenticeship."

The engineering department placed an ad in the Philadelphia Inquirer, and The Main Line Times, as well as ten to twelve other newspapers in Bucks, Montgomery, Delaware counties, and in South Jersey. Lynch said 70 responses were received. From those 70 applications, Dr. K.T. Yen, Leo Landrey, Paul Schlegel, and Irving Scott were selected.

Scott, the only former RCA employee currently here on the grant, had some prior teaching experience as a math teacher at Temple in 1951. "I hope to give Villanova students the benefit of my years of experience in the engineering world," said Scott.

"Many times, the students have no idea what it is like in industry, and perhaps an outsider can show them how to better prepare. They can make a better decision as to their engineering aptitude and field of specialty," continued Scott.

"I speak to my classes on what to expect in salary structure, income growth, and layoffs, and I have given some summer job applications," Scott concluded.

As a recent retiree of the Crane Company, Schlegel came to Villanova after seeing one of the ads. Schlegel taught electricity at Dresser Company, and held the title of RND Mechanical Engineer at Crane Company before he retired in August of 1982.

"The only school I considered was Villanova, and I hope to contribute to student development. I think that the use of people from industry is commendable," said Schlegel.

"I hope to impress fundamentals on my students, and show them how theory applies to practice. I have always held that it is important in any schooling experience to get a solid foundation in fundamental principles. With well-rounded fundamentals," added Schlegel, "you can more easily cope with new situations."

Landrey, a Wayne resident, formerly employed by Burroughs Corporation, works with students throughout the college giving aid in communications skills in writing and public speaking.

Dr. Yen, also a Wayne resident, retired from the Naval Air Development Center in Warminster in October, 1981. At Villanova, Yen works in the mechanical engineering department in the numerical methods laboratory assisting students with problems.

Basketball Rally Held

By TIM HANLON

The first pep rally in support of Villanova's basketball team was held on Jan. 31, the day of Villanova's game with the nationally ranked Georgetown team. According to Paul Romanelli, vice president of the Basketball Club, "The basketball players spoke about the fantastic support they were given."

The actual format for the rally was not determined beforehand. "The players themselves were not aware of the rally until just before it," said Romanelli. The rally, although under a tight schedule because of the night's game, lasted 45 minutes.

The rally was led by the Villanova cheerleaders, while Villanova's Pep Band performed. Speeches by head basketball coach Rollie Massimino and several players were also part of the program, as a large crowd of students participated in the cheers.

The main concern about holding a pep rally was the attendance they would receive. Of the 825 Basketball Club members, 75 percent attended. The total attendance is figured at about 1000.

Mary Ann Steenrod, coordinator of women's athletics, mentioned the fact that the pep rally should have been totally cleared by the Athletic Department because of previous practice scheduling in the field house. "I am in support of the pep rally," said Steenrod, "but it was not cleared through the proper channels."

At least one more Pep Rally will be held before the end of the season

Sex Questions Invade Privacy

Three statements on a psychological questionnaire designed to measure a person's ability to deal with stress have raised a few eyebrows on campus and have resulted in a student's charge that the questionnaire is immoral, an invasion of privacy and that it should be banned from the psychology department's curriculum.

The AECOM Coping Scale, a survey requiring students to respond to given statements on a never-to-often scale, includes three direct statements on masturbation and sexual habits. According to the protesting student, when filling out this class assignment, name, age and sex are required information and the assignment is to be collected by the professor. However, Psychology Department Chairman Daniel Ziegler says that it's just a "misunderstanding," that the psychology professor administering this assignment didn't make it clear that the students were to fill it out solely for their own benefit and that it did not have to be handed in for a grade. Ziegler admits that he doesn't know what the AECOM Coping Scale is, but in his estimation the whole incident has been blown out of proportion. Posters appeared on campus Monday asking students to keep Villanova a "good" school and to request that the scale be withdrawn as a requirement for students.

The major objections raised by these questions are two: why are these questions being asked at a Catholic university and why is the student's name, age and sex required? Is it an invasion of privacy?

Those involved all agree that at a Catholic university some things should never see the light of day. Several administrators agree with the student's protest that such statements should not be included on any assignment, regardless of what department is giving it. The main argument lies with whether or not the student must identify himself on the coping scale, if the student is required to hand it in and, if so, to what use is it put. If the student is required to answer questions about these statements for his own benefit, there is some educational benefit . . . maybe. But if this information is to be collected and held by the professor, for whatever reason, the AECOM Coping Scale should be discontinued.

Basketball Spirit Unifies University

Following Villanova's gut-wrenching, come-from-behind 68-67 victory over Georgetown at the Palestra on Monday, a most spontaneous and staggering thing happened: throngs of Villanova fans cleared from the stands and rushed en masse on to the Palestra floor. Soon, the court was engulfed in blue-clad students and, in the words of a sportscaster, "Pandemonium had broken loose at the Palestra."

This outpouring of emotion was indeed a refreshing sight to see, for too often a certain apathy lingers over Villanova events. Basketball games, however, are quite different from other events on campus; they are something that students and faculty alike get truly excited about. They have a unifying effect.

To their credit, the thousands of fans supporting the team on Monday were well-behaved. Too many times, in intense rivalries like Villanova-Georgetown, fans lose control of their emotions and ugly incidents occur. For the most part though, with the exception of a few unnecessary signs and actions, the Villanova students' behavior as fans was exemplary. They proved that fans need not be abusive to be effective.

The events of the day leading up to the game were also impressive, especially the pep rally sponsored by the Basketball Club. Again, it is difficult to remember students ever being so enthusiastically united about something offered on campus.

The win over Georgetown merely capped off a day when all members of the Villanova community showed how elated they could be. It was simply a day in which all, but especially the basketball team, could be proud of their accomplishments.

"Immoral" Questionnaire Invades Privacy

To the Editor:

Hi ho! Let's welcome the Privacy Act to Villanova, last seen wearing a raincoat, white socks and a smirk.

Yes, sir. We all know what a class assignment means . . . incomplete and your grade suffers. Translated: answer the question or else.

Check this out . . .

With name, age and sex clearly stated on said assignment (AECOM Coping Scale), a class where the representative student is a 19-year-old female must answer the following: (Never — Often)

"When I'm tense, I masturbate."

"Even though I may not like a certain way of having sex, I am willing to do it anyway."

"When I get upset, I try to find someone to have sex with."

Listen, you too could be an uptight wreck if you feel that these questions are not crucial to the study of Psychology of Personality. At best, it's a way to dazzle the old folks at home with the obvious benefits of higher Catholic learning. "Say, Dad, when you get upset . . ."

At worst, it's a dandy icebreaker when meeting the "meaningful other's" folks for the first time. "Ah, Mrs. Smith, I study Psychology at Villanova and I was wondering . . ."

Well, it's only a matter of student rights. We all know your parents would be overjoyed to shell out a few thousand so that you or your sister or girlfriend could supply this type of information, all in the spirit of learning. Just ask them.

Besides, you have no choice. It's a class assignment, isn't it?

Rollie Says Thanks

To the Editor:

Being the basketball coach here at Villanova University for the last ten years, I have always been extremely proud to go all over the country and express how great our student body exhibits itself. Obviously, Monday night's Georgetown game was one of the greatest games in our school history and probably the most enthusiastic crowd I have ever witnessed at the Palestra.

Unfortunately, the rollouts and the individuals who threw the banana and Coke container marred what could have been a total success for all Villanovans. For those of you who were so great, my staff and players would like to thank you and for those that showed little style, please understand what Villanova University is all about.

Thanks again for all your support and let's all go on and be the best we possibly can.

Reagan Blind in Support of El Salvador Government

Two weeks ago Ronald Reagan certified for the third time that human rights in El Salvador have significantly improved. This certification clears the way for further military aid to El Salvador. But just what is this certification based on and what are the implications?

Simon Bartz, a student at the University of Pennsylvania and member of the Penn Central American Solidarity Group, who has been closely watching developments in Central America, puts the current situation in perspective. "If the Reagan Administration were to announce its intention to supply the Ku Klux Klan with $126 million worth of machine guns, helicopters, riot equipment, grenade launchers, M-16 rifles, army jeeps and other military supplies there would no doubt be an immediate uproar of protest both here and abroad. We can imagine Reagan's reaction, 'Look, the Klan's record on human rights improved substantially last year. After all, it hasn't lynched any blacks or gunned down any demonstrators recently'."

"Fantasy? Impossible? Unbelievable? No. The current administration is proposing to give such military aid to a group of generals who make the Klan, by comparison, look like simpering liberal pacifists."

The Salvadoran Government carries out a policy of systematic torture, brutality and blatant disregard for the human rights of its own citizens. Let's look at the facts: In the past two years, 30 thousand men, women and children have been murdered in El Salvador. The Sunday Telegraph, a conservative London paper, reports, "Right-wing death squads . . . are still terrorizing ordinary Salvadorans in the towns and the countryside. More than 200 civilians were murdered in a single week toward the end of November; seven of them, including a 13-year-old girl, were tortured and beheaded before being dumped near the main square in Zacatecoluca" (December 5, 1982).

A delegation of celebrities, congressmen, academians and activists, who just returned from a week-long trip to El Salvador, had this to report: "While some of us went to El Salvador with serious skepticism about our government's policy toward Central America, we were unprepared for the horror and despair that we found." Referring to Reagan's certification, this same delegation attacked it as "a lie — designed to deceive the Congress and the people of the United States . . ."

It is quite clear now that forces closely associated with the government of El Salvador are responsible for the brutal murders of three American nuns, a social worker and an archbishop, fatally shot while holding mass. These facts are all documented by the Catholic Church. By the way, the people responsible for these murders roam free, never brought to trial!

Roberto D'Aubuisson, who has much influence and is greatly supported by the Salvadoran government, has been labelled as a "pathological killer" by former Ambassador to El Salvador Robert White.

One can go on and on with other accounts by reputable sources of torturing, killing and maiming, some so sickening and grotesque that the mind cannot comprehend it.

Our President will defend his position by saying that there are less people being murdered now — isn't that comforting — less people being brutally beaten, less people being arrested and interrogated in the middle of the night because they disagree with government policy. No government which murders, tortures and unlawfully interrogates even one of its citizens deserves the support of a country which prides itself on the idea of liberty and justice for all.

The Reagan Administration is practically alone in its support of the Salvadoran government. Our administration's refusal to hold peace dialogues and to negotiate with leftist insurgents has caused unnecessary suffering and polarization. "The policy is mindless, categorizing all left-wing movements in Central America as implacable enemies of the United States and legitimate targets for extermination," said White. The fact is that without military and economic assistance from the United States, the Salvadoran Government and its dictatorship over the Salvadoran people could not survive.

There is, however, growing support for the people of El Salvador. As more and more people become educated as to the truth of what is happening in El Salvador, the Reagan Administration will be forced to change its policy. One such group concerned with mobilizing public concern is CISPES, the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador. CISPES is a national organization with 300 chapters in 48 states. It is a grassroots organization which grew out of a generalized concern throughout the United States about the dangers of U.S. military intervention in Central America. On Jan. 24, CISPES sponsored a demonstration outside the State Department in Washington.

The demonstration was organized to protest Reagan's certification of human rights improvements and United States involvement in El Salvador. For four hours that morning, over 100 demonstrators blockaded the entrance to the State Department while hundreds of others picketed across the street. All the blockaders, including two ministers, were arrested. The message is very clear: "Money for jobs, not for war, U.S. out of El Salvador."

Computers

To the Editor:

Thank you for your article on the recent opening of the Tolentine Hall terminal site. The site provides access to the Digital Equipment VAX 11/780 computer via 35 interactive terminals. It is currently open from 8 a.m. to midnight, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays and noon to 5 p.m. on Sundays.

At the present time, University Computing and Information Services (UCIS) provides service to over 4300 authorized terminal users with an average of 2000 users using these services each month. This activity increases appreciably towards the end of each semester.

UCIS attempts to process requests for user IDs when they are received. During the application crunch at the beginning of each semester, this process takes longer. The turnaround time becomes less as we get into the semester and the number of requests decreases.

I hope this clarifies further the information presented in your article.

Respect

To the Editor:

I enjoy reading your Villanovan whenever I get my hands on a copy.

Invariably, your writers will introduce a topic involving an O.S.A. priest by his full title such as "The Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A." and "Father President Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A." In subsequent paragraphs, these priests are referred to as "McCarthy" and "Driscoll."

This doesn't strike me as disrespect, but how much more respectful would be a Father McCarthy or at least a Fr. Driscoll.

Not only respectful but, as they say in the media, "in good taste."

Women's Basketball

To the Editor:

Certainly "moral" victories are not equal to actual victories. Net result is one more loss. Nevertheless, the Villanova women's basketball team played a gutsy, excellent game last Saturday against a very highly touted Rutgers five and deserves the plaudits of all Villanovans.

The final 88-81 score by no means tells the story of the game. The Cats led most of the game, and, in the final minutes, when they did trail, they fought back to within one point of the Lady Knights. Only a very arbitrary call of a referee put the game out of reach in the final seconds.

It was a thrilling, exciting, marvelously played and coached game. Our women's team made every Villanovan in that Rutgers' field house extremely proud of them, even in defeat!

This week the Villanovan asked students: "How widespread do you think cheating is at Villanova? What do you think should be done to prevent it?

"Cheating is extremely widespread but it is unavoidable and inevitable. Villanova is no different than other universities; they just do it with style — sometimes."

Deirdre Flanagan
Senior, English

"People do cheat, but not to the point where it's gotten out of proportion. Nothing can be done to prevent it."

Steve Mullen

Students to Give Tax Help

By JACK McHUGH

Law Professor Marcus Schonefeld is sponsoring the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (Vita) program at Villanova. The program is sponsored by the IRS to enable lower income groups to get the tax help they need. "Historically, the lower income strata are usually entitled to tax returns but do not know how to get them. Although the forms are rather simple, this means many of the tax returns go unclaimed," said Schonefeld.

The program at Villanova involves a collaboration of the accounting department and the law school.

"There will not be any need for a 'site' until the end of spring break," said Schonefeld. Up to that time Schonefeld does not feel there will be enough demand to warrant the service being offered.

Schonefeld stated that there were not enough people thinking about their taxes until after spring break.

Schonefeld will use the time between now and the end of spring break to train anyone who does not know how to do a tax form. "It will take about two to two and a half hours to train the students who have never done it before," according to Schonefeld. Based on when most of the students are free, Schonefeld will set up a class (or two if required) on filling out tax forms.

The program is sponsored by the IRS who supply Schonefeld with his teaching materials. The IRS involvement with the Vita program also consists of getting information from those like Schonefeld who run the program. The IRS asks, according to Lyndel Brown of the IRS's office in Philadelphia, "the number of volunteers, how many were helped and where they were helped." The IRS also supplies each volunteer with a certificate for their help and contribution to the community.

Schonefeld said that he planned to set up Villanova's site at the Connelly Center, in front of the Cinema. The site would be open in the afternoons for a few hours. Schonefeld also thought that it would only be necessary to have it open once a week in March and a few times a week in April.

Although directly involved with the IRS, the Vita program and its members can not be held legally responsible for the tax return. The customer signs the tax return and is held legally reponsible.

Celebration to Kick Off

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

"Black History: Progress Through Education," is the theme of this year's month-long celebration that kicks off Sunday with the Black Cultural Society's third annual awards luncheon.

Shirley M. Dennis, secretary of Pennsylvania Department of Community Affairs will be the keynote speaker of the luncheon which will honor Villanova's Director of Social Action Edward L. Collymore with the Distinguished Alumni Award.

According to Dr. Teresa Nance, director of the Black Cultural Society, the award is presented to an alumnus "who has extended himself both to his undergraduate institution and to the community." The award is long overdue," said Nance.

Dennis, originally from the Philadelphia area, will expound on the month's theme, an area in which she is considered to be well versed.

Currently on display in the Connelly Center Art Gallery is an exhibition titled "Ritual Objects and Constructed Images: An Exhibition of African Retentions" which is cosponsored by the Afro-American Historical and Cultural Musuem.

"This exhibition gives a part of African life and a part of American life as a backdrop," said Nance. "The issue it deals with, most importantly, is that it is not just one culture or the other but the whole of people."

Last night, "The Man," starring James Earl Jones, a movie dealing with the possible experience of the first black president, was shown with a discussion following. "This film proclaims that one should vote for the man or the woman, not on the basis of the color of his skin." explained Nance.

Another film and discussion, "The Learning Tree," directed by award-winning photographer Gordon Parks, will be featured Feb. 10. A quasi-documentary of Parks' life, it details the experience of a black child growing up in America.

"One problem with the events we sponsor is that people presume anything given by the Black Cultural Society is for blacks only," Nance said.

Perhaps the biggest attraction of the month's celebration is "Dialogue '83," and interracial communications workshop cosponsored by the Black Cultural Society and the Resident Housing Association.

"I'm hopeful. We've had an awfully good beginning," said Nance. "The goal of this month is for all of us to learn something about each other

GHOST STORY

Ch. 6: Reporting "Action" News

By CAROLYN MILLER

"Suddenly, you're an intern at WPVI-TV, Channel 6 News. Barbara Walters, move over! . . . not quite, Is working at least 16 hours per week for three college credits and no pay worth it? If you seek a realistic conception of what TV news reporting involves and are considering a career in this field, then yes, a TV newsroom internship is the answer for you.

As a sophomore communications major with an interest in television news, I decided last January that I needed some actual working experience at a TV station before graduation. So, during spring break last year, I visited Channel 6 on City Line Avenue in Philadelphia. Donned in my 100 percent wool business suit and silk blouse, I entered the main lobby expecting to be "welcomed with open arms" to a paying, summer job as a newsroom assistant.

Things did not go as well as I planned. Although I had no appointment, I was still welcomed warmly by Joe Hunter, affirmative actions officer for the station.

However, Hunter informed me that college students worked there as interns, receiving college credits instead of a paycheck. Smart company, I thought, why pay when you can get free labor!

Within a week of my visit to the station, I sent Hunter my resume and a letter requesting to be an intern in the newsroom. Shortly after that, he informed me that I had a job on Tuesdays and Thursdays for the fall semester of my junior year. I got the job! I was finally going to meet anchor and weatherman Jim O'Brien!

For those unfamiliar with this area, Philadelphia is fourth in the country's TV news market. Channel 6, or "Action News," is the highest rated news station in the city. It is known for such personalities as Jim O'Brien, Jim Gardner, Marc Howard and Don Tollefson.

Interning in the newsroom was very interesting, at times frustrating and always hectic. From the beginning, I learned that news reporting is a serious business. Having worn a dress the first day, I was told to dress comfortably because I would "get my hands dirty."

My usual duties involved: answering telephones and recording messages, collating scripts for the news programs, changing the ribbons on the AP & UPI wires and mostly being a "gofer." I ran errands for anyone on the news staff; getting coffee, lunches, newspaper mail and videotapes.

All illusions I had about the glamour of being on TV quickly faded as I worked at Channel 6. Glamour does not exist there, but the viewer's mind. No one is pampered, and all of the "talent" do their own makeup.

An essential fact that I realized was that a TV reporter must be a good journalist. A news anchor arrives at the newsroom hours before show time. The anchor is handed numerous amounts of wire copy from the producer and is told to "write." Thus, the anchor begins to pound away at his or her manual typewriter.

The fun part of interning at Channel 6 was watching all of the live productions filmed in the studios and sitting in the control room during the taping of a show. It was also enjoyable to go out with a reporter and film crew in the "Action News" van to see how they cover a story. Robin Garrison, a news reporter for the station, allowed me to go with her and her crew one Saturday when they reported on a fire in the area.

Robin also came to campus in December to speak to the Communication Arts Society. She gave some good advice to those wishing to become TV news reporters. "There is no easy out," she said.

"An occasion will arrive when the station needs another person to 'fill-in' and that is when you get your break. Being in 'the right place at the right time' often helps," she advised.

Reflecting on my internship, two most memorable moments were receiving phone calls about "breaking stories." One phone call I answered was about Tylenol being laced with cyanide. The other was about the death of Grace Kelly (and no one believed me!).

The benefits of interning at Channel 6 are the opportunity to work with a lot of talented people and the chance to be exposed to a newsroom atmosphere. It is also a good time to make "contacts" for future employment and this is true of any internship.

Profs Make "Grater" Effort

By CATHY GROODY

The educational process from kindergarten to college seems like a lifetime of classrooms and textbooks, papers and pencils. However, this feeling of incarceration is comparatively insignificant to the isolation some Villanova students feel at the Graterford Prison in Montgomery County.

These students are inmates who have been sent to the prison to reform for one crime or another. They are given the opportunity to take Liberal Arts courses taught by Villanova professors.

In 1971, Dr. James McKenna, a professor of sociology, originally began this program as a research opportunity to see how inmates and guards would interact with one another in a classroom environment. Today, although the classes are still available to staff members, only inmates take the courses.

Each subject given at the prison is within the Arts and Science curriculum. Two courses per semester are available to inmates in subjects like religion, philosophy, sociology, English, political science, psychology and western civilization.

"It's an intellectual stimulus," said Dr. Joe Thompson, an assistant political science professor, "It gives them a feeling of status and self-esteem by being able to walk around with books underneath their arm!"

Not everyone at Graterford is allowed to take the courses. Everyone must meet the requirements of University College. "There are no exceptions," stated McKenna, "everyone must submit applications and go through registration just as Villanova students." The only difference being, if they want to withdraw from a course, they can just "disappear" instead of going through a drop and add process.

The courses taught at Graterford are financed through PELL Grants and BEOG Grants. Villanova University pays their professors to teach at the prison. Villanova in turn, is reimbursed by the government. Inmates are also supplied with one text book, one pen and one Villanova notebook.

Although the prisoners are not paying for the courses, they are still making sacrifices to obtain this education. By taking a class, an inmate gives up the opportunity to make money by working at the prison.

"Villanova stresses a value system," said Thompson, "They're geared towards 'personhood' unlike many of the larger universities." By taking courses, Thompson believes, it endows a sense of needed dignity upon these individuals.

Professors who have taught at Graterford found the inmates to be very responsive. June Lytel, an assistant English professor, claims the inmates are "Not laid back at all. They really enjoy discussions, especially personal discussion, even if I don't want to know it!" says Lytel. A professor of English, Lytel has had students who continually interject their interpretations of the literature presented, especially with regards to motives for murder stories.

Thompson, who taught political science at Graterford, found the inmates were more apt to get involved in discussions than most college students. "They're more willing to contribute," he said. "They know a great deal about the system we're trying to [illegible] they've been in the political judicial system."

While class is in session, no guards are present. "I feel safe though," said Lytel, "and they thought I was tough!" If anything, Lytel felt most hostility from the prison guards, possibly because they considered it to be "free education" for the inmates. In 1981, Lytel was present at Graterford during the hostage crisis. She had a feeling of peculiarity at the prison that day, but none of the inmates acted out of the ordinary. All in all, the inmates have always been well behaved.

Thompson, as well as many of the other professors teaching at Graterford, see the program as a "personal contribution to society." He sees it as an opportunity to deal with people who don't have any benefits. Thompson also feels that these individuals are at the prison to reform their values of society. "Even though they've violated our society, how long should they be punished? After all, if there is such a thing as rehabilitation, someone has to have the responsibility to give them back their dignity," says Thompson.

The residents of Sullivan Hall express their feelings about Villanova's big 68-67 victory over the Georgetown Hoyas. It was the Wildcats first win over Georgetown since 1965, when the Cats downed the Hoyas in the Holiday Festival, 81-72. The team's overall record now stands at an impressive 14-3, with a 7-1 mark in the Big East standings. Nova's next foe is Boston College tomorrow at noon.

A "Super" Bowl for a Change

By KEVIN McKENNA

A Tank McNamara cartoon prior to Super Bowl XVII pointed out the difference between the print and broadcast media for covering a live event. In regard to its paper's coverage of the big game, two editors tell a sports writer that they are going to have to kill his interview with the backup cornerback's dentist. The staffer replies, "It's rich background material like this you never get from broadcast journalism!"

The reporter had a point because a network's success in covering a live sporting event ultimately depends on the game itself. That is why NBC had an army of 130 employees, 20 cameras and 11 replay machines covering Washington's 27-17 victory over Miami. With an estimated 130 million viewers watching, it is not hard to see why the Proud Peacock Network rolled out all its heavy artillery.

NBC did its best to please all the armchair quarterbacks because you can't exactly flip channels at halftime if you do not like the broadcast. For the most part, NBC did not lose too many viewers, unless of course they were Wild Kingdom fans. The game was head and shoulders above previous ones, especially the last one in which these two teams met. That in itself was a feather in the Pesacock' cap.

The exciting caliber of play also allowed announcers Dick Enberg and Merlin Olsen to do what they are paid to do — announce instead of hype. Although the two were not without error, they came across far better than forecaster Pete Axthelm and sidelines gofer Mike Adamle. Axthelm had the misfortune of predicting a 17-3 Miami victory. What's more, he said the Redskins would not even score a touchdown. So much for A.J. Duhe.

As for Adamle, after the game he described Washington fullback John Riggins as being "crazy." This did not sit well with Redskins owner Jack Kent Cooke and head coach Joe Gibbs who proceded to correct and then chastise Adamle while millions looked on.

Technically, NBC's performance was exceptional although replay director John Gonzalez and his replay regiment may have shown one too many. There were 150 plays counting penalties, kick-offs and extra points and NBC replayed 101 of them. Charlie

Brown's touchdown reception was replayed four times but that's because some clown stood in front of the camera the first time around.

Finally, there were the commercials. Eighty-five to be exact with 35 different sponsors paying $400,000 for each 30 second spot. This includes NBC's own commercials plugging such great shows as "The A Team" starring Mr. T and "Sports World" featuring Boom Boom Mancini's upcoming fight. Both commercials were quite amusing considering the fact that Mr. T and Mancini speak English as, though it was their second language.

In any event, NBC stands to make a handsome profit from this year's game. In addition, in all likelihood, the network finally has landed a show in the top twenty. Possibly two, if NBC can replay Monday night's Villanova-Georgetown game.

By JOHN LOZANO

Sunday was the 50th anniversary of the rise to power of Adolph Hitler. For many, this fact will barely be noticed. Others will think of a world so close to our own that seems, at the same time, so distant. While a few will somehow be caught in those rare moments of pondering, where those intangible realities within our world loom upon us with all their awesome power.

So stirring are the years of Adolph Hitler some 50 and less years ago. What is it that spews forth a man and age as this? Whence comes its power?

One hot summer day, some years ago, I found cause to think about all this. I visited a concentration camp in southern Germany. Slowly and silently I strolled through the barracks, ovens and place of execution. Silently I gazed upon the fences and guard posts. Silently I listened as I was told the gray dust on my shoes was caused by the ashes of those buried throughout the grounds. Silently I read the memorial sign, "NEVER AGAIN," Silently I wondered.

Recently I read the story of another who visited a concentration camp. He did so in 1941 and never returned. While a prisoner in Auschwitz, he asked to take the place of another prisoner, the father of a family, who was condemned to death. His request was granted him. Maximilian Kolbe was shut up naked in an empty, subterranean cell and left without food and water till death.

These events seem almost unreal while remaining all too real. We are forced to ask why? Why evil of such magnitude? Yet we must ask just as fervently, why love of such magnitude? As we ponder the mystery of evil that takes life away we must also ponder the mystery of love. Love that gives its life away that another may have life.

From all this, can we view mankind (as many do today) as limitless in their potential for good? At the same time, we are forced to grapple with those rare individuals whose lives for others stretch our vision and challenge us on, regardless of all the evidence to the contrary. I am forced to ask again. What brings forth such a man as this? Whence comes his power?

I am directed by a verse from St. Paul. "Glory be to God whose power at work in us can do infinitely more than we ask for or imagine."

John Lozano is the associate director of Campus Ministry.

Local Gallery Presents Diverse Exhibits

By BARBARA SIMON

The Fine Arts Gallery of Ardmore, on the corner of Cricket and Lancaster Avenues, has a kaleidoscope of displays; it is a well diversified exhibit, a unique museum, an artistic store and an educational experience. In seven showrooms, the gallery includes over 2,500 works from oils to enamels, water colors to etching, sculptures to lithographs. The art work is of traditional, contemporary, corporate and experimental styles.

For over 15 years, the gallery owners Marvin and Sylvia Heisman have offered only original works at affordable prices. The Heismans travel extensively in search of outstanding new artists. They usually buy the pieces outright, instead of buying on consignment. Therefore, they are able to sell pieces at more reasonable prices.

One unique artist, Charles Parthesius Sr., is one of the last master enamelists. Enameling is one of the oldest art forms in history, dating back to the early Egyptians. Charles Parthesius Jr., tutored by his father, is also recognized as one of the country's top picture enamelists. His work is exhibited along those of his father's; their work cannot be told apart. Their pieces capture simple segments of life in an exalting manner, through the use of bold applications of bright colors.

Another famed artist, Kurt Schnog, had two of his paintings presented to President Reagan in May 1982. They are handsomely framed water colors of the White House and the Jefferson Memorial.

Edna Hibel, one of the foremost contemporary lithograph artists, has quite a large collection at the gallery. She is noted for her Nordic, Dutch and Oriental scenes; especially ones depicting a mother and child. She also does lithographs on porcelain plates. Lithography is a process of printing from a flat stone or metal plate where the area to remain blank is treated with an ink-repellent material. Hibel is the only woman artist to have her own museum of art in West Palm Beach, Fla.

World famous Pablo Picasso has two works in this gallery. "Paul in Harlequin," an oil on canvas depicting his son and an unnamed experimental piece are included.

Another famous Spanish artist is Salvidor Dali who has paintings displayed in the gallery. He is one of the greatest painters of the twentieth century and his art encompasses an unbelievable versatility. His works are traditional, religious, surrealistic, grotesque, erotic and sometimes demented. "L'Elephant" and "Dream #9" are two of many of Dali's original etchings at the gallery.

Marc Chagall, a Russian artist creates scenes of fantasy, color and joy. His works are abstract and surprising with bird-headed humans and instrument-playing beasts. Two of his etchings that can be seen are "La Lute De Jacob" and "Song Du Peinter."

Victor Vasareley, the modern, geometric artist is among the countless other artists whose works are displayed at the Fine Arts Gallery, including Norman Rockwell, Yin, Urilevsky, James West, James Llewelyn and Joan Miro.

A unique facet to the Fine Arts Gallery is their involvement in art auctions for fund-raising organizations. Every year they conduct hundreds of auctions for religious, and civic organizations, nursery schools, high schools, hospitals and universities.

Another asset to the gallery is their custom framing department, which is on location with eight master craftsmen.

Finally, the gallery offers the Young Collector's Plan which enables patrons to take home the art of their choice and pay for it over a period of several months with no service charge.

The Fine Arts Gallery is an attractive, well-lit, evenly dispersed gallery. The price range is from $25 to $15,000. The art pieces can be enjoyed by anyone with or without an interest in buying.

It is an enlightening experience; a world of color and shape in versatile reflections that are enjoyable as well as thought provoking. Take a walk to the Fine Arts Gallery in Ardmore, it is artistically worth it.

Prof Talks Torah

Dr. Evelyn Shuster, an adjunct member of the Philosophy Department, addressed the congregation of Temple Beth Hillel on Jan. 28. She dealt with the problem of "Torah and the Greek Logos."

Philosophy in the Socratic and Platonic sense is literally anxiety over one's fall from being and existence in truth. Shuster suggested that the Torah eliminates the anxiety and the trembling in fear that existence in truth might be missed.

"The Greeks," she said, "saw in the ability to question and search the aristocracy of their existence, their ability to question was the standard by which they distinguished themselves from those who could not question or did not want to."

Shuster went on to question the peculiarity of those who live under the Torah. The community, which understands that the Torah has been given to them, experiences this as a revelation of divine being and of themselves as a chosen people qualitatively different from others, according to Shuster.

Shuster did her philosophical studies at the Sorbonne, with such men as Paul Ricour, Vladimer Jankelevich and Michel Focault.

Attenborough's Dream Comes True

By BARBARA SIMON

"Gandhi," a three-hour Columbia Pictures movie, is the powerful story of one tiny Indian man, depicted as a saint, who became one of the world's greatest leaders of peace. The man was Mohandas Karamchand, (1869-1948) better known as Mahatma ("great-souled") Gandhi. Gandhi was the force behind the 1947 independence of India from England.

Directed and produced by Richard Attenborough, the movie won five Golden Globe Awards Saturday night at the Hollywood Foreign Press Association's 40th annual ceremonies.

It was named best foreign picture of 1982. It also won for Attenborough's direction and John Briley's screenplay, while Ben Kingsley, as Gandhi, took double awards as new star of the year and best actor in a drama.

"Gandhi" has been named best picture by the New York Film Critics and the National Board of Review.

The movie was Attenborough's twenty-year ambition come true. After reading a biography of Gandhi in 1962, he was so captivated that he wanted to tell the story of Gandhi's life and philosophy. Attenborough said he is devoted to what Gandhi stood for because, "Gandhi believed passionately in the dignity of men and women. He believed unequivocally in the rights of women, particulary in India, which were almost non-existent, and he believed that the resort to violence for resolutions to disagreements was absolutely unacceptable."

Kingsley, 39, a successful British actor who is half Indian, gives a credible performance as Gandhi. He not only looks like Gandhi but the actor vanishes from the moment he appears as Gandhi in the film. As Gandhi, he emits an aura of attractiveness despite his emaciated body, his shaven head and big (Bing Crosby-type) ears. He has beautiful dark brown eyes and skin and his quick wit is quiet and intelligent. As an extreme pacifist, his philosophy follows satyagrapha (truth and firmness). Gandhi remains staunch in his fight for justice until his death.

The movie covers the period in Gandhi's life in his early twenties to his assassination at seventy-nine. "Gandhi" begins with the traumatic assassination scene and then flashes back to when Gandhi is a young, well-educated lawyer, dressed in a suit and tie and ready to idealistically change the world. He is violently appalled at the racial discrimination when he is literally thrown off a train in South Africa for refusing to sit in third class. This incident radically changed his life and his transformation to a world leader of peace begins after he trades his western clothes for a home-spun loincloth, symbolizing his liberation. Gandhi's fight for India's right to home rule is the focal point of the movie. His non-violent methods are more powerful than guns or tanks. The power lies in his success to disseminate communal unity throughout India against the tyranny of the British.

Since most of India is starving, the people are desperate for help. Gandhi is their salvation. The timing is right and his plan of peaceful retaliation works. Gandhi organized a National India Conference and he convinced India's peoples to boycott British commodities. The first step was for India to become economically independent, and then the political independence could conceivably follow.

Ironically, the British were first amused and only later terrified by Gandhi's influence in India. They became increasingly pressured to give up their imperial rule. Gandhi is jailed a countless number of times until the British fear they will be prepetuating a martyr image. They fear even more the riots that are occurring because of Gandhi's arrests. Finally, the British are forced to jail Gandhi just so they can negotiate with him. At one of these meetings a British official, exasperated with Gandhi and the turmoil he has caused in India exclaims, "You don't think we're just going to walk out!" Gandhi calmly replies, "In the end you'll just walk out."

Gandhi's advocation of peace is heightened when compared to Britian's violent reactions to India's boycotts and strikes. In one horrendous scene General Dyer orders his troops to fire directly on a crowd of peaceful demonstrators, causing 1,516 casualties with 1,690 bullets.

Historically, Gandhi will be remembered as one who firmly represented truth and justice. Like Socrates, he listened to his inner conscience (God) to defer him from doing wrong. Spiritually, like Jesus Christ he believed and practiced " . . . whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." (Matt. 5:39). Gandhi was also influenced by the 19th-century American writer Henry David Thoreau, who wrote a famous essay, "Civil Disobedience," and he was affected by the works of Russian writer Leo Tolstoi; it was Tolstoi's policy of nonviolence and civil disobedience that he adopted.

The death of Gandhi was considered an international catastrophe because his influence spread beyond the movement for freedom in India. As a proponent of peace, in the midst of the rise and fall of Hitler's regime, Gandhi vowed to shed no blood. He would rather die before lifting a hand against another. He was so adamant that this became the cause of his many fasts as a statement against violence.

Perhaps he was not a saint, but "Gandhi" vividly portrays the man at his spiritual best, the mountains he moved and the bloodless battles he won.

Many the supporting actors are noteworthy. Candice Bergen plays Margaret Bourke-White, the famous Time-Life photographer. She visited India in the 1940s to gather material for a book, and interviewed Gandhi only hours before his assassiation. Edward Fox is General Reginald Dyer, the commanding officer responsible for the massacre of thousands of Indians protesting in the Sikh city of Amritsar.

Ben Kingsley and director Richard Attenborough discuss a scene on the set of "Gandhi."

The Call: No Reply Needed

By BILL SANTOS

"Modern Romans," the new LP from The Call, is a typical new wave album from what is just a typical new wave band. The four man group, consisting of Greg Freeman on bass; Scott Musick on drums, percussion, and vocals; Tom Ferrier on guitar and vocals; and Michael Been on guitar, synthesizer, and lead vocals, is both unimaginative and tired.

The group's new album is both trite and is something we have heard before. Unimaginative chord-changes render this album boring and rather superficial; unnecessary guitar and synthesizer leads makes this record even more tedious to listen to. The melodies are predictable and are much like many of the new wave songs of today. Each song offers a pessimistic view of life with such titles as "The Walls Came Down" and "Violent Times."

Although the lyrics will not make Elvis Costello sweat, the album does contain a few listenable songs. "The Walls Came Down" employs a boogie woogie chord change that contrasts its title. The melody works only because it does not pretend to be something it is not. "Turn A Blind Eye" is the "rocker" of the album but it is much too contrived. "Destination" is the best song on the album mainly because it is quite interesting if not different. Three minutes of the song is instrumental with the last minute injecting an unexpected vocal.

Been's lead vocals are similar to that of Benjamin Orr of The Cars or Jim Morrison of The Doors. But do not let that fool you. These vocals are irritating in that Been is more of a clone rather than his own singer.

The cover of this release sports a 1922 still photograph of what appears to be a Roman Orgy (modern Romans?). What annoys this writer is that in every way The Call attempts to make a profound statement. From the pretentious cover to the nine tracks on the album, one wonders, what is the point? The answer is there isn't any. With ludicrous melodies and an array of bathroom wall lyrics, "Modern Romans" is nothing more than packaged new wave.

With the music industry in the state that it is in, one does not need another new wave band especially one that has so little creativity. Sorry fellas, don't call us we'll call you.

Henson's Magical Muppets

By BILL SANTOS

"The Dark Crystal" is the newest movie written and directed by Jim Henson of Muppet fame. Henson was assisted in the direction by Frank Oz, a man known for his work with the Muppets and Yoda in "The Empire Strikes Back." As one would expect, "The Dark Crystal" is filmed entirely with the use of Muppet-like creatures.

There are three main characters in the movie: the Skeksis, who are vulture-like beasts, both grotesque in appearance and eating habits; the Mystics, who are sloth-like animals, slow but sure of step; and the Gelflings, little child-like people who prove to be much wiser than either of the others.

The two races (of Skeksis and Mystics) contain only ten members, and are rivals. Although, as we find out later, they originated from the same being. You see, 1000 years ago, a charde or chip from the dark crystal was broken off of it and this seperated ten great beings into twenty "mortal" enemies. The Skeksis do not want to be reunited and, therefore, they detest the Gelflings who are the only creatures that can rejoin the two species. The mystics, on the other hand, want to be reunited and move their way ever so slowly toward the dark crystal (the entity that purported them to begin with). Remember, as we said, the two races are reunited when one in a burst of light emitted from three sun's convergence, and everyone lives happily ever after.

The Historian tells the other evil Skekais of the prophecy of the Dark Crystal.

During the two Gelflings' voyages to retrieve the lost charde, a diverse assortment of ominous creatures roam the forest. They range from a large plant that gobbles up unwary strays to flying flowers to a cute ball of fur with two yellow eyes, which is the pet of the winged Gelfling girl. When the Gelflings reach the castle where the charde is, an old hag, Aughra, befriends them and gives them the chip so they are able to save the day.

There is a lesson to be learned from watching this movie. It goes back to what Abraham Lincoln said — "A house divided against itself cannot stand." The two races stem from the same being, but divided, neither can exist independently. A unity is established by film's end that will persevere forever.

"The Dark Crystal" is rather slow towards the beginning of the film but picks up once the plot is firmly established. An imaginative Henson, featuring his weird but beloved creatures, enables this film to succeed. A mystical air is sensed from the start but it is not until half way through the film that this reporter finally summitted and was finally engulfed by the magic of The Dark Crystal.

Make a Discovery; Treat Your Palate

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

If one has a craving for Oriental food, the China Buddha in Wayne offers fine quality Cantonese fare at a reasonable price.

Since there are not many Chinese restaurants on the Main Line, good Cantonese-style food is hard to find, and China Buddha is a pleasant surprise.

For appetizers, one can choose from several soups such as yat gaw mein and won ton. My dinner companion and I each chose the won ton soup, containing a nice portion of spiced meat wrapped in a noodle.

Following the soup, we chose a large order of spare-ribs (numbering 8-10 pieces). The ribs were well-done and had a crisp, tangy taste to them. More importantly, unlike many Chinese restaurants, there was a sufficient amount of meat on each rib. If spare ribs are not your fancy, China Buddha also offers shrimptail, pork, egg rolls and chicken appetizers to tempt your palate.

For the main dish, we had an order of scallops with cashew nuts and pork lo mein. The scallops were deliciously chewy without being rubbery, while the cashews were tastefully crunchy.

As for the lo mein, it contained a generous helping of noodles that contained not only pork but also mushrooms. On past occasions this reviewer has dined on such delectable dishes as beef and oyster sauce, chicken chow mein, sweet and sour shrimp dishes and other items too numerous to mention here.

For dessert, China Buddha offers the ubiquitous vanilla, chocolate and strawberry ice cream. My dinner companion and I skipped dessert as we could not even finish the main dishes. We also wanted to walk, not roll, out of the restaurant. In case you were wondering, at the end of our meal my dinner companion and I were given the obligatory fortune cookie.

The restaurant is not without its shortcomings though. The service was slow, considering the amount of people present. Perhaps this is due to the fact that there were only two people waiting on tables. Also, because China Buddh does not have a liquor license, drinks are limited to soda and tea.

Overall, China Buddha is recommended. The check came to roughly $18, which is relatively cheap considering the amount of food we ate. While the service could be faster, the waiters are personable (China Buddha is family-run). Perhaps the motto at China Buddha is "good things come to those who wait."

Located at 175 E. Lancaster Ave., China Buddha is open daily, Monday through Thursday from 11:30 a.m. until 10 p.m. and Friday and Saturday until 11 p.m. Lunch is served from 11:30 a.m. till 3 p.m. daily except Saturdays.

Disappearance Of Innocence

By JAYNE M. STUART

Stanley Jaffe's latest triumph is also his directorial debut. Jaffe, best known as the producer of the Oscar-winning "Kramer vs. Kramer" is sure to win numerous awards for "Without a Trace." The film is a provocative and timely piece about the disappearance of 6-year-old Alex Selky, (played by Daniel Bryan Corkill). He routinely leaves one day for school, and turns the corner not to return that night. Alex has vanished without the slightest clue. His mother Susan (played by Kate Nelligan) refuses to concede that her son is dead. She is separated from her husband and her life has become centered around her son. She and Alex had a solid relationship; he is at that adorable, irresistible age of honesty and inquiry and communicates wonderfully with his mother. Mrs. Selky is understandably frantic, yet she is at the same time tough and level-headed. Nelligan portrays the anxiety and overwhelming helplessness a mother must feel in this situation so accurately, it is eerie.

Judd Hirsch, ("Taxi," "Ordinary People") convincingly plays Detective Al Menetti, who is assigned to investigate. It is an especially upsetting case for Menetti because he has a son approximately the same age as Alex. Menetti is "the" average, middle-class guy who, everyone can identify with, especially when one sees him preparing steaks for a family cook-out, "resplendent in" apron. Menetti becomes entrenched in the case and seems to cover any and every lead. It is obvious that Menetti sympathizes with Mrs. Selky and admires her intelligent and rational approach to her problem.

It becomes evident, however, that the hope of locating Alex is practically nil. Two months later, Alex Selky is no longer front page news and Menetti is involved with other cases. The only real lead that they had was three psychics mentioning a light blue car. Mrs. Selky remembers seeing a car of that description on the morning of Alex's disappearance. It is interesting to note the hope and importance that Mrs. Selky and her husband Graham (David Dukes) attach to the psychics. In an interesting contrast, Mrs. Selky's friend (played by Stockard Channing) mentions the absurdity of one psychic's predictions. Mrs. Selky retorts with the fact that she and her husband have an appointment with a psychic. This portrays the change this type of situation can have on a person.

Jaffe expertly manipulates his audience. But as an audience, we never mind this tactic. Jaffe sets up several suspects with both questionable alibis and strange behavior.

The movie illustrates the void created by the uncertainty of the fate of the missing child. Mrs. Selky grapples with the prospect of Alex's being dead. She refuses to lose hope even though all of her friends and relatives urge her to get on with her life. She wonders how she can possibly carry on with her life.

The most unsettling aspect of this film is that there are many families in this same predicament, most recently the family of Etan Patz. The film builds to such a climax at the end that one finds oneself clenching and unclenching his fists.

One can identify with the people in this film almost as if one's own child had been kidnapped. "Without a Trace" becomes a statement about the difficulty the police face in a case of this nature and the helplessness of the family. It shows the long-term effect this type of crime can have on an individual and the torment and hell that a family goes through. Every lead that develops, legitimate or not, raises a faint ray of hope.

Although the movie's ending is a bit melodramatic, it is by no means predictable. Throughout the film one is always trying to piece together the puzzle along with the Selkys and Det. Menetti. One actually experiences the highs and lows right along with them.

The film's acting is excellent. Miss Nelligan should establish herself as a major star; she is brilliant, not to mention stunning. Judd Hirsch is easily becoming the most "likeable" actor in the movies today.

"Without a Trace" is a sensitive film that deals with problems that are very real in today's world; a world that each day becomes less safe to live in. It is both superbly acted and directed and it should not be missed. Just remember to bring along the tissues.

Soph Star Jolts Georgetown

Ed-die! Ed-die! Ed-die!

By LARRY GOANOS

As hot as he was Monday night, the ice water in Ed Pinckney's veins remained frigid while the 6'9" sophomore hit two free throws with eight seconds on the clock to vault Villanova past Georgetown 68-67, giving the Cats their first Big East win ever against the Hoyas.

Those two points capped a brilliant 27 point, 22 rebound performance by "E.Z. Ed" in what Coach Rollie Massimino termed "the best game of his (Pinckney's) collegiate career so far."

Defensively, Pinckney and friends smothered Georgetown's Patrick Ewing, limiting the All-American to eight points and six rebounds, nine and two below his season averages, respectively. Ewing eventually became one of four Hoya starters to foul out.

Things actually started out looking grim for the Villanova squad. Georgetown raced to an early 17-9 lead, causing many Nova backers to experience uneasy feelings of "deja V.U." Sparked by a six point, three minute scoring spurt led by Pinckney, the Cats closed the gap to 21-17 with 12 minutes left in the half.

The young Hoyas refused to crumble at this juncture however, forging ahead behind seven Anthony Jones points to claim a 31-18 lead with 8:14 left in the half. The Cats only managed to clip the Hoya lead to ten, at 42-32, before the half ended.

The second stanza, one of the most exciting ever witnessed at the Palestra, began with the Wildcats outscoring their rivals 12-4 in the first 7:54. The devastating inside play of Pinckney and senior John Pinone during this stretch set the tone for the remainder of the contest.

The resurgent Hoyas fought back again, reeling off six unanswered points before Ewing took to the bench with his fifth foul at the 6:45 mark.

Sensing wounded prey, the Cats moved in for the kill.

Pinckney, Pinone and Dwayne McClain supplied the offensive punch down the homestretch, enabling the Cats to pull within one, 65-64, on a Pinone bank shot with :40 left. Eleven seconds later Hoya freshmen Horace Broadnax cracked the Nova press for a lay-up, giving Georgetown their last points of the day.

Down 67-64, the Cats' McLain fed Pinone, who executed a reverse lay-up with :18 on the clock and narrowed the gap to one.

The subsequent inbounds play was one of the biggest of the year for Villanova. Sixteen seconds away from a sixth consecutive defeat at the hands of the Hoyas, McLain blazed past Michael Jackson and slapped the ball out of bounds off of the freshman's body.

Pinckney got the ball inside on Nova's ensuing possession and put up an errant shot, but he was fouled by Hoya reserve David Blue as he followed his own miss. After Pinckney's two free throws Georgetown managed to squeeze in two shots in the final :08. One, a Jackson jumper, was snuffed by E.Z. Ed, and the other, a Broadnax bomb from deep in the right corner, bounded harmlessly off the side of the backboard as time expired.

The final buzzer triggered a frenetic outpouring of fans onto the Palstra court.

"It was pandemonium out there," said Pinone later." Eddie and I were knocking people over to get into the locker room."

Summing up the dream-like events which had just transpired, Massimino said, "It was one of the most thrilling, hard fought victories in my 26 years of coaching."

Funny, it appeared to be just another EZ game.

CATCH 22: Wildcat Ed Pinckney (54) fights off two Hoya players on his way to grabbing one of his career high 22 rebounds.

Cats Conquer Millrose

Milers' Milestone

By BEVERLY REILLY

The Wildcat women's indoor track team struck gold twice last weekend, first at the Millrose Games and then at the Big Five Championships.

At the highly prestigious Millrose Games last Friday night, the women's mile relay team captured the crown in the College & Club Division of the relays at Madison Square Garden.

Freshman Sharon Margaretha ran the lead-off leg of the race. With continuing momentum, junior Patty Bradley ran a strong leg and passed the baton to sophomore Veronica McIntosh. McIntosh brought the Wildcats to the front of the field. Going into the final leg with the lead, the Wildcats sensed a flame of victory in their hearts.

But a fire was also burning among the tracksters of Rutgers. Rutgers decided to challenge the Wildcats. Anchoring the Wildcats, freshman Joanne Kehs met that challenge. Grasping the baton with a firm hand, Kehs exude an aura of confidence and determination that brought the team to the victory seat. The Wildcats captured the crown in 3:50.32, holding off Rutgers in 3:50.33.

The team of Margaretha, Bradley, McIntosh and Kehs is the first women winners from Villanova at the Millrose Games. However, all talent did not end on the track. Senior captain Peggy Stewart took part in the high jump competition. Stewart jumped 5'8", placing fifth in the highly competitive field.

The Wildcat women carried their success with them to the Big Five Championships last Sunday at Widener.

The team exhibited excellent strength not only by their eight individual first place honors, but also through their numerous second, third, fourth and fifth place scorers. With a final score of 87, Nova ran away from the field with Penn in second with 43.

The talent lights once again shone on Joanne Kehs as she captured first place in the 880-yard run in 2:16.1. Also under less pressure than at Millrose, Kehs led the mile relay to first place. This team of Kehs, Margaretha, Eva Marie Berardi, and Tracy Carter won with a time of 3:58.6.

McIntosh also gained dual first place honors. McIntosh won the 440 run in 58.0 and led the two mile relay to victory. The two mile relay of McIntosh, Bradley, Vickie Brown and Beth Lyons won with a time of 9:21.7.

Super O'Sullivan

By PAUL MACCHIA

Every sport has its prestigious event where only the best compete. For indoor track each year, that occasion is the Wanamaker-Millrose Games.

Last Friday night in New York's Madison Square Garden, the annual meet took place and 10 Wildcats were there to compete.

And it just so happened that each VU performer qualified for either the IC4A or NCAA championships.

In the individual events, senior Carlton Young placed third in the 500-yard run with a time of 57.08. Sophomore John Marshall placed second to Tennessee's David Patrick in the 800-m in a time of 1:49.49.

Midway through that 800-m. race, Marshall had assumed the lead and opened a gap of three yards. Patrick came by in the last lap with the lead on the back stretch and held off Marshall by .24.

In the 60-yard high hurdles, senior Rodney Wilson and freshman Martin Booker raced to times of 7.27 and 7.33 respectively. Wilson's time was an NCAA qualifying one, while Booker's was an IC4A time. Despite their performances, both hurdlers placed fourth in their heats and did not make the finals.

In the renowned Wanamaker Mile, Villanova entered Marcus O'Sullivan. The junior originally a reserve, was able to get into the field when Tom Byers withdrew due to illness.

O'Sullivan finished the event in a time of 3:59.09 and easily qualified for the NCAAs. He wound up in fourth.

"A lot of people have compared Marcus with me as far as size, style and guts," said Eamonn Coghlan, who won the Wanamaker Mile in 3:54.40. "I think tonight was the introduction for Marcus O'Sullivan to big time track.

"I think he'll be the next Irishman to produce world-class mile times," Coghlan continued.

The mile and two-mile relay teams also shone through. The latter took first in 7:25.85. In the mile relay, VU also captured first over Mississippi State in 3:15.96.

Marcus O'Sullivan

Marcus O'Sullivan is no stranger to glory. The Irish-born junior has accomplished a great deal in his short track career, but perhaps the best is yet to come.

Indeed, Marcus has just completed one of the most outstanding weeks in Villanova track history. Prior to the Joe Hilton Invitational Track Meet, which was held two weeks ago in North Carolina, only 17 Wildcat milers had ever broken the four-minute barrier. At that meet, O'Sullivan became the 18th with a time of 3:58.84.

A week later, the setting was New York's Madison Square Garden, home of the 76th Wanamaker-Millrose Games. In a race won by Villanova alumnus Eamonn Coghlan, O'Sullivan again shattered the four-minute mark, finishing fourth at 3:59.09.

O'Sullivan is one of three current tracksters born and raised in Ireland. His decision to attend Villanova was no doubt influenced by his high school track coach, Donal Walsh. Walsh was himself a Villanova star who participated in the 1972 Olympic Games. Walsh obviously taught O'Sullivan well. As a freshman, Marcus won the Big East indoor 1500 meters and was named the Big East Indoor Outstanding Freshman.

That same year, O'Sullivan also finished second in both the Eastman Invitational Mile and the Colonial Relays freshman mile. As a sophomore, Marcus won the Husker Invitational Mile and the King Freedom Games Mile, nearly breaking the 4 minute barrier in the latter with a time of 4:00.01.

Though O'Sullivan has been running successfully for some time now, it is clear that this young man is on the brink of greatness. As Eamonn Coghlan commented at the Millrose Games, "I think tonight was the introduction of Marcus O'Sullivan to big time track. I think he'll be the next Irishman to produce world class mile times.

Icecats Beaten

By TOM KOLON

After three games of intense skating which seemed to predict an optimistic second half of the season, the Villanova hockey team experienced an emotional letdown in a 4-3 overtime loss to the University of Pennsylvania.

The Icecats opened the past weekend's activities by overpowering Drexel at the UPenn rink, 5-2, on Thursday night. The match was replete with hard forechecking, rough play and over 30 penalties. Drexel charged out of their lockerroom looking to pound the Icecats, whom they have tied twice. They jumped to a two goal lead.

Villanova however, remained undaunted by the highly vocal Drexel crowd as both Mark "Gaston" LaFond and Jim Ragold were able to beat the Drexel defense.

The Cats took a 3-2 lead into the dressing room, compliments of Jeff Beck after a wild second period featuring great saves by goalie Fred Christie and aggressive play from the rest of the team.

The final period remained nip and tuck as Nova clung to the lead until John Canuso added an insurance goal and also dumped another into the nets in the final minutes. Collecting assists for the victory besides the goalscorers were Jamie Huston and Paul Critchley.

Sunday afternoon found Villanova opposing the never-say-die Quakers of UPenn. Once again, the Cats fell behind quickly, 1-0, but fought back to regain the lead behind the efforts of Huston (Canuso, Brown) and John Pepe (Segreto, Curran), his first career goal in his second Villanova game. The Quakers notched the game at two in the second period as Villanova's passes failed to click and the lines appeared confused.

Canuso sent the Icecats into the lead in the final period on a pass from Critchley and it appeared as if Nova had another win under its belt. However, with a man in the penalty box and Penn's goalie pulled in the final minutes, the Cats had to fight off a 6-4 disadvantage.

With 13 seconds left, Penn drove a low shot past Christie, sending the game into overtime. On an emotional low, the Icecats then let another shot enter the nets within four minutes and let a sure victory slip through their hands.

Coach Skip Probst felt that the team really played flatly and was sure that it was their worst game since the holiday break. Even though they were in the game according to the scoreboard, Penn out played the Cats as evidenced by their 30-16 dominance in shots.

Junior captain Frank Segretto (7) faces off against a Penn defender. The Cats lost 4-3 to the Quakers. John Walsh Photo

Swimming Round Up

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The Villanova women's swimming team added another victory to their 7-3 record with a win over Fordham University, 99-41. Due to injury and illness, four key swimmers were unable to compete. Nonetheless, the women won 13 of the 16 events.

The winning 400-yard medley relay included Genny Mulderig, Nancy Campbell, Beth Metzger and Carolyn Ryan. Lisa McFadden and Cindy Cerami dominated the 500-yard freestyle. Nancy Campbell and Anne Vaughn finished first and second in the 50-yard breaststroke while Metzger and Bernie McCann seized the 100-yard butterfly.

Stealing the 100-yard freestyle was the duo of Ryan and Patty Schwerzler. Lori Bukaty and Maggie Cunningham secured the 1-meter diving events.

Mulderig was a triple winner, claiming the 100-yard and 200-yard individual medley and the 100-yard backstroke. Nancy Campbell won the 100-yard breaststroke and Sheila McCord was a winner in the 1-meter optional diving event. Metzger added another first in the 50-yard backstroke. Schwerzler, Cerami, Rita Edge and McFadden combined efforts to defeat Fordham's 400-yard freestyle relay.

The swimming women have consistently improved and have gained confidence in their ability to win the last four meets. In three weeks the women will compete in the Big East Championship meet, to be held in Pittsburgh.

Coach McKee believes that "Everyone is swimming well and we are looking forward to an exceptional Championship performance. Our main interest is to finish the season with four more wins and keep everyone healthy for the next two weeks."

Cagers Thwart Syracuse

Cats 1st in Big East

By STEPHEN FALLON

M-c-C-l-a-i-n or M-c-L-a-i-n, either way, it spelled an 83-75 victory for Villanova Saturday against Big East rival Syracuse at the Palestra.

Dwayne McClain, playing in his first game since the Jan. 15 victory over Providence, scored 11 points and played excellent defense to propel the Wildcats to victory in the clash between nationally-ranked Titans. Villanova entered the game ranked 11th AP and 12th UPI while Syracuse was ranked 18th in both.

The other half of the "Dynamic Duo" was sophomore Gary McLain, who took advantage of a tightly packed Syracuse zone to score a career high 16 points. McLain shrugged off the explosive offensive display saying, "I feel I have a pretty good shot — I work on it enough. It went down today and if it goes down you've got to keep shooting."

Coach Rollie Massimino was not so reluctant to bestow praise on both players. "The two shining lights I though were Gary's productivity in coming in and taking over when Stew had a little bit of a letdown" he said, "and Dwayne's play, his activity defensively."

The game was a typical Villanova-Syracuse donnybrook, with the lead seesawing back and forth and neither team able to pull away. Villanova le 42-41 at halftime but the lead changed hands nine times in the second half before McClain hit a pair of free throws at the 7:07 mark to give the Cats a 64-61 lead which they would never relinquish.

After Stewart Granger extended the lead to 66-63, the death knell was sounded for the Orangemen. Arms flailing, McClain stripped Leo Rautins of the ball, drove down court and slammed the ball home. This ignited the sell-out Palestra crowd and the Wildcats were on their way to victory.

McClain said of his return to the court, "I've really missed playing, this made me feel good today."

Following McClain's heroics Villanova built their lead to 72-63, when the parade to the foul line began. The Cats converted 9 of 12 free throws down the stretch to wrap up an 83-75 win.

Villanova also received a fine effort from forward Ed Pinckney who tallied 14 points and eight rebounds. One of those baskets was on what is becoming a regular weapon in the Wildcat arsenal, a crowd pleasing alley-oop dunk off a Granger feed.

"John Pinone," in the words of Massimino, "played his usual game," which was as quiet as it was effective. The "Bear" had eight rebounds to go along with 13 points against a defense designed to shut down the inside game.

Despite the good offensive showing, it was the defense of the Cats which seized the game as it hung in balance. McLain explained, "Our defense provided the spark, everybody knew we had to dig down and stop them. That's the only way you're going to win."

And dig down they did. Syracuse led 63-62 with 10:07 remaining when an intense Wildcat defense held the Orangemen scoreless for over 7 minutes, while the Cats raced to a 72-73 lead. When Erich Santifer ended the drought with 2:32 remaining, it was too late and the Wildcats had earned their 13th victory against 13 losses (6-1 in the Big East).

No. 18 Scarlet Knights Glide by Women

By BOB HELLER

This past weekend, the Rutgers Athletic Center was the site of some very exciting women's basketball action as the Wildcats of Villanova took on the Knights of Rutgers University.

Villanova controlled the opening tip-off and took a 2-0 lead 16 seconds later on a lane jumper by Katrina Messenger. Rutgers came back with two buckets to make the score 4-2 before the Cats tied the score at four with a jumper from the left side by Rosemarie Burke. Rutgers then ran off six unanswered points, prompting Villanova coach Harry Perretta to call time and talk things over with his team.

After the time-out, the Cats went to work on the Knights' defense, tying the score at 12-12 with jumpers by Messenger and Nancy Bernhardt and a lay-up by Kathie Beisel. Burke gave the Cats a 14-13 lead with another one of her patented jump shots from the left side. Rutgers' Jennie Hall brought the Knights within one, 16-15 with 11:51 left, but could do nothing for the next 3 minutes as the Wildcats dominated play.

Villanova ran off 11 straight points to take a 26-15 lead with 8:54 left in the half. Nova controlled the tempo of the game, forcing Rutgers to play their game. Rutgers only came back as close as one, 37-36 with about 2 minutes remaining. The Wildcats brought their lead back up to 10 points, 46-36, with some excellent shooting by Beisel, Bernhardt and Messenger, whose 14 points in the first half led all scorers. A basket by Rutgers with five seconds to go gave the Cats a 46-38 lead at halftime.

The Wildcats had played extremely well in the first half, hitting almost 60 percent of their shots from the field and hitting 75 percent from the free throw line. Shooting like this gave Villanova a well-balanced attack.

The second half started with Rutgers controlling the tip-off. The Knights slowly whittled away the Wildcats lead. Nova still held on to their lead for the first 10 minutes of the second half until Rutgers took a 62-61 lead with 10:16 left in the game. Rutgers then ran their lead up to as much as seven points, 81-74, but the Wildcats would not give in to the Knights. A jumper by Beisel brought the Cats within one, 81-80, with only 1:12 left in the game.

After strategy time-outs by both teams, Rutgers took an 86-81 lead with less than a minute to go. The referee then called a flagrant foul on a Villanova player and awarded Rutgers four free throws and the ball afterwards. Rutgers' Julie Salmon made all four shots putting the game out of reach for the Cats as Rutgers held on to win, 89-81.

Despite losing 89-81, the Wildcats' shooting was on target as they hit 34 of 61 shots for 55.7 percent. All of the Wildcat starters were in double figures.

Rising Alcohol Use Levels Off

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

The number of college students who drink alcohol may have leveled off for the first time in two decades, according to a survey conducted nationwide last fall. "On the surface, these figures are encouraging," claimed Christine Lysionek, assistant to Villanova's Dean of Students. "But when I look closely at the numbers, I see, that it may be leveling off, at an alarmingly high level."

In the study "Drinking Patterns and Drinking Problems of College Students: 1983", findings show that 82 percent of the approximately 12 million college students in the United States drink alcohol. The survey was conducted by Ruth Engs, associate professor of health and safety education at Indiana University, and David Hanson, associate professor of sociology at the State University of New York College at Potsdam.

The College Press Service reports that the number of college students who drink has been rising steadily since the early 1950's, but in this first nationwide survey of colleges on that topic, indications are that the rise many have reached its apex.

Hanson told CPS, "There have been a number of regional surveys done over the years, but because they were done by different researchers in different parts of the country, they lacked continuity."

The researchers sent questionnaires to faculty members teaching sociology and health classes at 219 colleges and universities in all 50 states. Distributed to students representing a cross-section of grade levels and majors, responses were received from 5,030 students at 93 institutions.

With such a high level of students drinking already, speculated Hanson, any increase in future drinking levels could occur more slowly than in the past.

The survey details an increase of those who label themselves as heavy drinkers, from 12 percent in the mid-seventies, to 17 percent.

Hanson suggested that part of the reason for the leveling off is the substitution of marijuana and other drugs for alcohol.

The study found that the number of students who drive while drinking has incresed from 26 percent in the mid-seventies, to over 45 percent.

The number of students reporting hangovers and other post-drinking problems jumped from 57 percent to over 66 percent in the same period.

Lysionek termed the rise in drunk drivers "a shame", and that while the drinking rate has leveled off, "it's still a high level of abuse."

The Chronicle of Higher Education claimed that the survey found no evidence of significant changes in the other behavioral problems that "many college officials had reported to be on the rise, such as fighting after drinking, damaging university property, missing classes, and having trouble with the law or with college administration."

"I think this shows," Engs said of the survey, "what many of us have been saying all along, that school administrators are just becoming more aware of such problems."

"Villanova has been trying to encourage responsible drinking by students, a policy which is controversial at many institutions," Lysionek stated. "The key is to change a student's behavior. A study at the University of Pittsburgh shows that isn't working. It's time to find new ways to target those with problems."

Among the study's other findings, women who labeled themselves as heavy drinkers also increased from just under five per-

No Expanding Aid as Costs Rise

By SUZANNE REYNOLDS

"Student costs are going up, yet federal programs for financial aid will probably stay the same next year," according to Art Switzer, assistant director of financial aid.

During recent legislation, Congress failed to produce a regular appropriations bill for education. A resolution maintaining most of the present student assistance programs was passed, but Reagan's federal college budget does ask for the elimination of three popular aid programs. There will be less radical cuts in student aid than in previous years as new aid programs will be proposed.

The eligibility requirements, previously used for Guaranteed Student Loans and Pell Grants, will be the same and the Guaranteed Student Loan program is expected to get nearly the same amount, $3.1 billion, as it did in fiscal 1983, according to the College Press Service.

A proposal to raise the Pell Grant from $1,800 to $3,000 is being presented but the proposal eliminates students from families earning more than $14,000 a year from the program.

On a state level, Switzer said the impact on financial aid funds, because of Pennsylvania's high unemployment, is not known. New Jersey and New York are experiencing an increasing loss of educational funds, according to Switzer. Student loans, Villanova's largest source of educational funding not appear to have been affected. Switzer projects the school year 1983-1984 to be "reasonably stable."

The possibility of the elimination of "smaller aid programs," such as the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, Nursing Student Loans, the National Direct Student Loans, and State Student Incentive Grants is proposed.

A new Self-Help Grant, to replace the programs, has been introduced. The Self-Help Grant would require students to come up with a self-help contribution. Students or their families would contribute certain amounts of money toward their education in order to get the grant.

A financial aid program in conjunction with a standard of academic progress is also proposed in the upcoming budget. Students would have to maintain a specified grade point average to be eligible for financial aid, if the proposal is passed. The Reagan Administration is interested in creating a new program to improve science and math education at the college level, according to the CPS.

Included in the budget is a plan for education saving accounts.

New Trustees Selected

By LINDA BOND

Three new members of the Board of Trustees assumed their duties at the board's first meeting of 1983 on Feb. 8.

Selected for the positions in December election were Rev. John Hugh Melton, O.S.A., Joseph J. Donahue, and John J. Quindlen, all Villanova graduates.

Last spring and summer, two priests on the board, the Rev. Donald X. Burt, O.S.A., and the Rev. John Coughlan, O.S.A., were transferred from Merrimack College to Villanova University to serve Villanova in a teaching capacity. Because no member of the board may be a faculty member of the University, the two priests resigned as trustees as the result of legal incompatibilities.

Two additional members, John F. Connelly and Joseph E. Walters Jr., stepped down in December when their five year terms were completed, leaving the board with four trustees.

According to the University's charter, the board shall have no fewer than 11 and no more than 25 members, one-third plus one of whom must be Augustinian priests. The three new trustees brings the present number of board members to 22, all of whose terms are staggerd.

Melton received his undergraduate degree from Villanova in 1952 and a masters degree in education from Villanova in 1958. He serves as college and career counselor at Monsignor Bonner High School in Drexel Hill, Pa. Prior to his ordination, Melton was a waist gunner-radioman in a B-25 "Billy Mitchell" bomber from June 1943 to June 1945.

Donahue, an active 1935 alumnus who served on the University's Development Council, is president and director of Connelly Containers, Inc., in Philadelphia. He has served as secretary, treasurer, and trustee of the Connelly Foundation since 1955.

Donahue received an honorary degree from the University and was awarded the Villanova alumni medal in 1980.

Quindlin, also an active alumus who served on the University's Development Council, graduated from the College of Commerce and Finance in 1945. He is corporate controller on the Dupont Co, Wilmington, Del.

Trustee recommendations are made to a special committee of the board for membership, whose chairman is James Drobile, esq. This committee then recommends trustee nominees to the board.

The terms of the members are for five years, and a trustee may serve two terms, but may not be re-elected until he has been off the board for one year. After that year, a person is eligible for membership once again.

Meetings are held the second Tuesday in Oct., Dec., Feb., April, and each June and July at a time to be determined by the board.

Donahue and his wife live in Narberth, Pa. Quindlin, his wife and family, reside in Media.

There will be a meeting of the Society of Women Engineers on Monday, Feb. 21 at 7:30 p.m. in 212 Tolentine Hall. Our speaker will be Mr. Frank Falcone. Be there!

Attn: Engineers

"Help! What kind of engineer should I be?" This question is running through the minds of many engineering students, especially freshmen who must declare a specific discipline within a month. The Freshmen Presentation during the EJC Career Conference on Feb. 15 will help clear up much of the mystery surrounding this decision. From 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. in the C.C. Cinema top-notch, experienced civil, mechanical, chemical and electrical engineers from PECO will speak on their individual and group involvements in the building of the Limerick nuclear power plant. Admission is free and should prove beneficial for all engineers, whether declared or undeclared.

Survey Reveals Alcohol Habits

cent in the mid-seventies, to over 11 percent, though the study found more men than women drink, while from blacks than whites drink.

Christine Lysionek, assistant to dean of students.

The lower a student's grade point average (g.p.a.), the more likely he or she is to be a heavy drinker. Of students with a 4.0 g.p.a., 10.7 percent labeled themselves heavy drinkers, compared with 38.0 percent of those with a g.p.a. below 2.0.

Students who are religious are less likely to drink (78.3 percent), or drink heavily, than those who are not (92.5 percent).

The smaller the community in which a college is located, the researchers found, the heavier the drinking, while there is virtually no difference in drinking patterns among students at large and small institutions.

In a campus-wide survey conducted in the spring of 1981 by the Office of Student Life and the Student Government, 37 percent of those surveyed reported that one-half to two-thirds of Villanova students frequently drink, while 25 percent of students drink to excess.

The 1981 survey also reported an ambivalence in regard to the effect of college on alcohol use. Thirty-seven percent indicated no change in their drinking habits, while 34.7 percent indicated that they increased their alcohol and use since entering college.

Rev. Frank Farsaci, O.S.A., the advisor for Off-Campus Residents, compiled the survey for the Office of Student Life. "Drinking on campus is such a complex problem," said Farsaci. "It requires more than education. It's part of a student's value systems."

The Villanova survey's other findings stated that 84.2 percent of male students surveyed, and 15.8 of female students, are drunk more than once a week, while 63.6 percent of the men and 36.1 percent among women claim drinking interferes with their class attendance.

Education

Alcohol Program to Prevent Abuse

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

"The alcohol education program at Villanova is alive and well and working hard," stated Assistant to the Dean of Students Christine Lysionek.

Formed in 1980, the alcohol education program is a committee of various departments in the Dean of Students Office. "Our responsibility, our focus, is for an informed, responsible drinker," Lysionek said. "We are trying to help people with alcohol problems."

Working "behind the scenes," according to Lysionek, with a consortium of Delaware Valley Colleges concerned with alcohol abuse on area campuses, a conference on the Villanova campus has been announced for February 18. "About 200 people from area colleges will be meeting to discuss alcohol abuse and gather information," Lysionek explained.

The keynote speaker at the conference will be Geraldo Gonzales, the founder of the successful Bacchus Alcohol Education Program at the University of Florida. "Gonzales started the push for responsible drinking on campus," said Lysionek.

The purpose of the conference, to stimulate awareness of the problem of alcohol use and abuse on college campuses, is designed to attract college administrators in all phases of student life. "We're really hoping for student participation in the conference," Lysionek added.

As for the alcohol education program on the Villanova campus, Lysionek cited a program developed by a Villanova student used during the 1982 freshman orientation. "It's the first time we included such a segment in orientation," Lysionek explained. "It was also included in R.A. and orientation counselor training. Our goal was to raise the staff's awareness of the problems involved."

"We will retain that aspect of our program in the future," continued Lysionek. "Alcohol is an issue you need to make decisions on, and those decisions should be informed ones. We try to take a positive stance about alcohol abuse, and we know it isn't a popular subject, but we give students the information for them to make up their own minds."

The present alcohol policy "has become as liberal as I think it can become, in the scope of this institution," Lysionek said. "It's a traditional problem of a state where the drinking age is 21, and the majority of the students are under 21. We get caught in the middle, but our policy reflects state law."

According to a national survey conducted one year ago by researchers at Radford University and Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the number of colleges with alcohol education programs increased from 69 percent in 1979 to 79 percent in 1982, while 36 percent have an alcohol specialist on staff, up from 14 percent in 1979.

Fifty-eight percent of the 236 colleges surveyed have established committees to focus on alcohol education.

In the 1981 "Survey on the Nature and Extent of Alcohol Use and Abuse at Villanova," 43 percent of the men surveyed on campus, and 57 percent of the women showed an interest in planning an alcohol education program, while only 23.3 percent of all those surveyed showed an interest in attending such a program.

Power Fails in Stanford Cable Breaks Unexpectedly

By TIM GALLAGAN

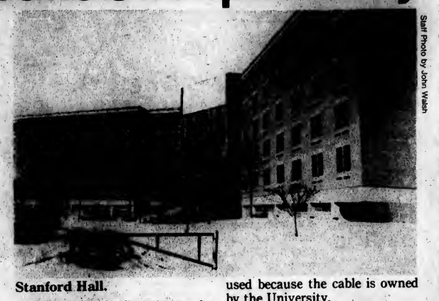
Residents of Stanford Hall were without heat, light, and hot water for 18 and a half hours Feb 3 because of a power cable failure.

The cable failed at 3:34 a.m. and was repaired by 9 p.m. Backup generators provided light in hallways all day and minimal light and heat to rooms after 7 p.m.

University authorities were notified minutes after the power shut off by area coordinator Mark Thibodeau, who in turn called Pennsylvania Electric. Workmen were on the scene by 4:30 a.m., according to Thomas Trucks, director of maintainance.

The Office of Residence Life notified the Stanford resident assistant staff so that they would be on duty all night, set up meals in Dougherty Hall, and urged residents to study in the rooms of friends or the library. It was originally projected that the power would be restored by midnight.

Trucks and Edward Meagler, director of special projects, said that a break in a cable only 12 years old is very uncommon. Usually lines break in the first two years or they will last for 30 years. This is the fourth time there has been a power line break at Villanova. The first was at Connelly Center during its first six months of operation, the second was at Mendel Hall and the third at maintainence.



Stanford Hall.

Trucks also said, "The crew did a very good job in repairing the cable as fast as they did. It was a hell of a job."

The break occured on the east side of Stanford near the tennis courts about 20 feet from the manhole in a nearby field. Work crews from the Harry Ortlip Company ran a new cable from Standford to the manhole, and spliced it to the road. A private contractor was used because the cable is owned by the University.

Stanford food services reported that no food spoiled during the period the power was out, and that there will be no long term effects.

Rev. John Stack, Dean of Students, commented after the blackout, "We were fortunate that there was no serious damage. Maintainance and Philadelphia Electric did a good job. There was a minimal inconvenience to Stanford residents."

Philadelphia Electric said that the interruption began at 5:33 a.m. and their records were closed at 9:30 a.m.

Financial Aid Proposals

which would offer people a tax incentive in saving for college. Under the plan, parents could put away a certain amount of money a year toward their child's college education, and deduct the amount from their total taxable income. Consequently, the parents pay less in taxes each year by saving toward college.

The money stays in the account, earning a high interest, until the dependent starts college. As the money is withdrawn, the parents reportedly would be taxed on the interest earned, but not on the amount they originally deposited.

Even before its release, the major criticism of the tax savings principle is that it benefits only wealthier families, according to CPS.

The Commission on Student Financial Assistance will make a final report of federal aid funds by July 1, 1983.

Recent legislation requires male applicants, 18-years-old, to file a "Statement of Compliance" from the military selective service. Students will not receive federal aid, if a letter acknowledging their draft registration is not submitted to the University Financial Aid office. Switzer advises students to submit their selective service acknowledgement with financial aid forms.

Approximately 45 to 50 percent of Villanova students receive financial aid.

Referring to Villanova's distribution of funds, Switzer said, "We are stringent with the way we award money." He noted, "We are not too liberal in the beginning of the school year."

Former VILLANOVAN Editor Dies

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Former Villanovan editor-in-chief Edward C. Farrell was killed in a car accident Feb. 7, in New London, Conn.

Farrell, a 1965 Villanova graduate with a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering, served as editor-in-chief of the newspaper for two years. Following graduation, he served in the U.S. Navy on the George Washington nuclear submarine and was a protege of Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, the father of nuclear submarines.

The resident of Gales Ferry, Conn., Farrell served as the superintendent of the Millstone nuclear power station, a division of the northeast Nuclear Company located in Waterford, Conn.

Villanova's Director of Public Relations Eugen Ruane, who was the associate moderator of the Villanovan, said that Farrell was "brilliant."

"He was one of the handful of students who kept in touch over the years," said Ruane. "He was really super. I feel very badly. He was a very fine young man with a bright future."

Farrell is survived by his wife and four children.

Risk Publicized

By JAMES DeLORENZO

Intramural athletics at Villanova are not covered by any insurance policies. Students competing in intramural sports are now asked to sign a statement "notifying them of the risk involved and that they have been informed of it," stated Jim Brown, athletic business manager.

The text of the statement reads: "Villanova University does not provide accident insurance for intramural participants. Please be advised that by participating in any intramural sports programs you are exposing yourself to the risk of injury.

"Your signature . . . indicates that you acknowledge the potential risk involved and understood that the financial responsibility for any injury is yours. The University strongly advises you not to participate if you are not covered by an accident and health insurance policy."

"All the Big Five area schools met at a seminar last winter," Brown explained. "with the increased intramural activity, there is an increased chance of people getting injured. It's not that the fields or courts are in bad shape, but no school insures these things. It's prohibitively expensive."

"In talking to lawyers and insurance people, they recommended that we keep our facilities in top shape, and inform potential participants that there is a risk involved in any intramural program," continued Brown. "They can then make a decision whether or not to play knowing that the University doesn't provide insurance."

"We adhere to NCAA guidelines in insuring our varsity and club sports," said Athletic Director Ted Aceto. "But intramurals are not the same as varsity sports." Brown added, "Varsity athletes represent the University, but intramurals are purely recreational."

According to Lou Ferry, assistant intramural director, "When we have an activity, we have a team captains meeting before the game, and ask them to inform the teams of the risks. They have been made aware before."

"While there have been no major incidents," Ferry continued, "We're bound to get a few injuries. No one has ever come to us for medical information, but we want to make sure we cover ourselves, let them know we can't be held totally responsible."

Statistics Reveal Alcohol Abuse

Some rather astonishing statistics have been released concerning the drinking habits of college students nationwide. According to a recently conducted survey, which included 5,030 student responses from 93 schools, drinking alcohol has become commonplace for approximately 9.8 million college students. The researchers indicate that the rise of the number of students who drink, charted since the early 1950s may have reached a saturation point. However, when 82 percent of the approximately 12 million college students admit to drinking on a regular basis, there is no reason to celebrate a leveling off, as the survey reports.

The statistics present a rather clear view of prevalent conditions detailing alarming percentage increases in several areas. The number of students who admit to drunk driving has almost doubled in ten years, students who label themselves as heavy drinkers has risen five percent and the number of women students who consider themselves heavy drinkers has climbed to six percent. The figures are impressive only in the possible implications.

It is not known whether Villanova students responses were included in the statistics, but a survey conducted by the Office of Student Life two years ago revealed, unfortunately but not unexpectedly, that alcohol abuse is a common practice on campus.

Findings indicate that 84 percent of the male students and almost 16 percent of the female students find it attractive to drink to insensibility at least once a week. Now that takes intelligence and talent. This means that on a regular basis, Villanova students subject their bodies to an experiment of idiocy. How much alcohol can a college student drink without risking injury or life.

Figures aren't available, but it's reasonable to estimate that at least half of those intoxicated students will take the chance of driving drunk or ride with another drunk driver. Surprising? Not really when considering Villanova's strict alcohol policy that drives students off-campus to drink.

Following a Liquor Control Board raid on a University-sponsored Cat's Eye five years ago, Villanova began a crackdown upon on-campus drinking in order to protect the University from legal liability. This ultimately encouraged students to drink off-campus. An alcohol education program was initiated and everyone breathed a sigh of relief, sat back and awaited positive results as the campaign to teach students to drink responsibly began. It didn't work.

Administrators now agree that changing a student's behavior and values system is a more difficult task than originally anticipated. Figures show that students have not cut down on their alcohol consumption, they continue to drive drunk and certainly have not learned from past tragedies involving alcohol that they are taking their lives in their hands when they drink excessively.

Once again, efforts are being made to educate Villanova students about alcohol and its effects and encourage responsible drinking. New information and alternatives will be offered. But the old problem will remain. As long as no median is established between the suffocating restrictiveness of the current alcohol policy and allowing students free reign to drink themselves into oblivion, alcohol education will be ignored.

Psychology Department Responds

To the Editor:

It was with great concern and considerable dismay that I read the Feb. 4 Villanovan commentary material concerning the three statements drawn from the 95 statement AECOM Coping Scale administered by Dr. James Bean in his Psychology of Personality sections this semester. While there obviously continues to be misunderstanding and emotionalism surrounding the details of this incident, I would like to go on record at this point with a few brief personal remarks concerning selected issues raised by this matter.

First and foremost, psychologists are bound by a code of professional ethics not to violate the rights of the students, clients, or subjects with whom they come in contact. As a psychologist and as our psychology department chairperson, I do not accept, condone, sanction, or defend any classroom practice, whether it be on the campus or elsewehere, which violates a student's right to privacy and/or his or her moral or ethical standards. No responsible psychologist would. And, as I have indicated previously, I remain more than willing to discuss this matter and the issues raised by it with any concerned student on this campus.

Let me close by noting that the psychology faculty here have worked very long and very hard to build and maintain our department's reputation for academic excellence, high scholarship, and thorough professionalism in our interactions with our many students. It would be a profound disservice indeed to this faculty and to the many undergraduate and graduate students who have been positively associated with this department for such an incident alluded to in your editorial in any way to sully this reputation.

A Nuclear Weapons Policy Without the MX Missile

Does America need the MX (or Peacekeeper) missile? Is America vulnerable to a Soviet first strike? Does America have sufficent nuclear forces to deter any potential adversary?

To answer any and all of these questions, the American people must decide, through an intelligent debate, exactly what is the goal of America's nuclear forces. The U.S. government refuses to make detailed plans on the use of nuclear weapons public. This is not only the current administration's policy but has been the policy of every administration since 1945.

This policy must be stopped. It is a folly that encourages our adversaries to "dare" us into using the bomb. Why? Because they have no idea when we will actually use our nuclear weapons; therefore they attempt to force the U.S. to the brink of nuclear war (i.e. where they think we will use nuclear weapons) before they will back down. This policy also confuses our allies as well. When exactly can they count on the United States to use (or not use) nuclear weapons? Even their highest elected officials do not know any more than their citizens do.

This is the real reason behind NATO's opposition to the deployment of the Pershing missiles. Our NATO allies originally supported the missles; ironically for the same reason they now oppose them. At first, the Europeans wanted the missiles because they doubted America's willingness to use our nuclear war (i.e. our cities) in response to an attack on European cities by the USSR. Later however, due to some callous statements by President Reagan on the viability of nuclear war in Europe, our allies withdrew their support. The Europeans became frightened because NATO (i.e. America) decides on first use of nuclear weapons.

Perhaps significantly, the only country without a large and powerful pacifistic or neutralist movement is France, a country which saw this problem coming and decided to pull out of NATO's military structure rather then turn over its nuclear weapons to NATO's command.

But what of our strategic forces; are they sufficent to do their job? What is their job? This is a decision that the American people should pressure their political representatives to allow them to take part in. This should be a free and completely open debate as we are all involved in this together; in fact, the people more so, as we have no Air force One awaiting us in the event of a nuclear war.

Above all though the American people must show a willingness to debate openly about something they have been for years willing to allow the politicans to sweep under the rug for years. After all the government will only open up if we want them to.

The job of America's nuclear forces should be twofold. First, America does not have or want a first strike capability. Secondly, America has enough forces to survive any possible first strike by a potential enemy and still survive with enough forces to destroy that enemy's society and inflict unacceptable casulties on them. We would be able to render that enemy incapable of continuing the war on either a nuclear or conventional level to a successful (for them) conclusion.

Using these two criteria, I cannot support the MX or for that matter, the Cruise missile(s). These missles violate the first requirement of my proposed nuclear policy. They are too accurate. They could frighten any potential enemy into a first strike out of fear.

However, I would and do support the B-1 bomber as it does comply with both requirements. Bombers do not generally have as much of a first strike capability and can be recalled, giving the President flexibility in a crisis.

It is just as important to debate our nuclear policy as any other U.S policy, more so because of the subject. A nuclear weapons policy will be made for the United States — the only question is by whom.

two separate groups of students. Villanova has social segregation. I thought that the University was going to bring the national sororities on the campus for all the women — not just a small elite number of them.

It would be interesting to know the number of members of each group and what percentage of their students live with their families as opposed to the percentage who live in the dorms or in groups (like at Sugartown Mews). I haven't heard of any commuting students (the ones who live at home) who pledged last week.

Why isn't the Dean of Students aware of this problem? Couldn't these groups be required to take a percentage of each kind of student? Why are there only five sororities and twice that many fraternities??

'100 Days'

To the Editor:

If you are a senior, did you attend the "100 Days Party?" Well, some will answer "yes" and some will answer "no," and some will answer, "I tried. I had my ticket which stated 'Student I.D. required," and I had my student I.D. But I was turned away because I didn't have my driver's license — proof of age."

Luckily, my driver's license was in the car and I only had to go through the hassle of running back out in the cold to get it. But I spoke with two young people who were turned away because they did not have their proof of age with them. Both young women had their student I.D.'s but one of them , carrying a small evening purse, didn't place her driver's license in there, and the other never got a chance to replace her out-of-state driver's license.

I believe that the Pennsylvania's drinking law should be enforced. But why did the advertisement for the party say "Senior Student I.D." or "Driver's license required," and then at the door of the Covered Wagon Inn, they wanted both? Also, when the tickets were designed, if "Student I.D. required" was to be on them, then "proof of age required" should defenetely have been on them, too. Because someone made the mistake of not specifying that proof of age was necessary, this negligence was taken out on those who had no control over it.

Let's just hope that next year the same mistake is not made, so that all seniors who want to celebrate the fact that they have "almost made it," can.

Copyright Infringements 'Ignorance of law'

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The fair use provision of the Copyright Act permits copying without permission and royalty pay if certain requirements are met, "but the requirements are not told," said Professor Howard R. Lurie.

"Blatant copyright infringement among teachers is the result of ignorance to the law," according to Harry Gray, of the University Press, "There are a number of violations at any college or university because of disagreement with the law and the lack of knowledge."

Professor Howard Lurie.

To copy material which requires publisher permission, it is up to the individual wanting the copy to contact the publisher to obtain permission and pay the royalty if necessary.

Teachers aim to put together the best collection of material for their class and sometimes do not have the time or opportunity to get the required permission within the time the material would be pertinent to the class discussion.

Under the new Copyright Law, the University and the copy agent can be held liable and included in a suit, along with the teacher, when caught by the publishers.

The University's Insurance covers copyright infringement if the University can show the school is taking some action to deter illegal copying.

At Villanova, to clarify the Copyright Law, Lurie wrote 'Can I Copy,' ... a guide of the law which can be easily understood by faculty and administration. The guide has been distributed to the staff at Villanova and is now being sold to other universities.

"Can I Copy. . . ." was prompted because of the continuous conflicts between the University Press and the teachers on the exact definition of illegal copying. "Our intention is to operate within the law," said Gray, "and some teachers literally bringing in books to be copied. Fair use is a relative term," Gray continued.

The new book clearly explains most questions a faculty member most questions a faculty member or anyone may have. "The book is designed as a service" said Gray.

Many more prosecutions and suits are foreseen in the future," according to Gray. "It seems to be the thing to do and has been coming for a long time."

Snow Precipitates Closing

By LINDA BOND

The first snow storm of the year prompted the cancellation of Villanova University College classes and Villanova Graduate School classes on Monday evening, as well as the closing of most other Philadelphia area night schools.

Villanova's day classes were not cancelled.

All Villanova night school people commute," said Dennis Murphy, director of admissions and recruitment of University College, and many come from the Western suburbs which are usually the hardest hit by snow." Murphy said the deans and himself didn't want to put students, some of whom travel up to 20 miles, on dangerous roads. The night classes were cancelled at noon Monday because weather reports indicated there would be high winds and slick roads

Murphy said, "There is actually an interesting system for calling school off. Once we decide to cancel classes, we call a secret code number into the Philadelphia City Hall which runs a service for $25 a year. They check your confidential number, and once verified, call it into the various local radio stations for you, who in turn announce the public number."

Villanova University has not cancelled as many classes over the years as other local schools because the school has a larger number of campus residents.

Last year, the first night of classes of the second semester and Saturday morning classes were called off.

Murphy said that the snow emergency number is 645-4505. Callers will hear a tape recorded message explaining what is open or closed for the day.

The office of admissions reported that approximately a quarter of their interview candidates did not show up on Monday.

Correction

In the Feb. 4 edition of the Villanovan two errors were made in the 'Housing Lottery Computerized' story. It should have read: "Previously, Phase I required students to assemble on days designated for each class."

In addition, "Most incoming freshman not admitted as transfer or commuters will be housed for the 1983-1984 school year."

U.N. Club Spurs Interest

By TIM GALLAGAN

The Model United Nations Club at Villanova, designed to give students experience at attaining skills in international peace and harmony, has reformed and is participating in the circuit of United Nations Conferences sponsored by numerous existing United Nation Collegiate Organizations.

The purposes of the club include a given opportunity to participate in functions sponsored by the United Nations Association of America, to have representation in the annual Model United Nations Championship, and to conduct local high school Model United Nations Conferences here at Villanova.

The format of the conference begins as every school planning to attend the National Model United Nations is assigned a country to represent. Students are organized into a delegation, which is made up of one delegate for every committee in which the assigned country participates. Students on the delegation familiarize themselve with their country=s foreign policy, with each delegate focusing on the issues

Dr. Joseph Thompson, the club's advisor, is a former information officer for the United Nations Department of Public Information. He held the post for two years.

"Although we are receiving funding from Pi Sigma Alpha," said Thompson, "The United Nations Club is not restricted to political science majors. There is a certain overlap of membership, as should be expected, but all students are welcome and encouraged to come."

"It is a learning experience for everyone involved. It will put into practice political theories you might have learned in courses, and it will make you aware of problems of third world nations," said Gwen Petti, president of the club. "You do everything that the United Nations does including following parliamentary procedure and having the same committees."

Don Smith, club member and vice-president of Pi Sigma Alpha, said, "The club presents an opportunity to put into practice speaking and debating skills, that you may have acquired along the way, while experiencing diplomacy in action.

"One unique aspect," continued Smith, "of participating in the Model United Nations is that for the length of the conference you become the country you are representing and temporarily forget that you are an American college lems and issues that face a third world nation."

The club had previously existed at Villanova from 1972 to 1978. Due to the enthusiasm of the students, membership had grown to 30, and they won several prestigious honors. Excluding sports teams, the Model United Nations was the highest funded club at Villanova and had gained national recognition.

In 1979, when Thompson left the country on a sabbatical, the clubs organization destructed. There were three leadership changes due to emotional and academic problems, and the club was abandoned.

Sports Trainers Learn Firsthand

By CATHY GROODY

If you love sports but have never had the physique or stamina to compete in college athletics, yet still enjoy the front row excitement of athletic competition, there is a solution. If you love Villanova sports but your anatomy or biology books interfere with your hours on the field, here's a way to, in a sense, practice what you preach and at the same time, enjoy doing it. By becoming an athletic trainer at Villanova, one can experience the first hand excitement of athletics at its best, as well as apply their knowledge of athletic training by treating various ailments experienced by the athletes.

Dan Unger

Five years ago, Dan Unger appeared at the athletic training department determined to use his undergraduate knowledge of sports medicine for the sake of Villanova athletes. Since then, he has doubled the amount of students in the sports training program and has continually upgraded their expertise concerning sports medicine. Now, Unger has a large enough staff that he is able to assign one student trainer to every varsity and club sport.

Student trainers, regardless of how much experience they've achieved in preventative medicine, must attend training courses taught by Unger. These informal clinics teach mostly first aid skills. Since student trainers are constantly reviewing and looking at new techniques and procedures, it is essential that they learn the basics first and pick up the other points later. A great deal of what they learn is not through the clinics or from manuals; it is through on job training that they acquire the most skills.

"It's a big responsibility," said Cindy Blank, a senior nursing major. Blank continued, "you have to be able to apply the proper skills in the most appropriate situations." As a sports trainer, one has the power to advise the athlete of his physical condition during a game. They must know what's going on in the game at all times. "You must have confidence. You, as the trainer, have to know when to stop someone from playing and advise him to do so."

Each student athletic trainer is responsible for one individual sport. They are accountable for the athlete's overall health care. Each trainer is assigned to a certain sport depending on their qualifications. Trainers with the most expertise are assigned to sports that are more susceptible to injuries such as soccer and lacrosse.

Not everyone participating in sports medicine at Villanova is in nursing or are science majors. Many students that become trainers are business and communications majors.

Joe Pendrak, a senior accounting major, first got into sports medicine in high school. There, he was able to learn the basics and later come to Villanova where he continued as a sports trainer. As a freshman, Pendrak was injured and forced to discontinue participating in sports. By becoming involved with sports medicine, he is still able to contribute to sports as well as increase his knowledge as a trainer.

The role of an athletic trainer is quite similiar to that of a traveling physician. They must attend every home or away game as well as the practices. They are first responsible for a vast knowledge in preventative medicine. Trainers are needed for taping some athletes before a game as well as be aware of specific exercises for certain athletes. They must know injury diagnosis, injury rehabilitation and most importantly, have the ability to make quick decisions whether it be referrals for a medical doctor or the decision to take an athlete out of a game if they look injured.

Sports training is a rewarding experience. It can even lead to future career goals. Although it is time consuming, sometimes four hours a day, seven days a week, the rewards are endless. It is an opportunity to travel and see different places with the team. It is an opportunity to represent a school with prestige such as Villanova which competes in world class track meets and continues its national powers in basketball and swimming. Most of all, it gives a trainer the opportunity to meet new people from other schools.

Positions as student assistants are open to anyone who is interested. Freshman and sophomore nursing, biology, and pre-med majors with strong backgrounds in anatomy and physiology are primarily who the trainers are looking for. However, anyone who is interested, dedicated and willing to learn is encouraged to apply.

African Art Comes to V.U.

By BARBARA SIMON

Afro-American art work by five contemporary artists is on display at the Villanova University Art Gallery from Jan. 17 through Feb. 16 in a show which celebrates Black History Month. The theme of the exhibit is to express the interpretation of traditional African forms by modern black artists.

All of the artists are from the Philadelphia area. Most of their work is for sale with the price range from $25 to $1.500.

Paintings, ritual objects and garments by Mackie are displayed. His painting "Across the River" shows a slender black woman gazing from her porch to the distant river, hut and mountains. The effect is geometrical and the soft purples and blues seem almost fluorescent. The solemnity of the lone woman suggests an aura of contemplation and stillness; a painting to be viewed again and again.

African Art Sculptures

Rev. Richard Cannuli, O.S.A., who has been in charge of Villanova's Gallery since 1978 and Cheryl Leibold, both from the art history department, organized the exhibit in conjunction with the Afro-American Historical and Cultural Museum of Philadelphia.

Deryl Mackie, director of the museum and one of the participating artists says of these works: "The objects are active. They perform a visual service for the viewer in their telling, teaching, and revealing powers. The ritual objects suggest, and make a spiritual order." Mackie believes that "Black art is just as sophisticated as Western art" and that exhibits are an attempt to place the Black culture in a more enlightening and truthful perspective for the public.

The fetishes by Barbara Bullock took several years to complete and are an expression of African retention. Today the word fetish implies something to which one is devoted excessively or irrationally. In Africa fetish literally means power objects; traditionally, hunters wore fetishes of animal bones. Bullock's "Bell Fetish" is a dangling conglomeration of yarn and a countless number of different kinds of bells. More interesting is her "JuJu Cloth" which is a large African-type figure on a background of patches of cloth. The face is a horseshoe crab shell surrounded by yarns of various browns, shells, beads, bags and buttons. Background information on this complicated art piece would have been beneficial. Some of the objects are viewed in confusion because it is impossible to comprehend how they fit in. Why is there a needle and spool of thread, or litttle pouches basted onto the background? Nonetheless, the overall effect of the entire art piece is ritualistic, primitive and mysterious; perhaps that is the intention.

Leroy Johnson creates clay pots and African masks that reveal his versatility as an experimental artist. The pots are in delicate browns with different imprinted designs. The eyes, lips and noses are distorted in his colorful masks. They are intriguing to look at. Like Bullock's fetishes, Johnson has a piece called "Les Demoisselles" that is also viewed in wonder because it is so unusual. Numerous six inch cones are the mainstay of this art work, with six women heads clustered cross the piece. "Les Demoisselles" is suggestively phallic.

A contrast to the other artists is Tony Kesey's work. Her collages and paper constructions appear baltently childish. The "Still Life" collage has cutout fruit, a strip of wallpaper with roosters on it and a fruit bowl that is cut in half with each half placed on one side of the collage. The question reverberates, could a ten-year-old child have made this with paper and glue, or, could I even have created this? Kersey's talent seems dubious, or at best misunderstood.

An exciting and visibly creative artist is John Simseon. His "Mira-

A confectionary dream hides behind an ordinary storefront on Lancaster Avenue in Bryn Mawr.

Inside an old fashioned display case, homemade chocolates and candies lie neatly arranged on clear trays: three varieties to a tray. At Maron's Famous Candies of Bryn Mawr and Philadelphia, this scene has been repeated daily since 1850.

Maron's Famous Candies

When Conrad Maron first began making candy in Philadelphia, there was no candy giving at Valentine's Day. Today, with Valentine's Day just around the corner, Maron's Bryn Mawr shop is overflowing with chocolate filled hearts, everything from rose covered one pound hearts to a frilly pink five pound heart.

Catering to the most discriminating sweet tooths on the Main Line, Maron's makes candies the old fashioned way — by hand. Bonbons, caramels, nougats, creams, mints — all are fresh because they are made and delivered to the stores daily. Melvin T. Johnson, owner of this bit of paradise, just doesn't use artificial preservatives.

Johnson guesses there are about 80 varieties in the shop at a given time, given seasonal variations. The oldest independent candy maker in the United States, Johnson is constantly adding new candy ideas, his latest is an exceptionally smooth rumtruffle and a soon-to-be tested raspberry version. This Bostonian-turned-Philadelphian keeps a firm hand on his business; answering his own phone and creating new candy ideas himself. "Ideas for candy just come into my head," shrugged Johnson.

Candy making as its done at Maron's takes skill, as recipes vary with the weather. A typical chocolate caramel, Johnson explains, is made from a mixture of sugar, corn syrup, cream and flavoring (vanilla, caramel, etc.) which is heated on a gas stove to

By JOHN LOZANO

One of the most vivid religious memories of my childhood was the day we received "the ashes."

"Don't touch it!" we were told, of the ash mark that would be put on our foreheads. After being marched back to school from this mysterious event, our discussions centered around some most important matters. "Did you get the priest that puts a lot on?" "I can't see yours." "How does mine look?" "I wonder how long it will stay up there?"

Amidst all this childhood chatter was an aspect of this event that brought thoughts so foreign to me then. As if someone was invading my childhood and demanding the attention of an adult who was not yet there. It came in the words of the priest. "Remember man that you are dust and to dust you shall return."

The restless activity of my young mind seemed to quiet solemly upon the reception of those words. I was not accustomed to pondering my finiteness and eventual experience of death. Certainly the image of myself as a heap of dust did just that. Even then I knew there was something very true about what these words represented.

Many of these special Wednesdays have now passed. Yet the truth that our lives will not continue in this way forever remains and grows. Some say, why should I bother with thoughts like these? What good will it do me?

Perhaps it will cause us to take our life a little more seriously. It may change the way we view our relationships, decisions, beliefs, and ourselves. It may enhance the quality of life we choose to live.

This Wednesday brings another day where ashes begin the season of Lent. The words that go along with the ashes these days are different. "Repent and believe the good news," we are told. We are equally uneasy as these words fall upon our ears. Repentance is not a very popular word these days. It simply means "change," to change the direction of your life.

Nobody likes to change. Nor does anyone really like having a dirty little gray mark put on their foreheads. So why go on with all this?

Perhaps because Lent was always meant to be a time of challenge, stretching and change. Change is called for if Easter is to mean anything more this year than last. Changing our direction so the good news can find a place, or a greater place, in our lives.

Lent has always been a time of concerted prayer and fasting. A difficult time that stretches our vision of ourselves and our faith. A challenging time that demands a response. Enabling those who take up Lent's challenge to have ears to hear and eyes to see the message of Easter more clearly.

about 240 degrees, depending on the weather outside that day. This mixture is then poured out onto a one by two yard slab and allowed to harden. After the caramel is cut into individual pieces, each piece is chocolate coated.

Chocolate molds dating from before the turn of the century are used regularly. At Christmas, Maron's busiest time of the year, the Santas are solid chocolate, not hollow. All of the chocolate used for coating on candy is a special blend made especially for Maron's, Johnson said. All nuts used in Maron's candies are roasted fresh at the factory. Maron's no longer makes hard candies, they are now imported from Holland, Scotland, England and other places abroad.

Johnson's predecessors left quite a tradition to follow. In the old days, customer cards were kept showing each client's favorites, and how many of each were to be included in an assortment tin. Cards bearing customers' inked instructions of the 1920 s and earlier are still on file in the store.

Johnson recalls a phone call he received a year ago from a man in California, who as Johnson tells the story, merely said, "You don't

Well, well campers, how 'bout that blizzard we had this week? . . . we don't know about you, but WKWC thought that winter would never get here . . . apparently, maintenance thought it was never coming at all, judging from their snow removal "efforts" . . . did they really think that by clicking their heels three times, the snow would go back to Kansas or wherever it came from? . . . anyway, it's nice to see that neither sleet nor snow, or even unplowed parking lots, could keep good ol' V.U. from opening . . . speaking of opening . . . WKWC understands the political ratrace track will start its season soon with the perennial run for fame and fortune, the Student Body Presidential Classic . . . . . contrary to what they say, it looks like Laura Moreno and Mary Beth Bogan will both be vying for the brass ring come April . . . WKWC anticipates some bare knuckles, no-holds-barred campaigns . . . . . nonetheless, the race won't be without historical merit . . . it's our understanding that Villanova's never had a woman as student body president before, though that somehow doesn't surprise us . . . and while we're on the topic of no surprises . . . those three new trustees named this week didn't exactly knock our socks off either . . . is it really true that soon all the trustees will be supported by John Connelly's bankroll? . . . we'll never tell . . . all we know is the Student Life office isn't shy about speaking up . . . according to some new stats released this week, 84 percent of Villanova's male students surveyed and almost 16 percent of the females report that they get drunk at least once a week . . . Students Travel Behind The Iron Curtain

By CHARLENE PARDOE

If you have any interests in traveling this summer, and would like to earn three credits while doing so, Villanova's political science department has planned a month long trip to the Soviet Union to begin in June. This trip includes a 17-day stay in the Soviet Union and a 12-day stay in Poland.

The group will leave New York on June 2 and return July 2. The group will remain in Helsinki the first night, and then fly from Helsinki to Leningrad the following day.

Some of the highlights that will be viewed in Leningrad include the beautiful Hermitage Palace, the fortresses of Sts. Peter and Paul, the Winter Palace, and the Cathedral of St. Isaac. Other sites of cultural and historical interest have been planned as well. Following a visit to Peter the Great's residence, then, the group will arrive in the capital city of Moscow on June 8.

A performance by the Bolshoi ballet, as well as visits to the University of Moscow, the Kremlin, and the Institute for Study of the United States are among plans in this former Olympic city. From June 15-18, the group will stop in Kiev for a visit to St. Sophia's Cathedral and the Pchelskaya Catacombs, as well as a journey by boat down the Dnieper River.

After departing from Kiev, the group will arrive in the rural Ukrainian town of Lvov, which will be the final stopover before journeying into Poland.

The first city they will visit is Krakow, where they will remain for four days. The seat of the most famous Polish king, Wawel Castle, Jagiellonian University and the home of Nicholas Copernicus, will be toured. Following their departure from Krakow, the group will travel to Zakopane, a famous resort city in the Tatra Mountains, which will provide an opportunity for rest and relaxation.

On June 26, Poland's government and cultural center, Warsaw, will be the final stopover before leaving the country. Highlights in this city will include discussions with Polish scholars and officials about what is happening there now, along with talks about U.S.-Polish relationships.

The group will depart to Copenhagen on June 30, and after a one night stopover, will arrive back in New York on July 2.

As for the cost, the total price, including round trip tickets, first class hotel accommodations, all meals, tour tickets, and visa and processing fees, is $2675.

Normally it would cost an individual over $5000. For those taking the three credit course, however, there is an extra fee for tuition. This course is not mandatory, though.

Presently, a few tickets still remain, but there is a maximum number that are allowed to go. For those interested in the program, more information is available by contacting Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, in the political science department.

Hahn, along with Professor Helen Segall of Dickinson College, will be conducting the trip. An associate political science professor, Hahn specializes in Soviet and Eastern European affairs. He is optimistic about taking the trip, and feels that both are important nations to visit — especially, the U.S.S.R.

"To Americans, the Soviet Union is one of the most important countries in the world, and it is necessary for us to be as clearly informed about it as possible. Both countries, though, are among the most important in world politics today," he expressed.

Naturally, however, this trip will focus on other areas besides politics. According to Hahn, travel is a different way to discover new things. "Traveling is one of the best forms of education available to us in developing a broader view of our world," said Hahn. And, in fact, for any occasion, it is very worthwhile.

cle Woman," a huge sculptor in wood of a woman with a child carved over her right breast is a harmonious sight. This piece especially is worth the visit to the gallery.

This Afro-American art exhibit is a reminder of Africa's oral tradition in a modernic fashion. The show is only incomplete because there is no catalogue offered to give the public information about the artists and their work. Background facts are necessary to enhance the understanding and education of a culture that is indeed alive and a part of America today.

This Desk Can Reach Mach 2.

Some desk jobs are more exciting than others.

As a Navy pilot or flight officer, your desk can be a sophisticated combination of supersonic jet aircraft and advanced electronic equipment. But you can handle it. Because Navy flight training gives you the navigation, aerodynamics and other technical know-how you need.

In return, Navy aviation demands something of you as an officer: Leadership.

Your path to leadership starts with officer training that's among the most demanding in the military. It's intensive leadership and professional schooling combined with rigorous Navy flight training. And it's all geared to prepare you and other college graduates for the unique challenge of Navy aviation. The program is tough but rewarding.

One important reward for Navy officers is decision-making authority. In the air, and on the ground, you have management responsibility from the beginning. And your responsibility grows as you gain experience. No company can give you this kind of leadership responsibility this fast. And nothing beats the sheer excitement of Navy flying.

The salary is exciting, too. Right away, you'll earn about $18,300 a year. That's better than the average corporation will pay you just out of college. And with regular Navy promotions and other pay increases, your annual salary will soar to $31,100 after four years. That's on top of a full package of benefits and privileges.

Before you settle down to an earthbound desk job, reach for the sky. Reach for the coupon. Find out what it takes to be part of the Naval Aviation Team. You could have a desk that flies at twice the speed of sound.

A long time ago, in a galaxy far far away, there lived two fair, golden haired children of lust. They met on the planet of eternal sunshine and suddenly became as one. Was their union so splendid; or will it ultimately be tainted with tragedy? Will this Cleopatra cause the downfall of her Anthony? Tune in next week for the ongoing saga, of these two star-crossed lovers, to find out if they truly succeed in alienating both friend and foe. Congratulations, Dottie and Bill.

know who I am, but you do have my grandfather's assortment card. Every Friday, a Maron messenger would give a five pound box of chocolates to the Chestnut Hill conductor at Reading Terminal who would give it to my grandfather's carriage man at the Chestnut Hill station." At the man's request, Johnson filled and sent off an almost identical assortment to California. Most all the same varieties were still made by Maron's.

Were the names on the customer cards published in a book, an almost complete Social Register might most likely result: Fulbright, Thatcher Longstreth's father, William Longstreth, DuPont, Dorrance, the names go on and on.

Johnson acquired Maron's in 1965 after a career in the foreign service as a diplomat in the Middle East. A friend told him that the firm was available. Said Johnson, "We decided to take it over and develop it . . . I wanted a 180 degree shift from what I was doing."

The candy man with the bow tie says his best indication of the types of candies people like is "by what they keep asking for." For Valentine's Day people buy differently than at other holidays, Johnson explained, they wait until the day before Valentine's to buy their candy. "This year it's going to be rough," Johnson sighed, "Valentine's Day is on a Monday."

Anthony Quinn Returns As 'Zorba'

By JAYNE M. STUART

Anthony Quinn is Zorba, it is hard to imagine any other actor portraying the part. In "Zorba," Quinn displays an uncanny realism. He develops Zorba into a lovable, charming and charismatic character. Although Quinn does not have a great voice, he utilizes what ability he does have and performs each song delightfully. He doesn't try to reach notes outide of his range, but rather changes the song into a soliloquy-like verse. If Quinn had a wonderful baritone voice, it somehow would not have fit into Zorba's personality. Zorba (the film version) is the role that established Anthony Quinn as an international star. Now Quinn is returning the favor by making Zorba (the stage version) a success. When an actor seems no longer to be acting; when the audience forgets it is a story but actually begins to live the performance, this is a truly great play. "Zorba" is this and more.

Anthony Quinn as "Zorba."

The story line of "Zorba" is that of a young Greek-American, Niko, who has inherited a mine on the island of Crete and is befriended by Zorba en route. Zorba tells Niko he will manage the mine, since he does jobs that he knows perfectly, while jobs he does not know — "only" well. From the moment Zorba approaches Niko in the bar, one can sense that something is taking place. Their arrival on Crete is big news, as the opening of the mine will mean jobs and, being that Niko is young, all the young women hope to capture his eye. Zorba and Niko opt to stay at the boarding house of the Frenchwoman Hortense (played by Lila Kedrova). Here she begins a love affair with Zorba. Hortense is a silly, frivolous woman with a somewhat disgraceful past, but to Zorba she is a woman, which is one of his two great loves, the other being wine. From the moment they meet, Zorba charms Hortense with his romantic poetry and bravado. Niko watches with surprise and admiration as Zorba plays Hortense into his hands.

Niko falls in love with the mysterious widow of Crete but is afraid to let her know his true feelings. Zorba encourages him to let her know he loves her because if one never tries, then one will never know. In the end, Niko tells the widow but not soon enough.

The play's ending is both heartwarming and moving. There is an underlying theme here. The play is about life, love and friendship, (no strangers to the drama medium), yet there is a freshness about this performance. Zorba teaches Niko about living life to the fullest and with gusto. He shows Niko that one has to take chances on both life and love. Without knowing pain, one cannot know love and happiness. In return, Niko teaches Zorba about everlasting friendship. He shows Zorba what a strong bond friendship can be and that it will bind them regardless of how far apart their lives may become.

Each individual in "Zorba" delivers an exceptional performance. The narrator (Debbie Shapiro), who sings and dances with the whole cast, has a wonderful voice. She is quite mysterious as she throws her tarot cards about the stage and predicts the future. She scorns Zorba when he spends Niko's money at he bar. Shapiro exhibits much feeling and emotion in her songs. She sets the mood of the play with her versatile voice. In one interesting piece, the narrator, the widow, and Niko sing a song called "The Butterfly." The images and illusions are stunning and precise — a cocoon changing into a butterfly.

A fascinating display of syncopation and timing is the "Miner's Dance." It represents the opening of the mine. Solely using long, wooden poles, several men create the musical accompaniment to the dance. All from what began as men simply working, the poles gradually become instruments right before our eyes. The result is an ingenious display of primitive music.

Anthony Quinn philosophizing

At play's end, it is time for Zorba and Niko to go their separate ways. Zorba tells Niko that they should part "like men," with no long good-byes. But even Zorba knows this cannot be. He and Niko have built an everlasting friendship that will not allow them to part "like men."

In what becomes an emotional farewell, Zorba and Niko embrace knowing they may never meet again.

Overall, "Zorba" is a beautiful play that is visually stunning. It is not your average revival, in that it has been staged into a musical. As for Anthony Quinn, well, his performance is touching and uplifting. Zorba would be proud.

Looking For Mr. Goodbar

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Anyone and everyone has at one time or another seen those little ads in the back of Philadelphia magazine, the Village Voice or similar publications. They are called "personals" by some. But to most they are labeled as strange, or just weird.

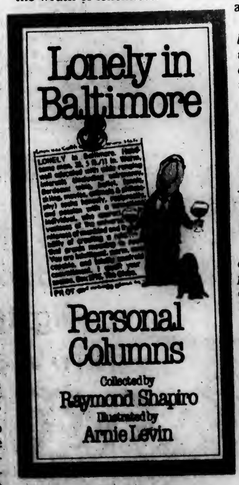
With novelty books being the latest item for mass consumption, here comes "Lonely in Baltimore," a book which features personals from all over the country. Compiled by Raymond Shapiro, "Lonely in Baltimore" is a collection of over 500 ads; most of them are very imaginative and quite interesting.

For the past fifteen years Shapiro has, in his capacity as business manager of the New York Review of Books, performed many — as he refers to them — "janitorial duties." One of them is to act as proofreader of the personal ads. During his years at the Review, Shapiro has come in contact with thousands of those "four to five line messages" submitted for publication.

After awhile, what had started out as a routine job became a hobby and then, a passion. "Every week I would take them home," Shapiro said, "and I would start to break them down and categorize them. I was suddenly a sociologist. Checking each one out, seeing where it fit in. I was looking at America evolve in a way that apparently not many other were familiar with, and I saw the gamut."

Through the years the personal has undergone a metamorphosis. In the 1960's, it was used as a discreet way to meet a friend, engage in group sex or to satisfy some other kink.

Today the personal ad is more and more being considered a respectable way in which to escape the wrath of loneliness.



Illustrated by Arnie Levin, "Lonely in Baltimore" shows that people who submit personals are for the most part, not losers.

There are many intelligent people "out there" who are looking for happiness. Most people are tired of the singles scene and are looking for an honest relationship. The creativity of some of the personals Shapiro has amassed is amazing. In fact, it is quickly becoming a new art form. For example:

Former Nun (or one planning to leave religious life) sought by man who is intelligent, educated, sincere, mid-forties, good-looking, financially secure. Object: marriage.

Repulsive, illiterate 107-year-old WASP seeks beautiful, young, Jewish, female intellectual. Pictures.

Hester Prynne's tired of Paul Revere, the Lone Ranger, and other fly-by-nights, seeks literate, large-hearted, anti-Calvinistic man with ironic sensibility and well-exercised laugh.

"I'm good-looking, 6'3", athletically built, 35, favorite color is plaid, and I'm so emotional I cry at card tricks. Looking for bright attractive lady.

Every man has a different idea of the beautiful. It is best to take the gesture, the shadow of the branch, and let the mind create the tree. In the midst of angles too often oblique and sensibilities too seldom acute, I do at least know that if the gesture is pure enough the tree must thrive. If one young woman can transcend the pragmatics of the absurd. . .

If nothing else, "Lonely in Baltimore" will make one chuckle and smile. It illustrates the lengths people will go to in order to find a mate. Also one may alter his or her opinion of the personal ad itself. By the way, I'm 5'7". . .

An Underground Happening

By MIKE NOONE

One of the more interesting groups on the successful Geffen record label this year is Berlin. The band, which hails from Los Angeles, has long been a favorite among underground, alternative music stations, and recently (in England) large audiences, due to their fine, live performances. Also, they have gained attention on some commercial stations, with the re-release of their first album "Pleasure Victim."

The album contains seven songs laden with melodic riffs incorporated into their techno-pop style. The band relies heavily on synthesizers, as most of the new "electronic" bands, but Berlin manages to mix traditional drum rhythms and electric guitar sounds successfully. This mixture produces a sound with rock 'n' roll appeal as well as a raw synthesized sound pleasing to more radical tastes. The music is also appealing to the dance crowd with its bouncy beat.

The group is led by John Crawford, who plays bass and synthesizer while composing the bulk of the songs as well. Although incorporating haunting and melodic synthesized overtones representing the modern changes in music, Crawford writes about the phoniness he observes in modern society. In the title track, "Pleasure Victim," he states: "Simple figures fill my mind/ Some I recognize/ Bodies always look the same/ never see their eyes." Another interesting song, "Torture", is laden with droning notes and a consistent, beat creating the mood of a painful love.

The backbone of the band is certainly its lead singer Terri Nunn. She fills the album with her strong, vibrant voice, lending powerful emotions to each song. She is comparable to Kim Wilde and Pat Benatar but Miss Nunn has her own style which has enhanced Berlin's success story.

Unlike many of the new groups who produce one hit on an album, each song on "Pleasure Victim" has melodic hook and a diversity of rhythms. This blend helps to make each song enjoyable and the album as a whole, highly entertaining. One song that is gaining some momentum "underground" is entitled "Masquerade" which was released on a "Flexipop" disc. "Tell Me Why" was also released as a single and the two have become dance club favorites.

Berlin is set for a U.S. tour in the spring and should have little difficulty capturing audiences with their unique and progressive style.

It's Good To The Last Drop

By JAYNE M. STUART

One of the most attractive features of Europe is all the quaint cafes there. It is a nice way to get off your feet while shopping or sightseeing. Well, Philadelphia has cafes, too. One of these little coffee shops is Franko's Caffe Calabria, located on South Street (near Second Street). It is an Italian shop specializing in cappuccino and espresso. The cappuccino and espresso is served with or without liqueur. There is a variety of liqueurs offered to choose from, such as Anisette, Sambuca and Amaretto. For the non-coffee drinker, Franko's offers hot chocolate that is creamier and richer than any "chocoholic" could dream of. The hot chocolate is made with a chunk of chocolate which melts down into tiny slivers through-out the drink. The prices for these coffee and chocolate delights runs from $1.25-$2.90.

FRANKO'S CAFFÉ CALABRIA

And for those of you who have a sweet tooth, search no further. Franko's is a veritable paradise of rich, creamy pastries and desserts. All the pastries are made fresh daily and the choices change from day to day. There are a few regular items such as Mocha sponge cake, which is made with Kahlua and espresso. They also offer a Baba Rum cake that has a cream filling.

To top it all off, they also offer homemade ice cream (gelati). The flavors of gelati vary somewhat but there is the traditional vanilla, chocolate, along with the typical Italian flavors of spumoni and pistachio.

Franko's Caffe Calabria is a nice escape from the busy streets. It is a quiet restaurant with lots of windows to view South Street from. The atmosphere is very relaxed and it is kind of dark. One could almost mistake the cafe for being closed because of its dark decor. There is a lot of natural wood and mirrors which makes for a cozy feeling.

So the next time you're down on South Street and your feet need a rest, stop by at Franko's Caffe Calabria. If you are a coffee lover, you surely will not be disappointed. If you love sweets, your craving should be abated. Bon Apetit.

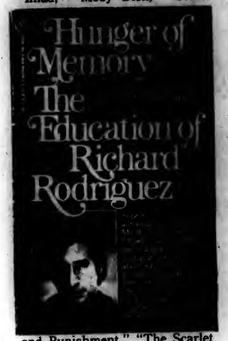
Assimilation Of Richard Rodriguez

By BARBARA SIMON

"Hunger of Memory" is the poignant autobiography of Richard Rodriguez, a Mexican-American. From his strictly Hispanic lifestyle in Sacramento, California, Rodriguez tells of his assimilation into the America culture. He struggles to not only learn English but to become a success. As an introvert in high school, he reads and reads and reads; "Great Expectations," the "Iliad," "Moby Dick," "Crime and Punishment," "The Scarlet Letter" and "Franklin's Autobiography."



"At 17, I may not have known how to engage a girl in small talk, but I had read "Lady Chatterly's Lover." Rodriguez becomes immersed in his quest for knowledge but along his journey he gradually becomes alienated from his family. Moreover, in college, Rodriguez finds to his astonishment that he is considered a minority by the "system." He is categorized and given special treatment because of his position and not because he is a well-educated human being.

Like Rodriguez the professional man, the book is a success because it gives an intelligent, organized and lucid account of his life. The humanistic insight into his past is frankly embryonic because every developmental stage of his life effects and determines his (life's) course.

The story pervades with irony. His parents cling to their language and traditions as they push their children into mainstream America. The parents realize that success for themselves can only be materialized through the success of their children. Hence, Rodriguez writes, "I never forgot that schooling had irretrievably changed my family's life."

Rodriguez replaced his Hispanic culture with education and also found that he had lost his past traditional faith. Instead of giving up his religion, he will "remain a liberal Catholic and worship at a traditional mass." It is uplifting to read about a positive outlook on parochial education. He credits his superb education to the nuns who instilled in him intellectual challenges. He writes, "I am writing about my religious life, aware that most of my readers do consider themselves religious." It is Rodriguez's personal prerogative to make this religious statement for his own sake and for "persons like his good friends now, those who, smiling, wonder why I am more than an hour late for their Sunday brunch.

The concluding chapters reveal the climax of his story. In college during the '60s, a time of demands, revolt and change, Rodriguez is agitated by the special attention given to minorities, especially the opportunities offered to him. Rodriguez feels that he does not in any way represent these socially disadvantaged Mexican-Americans. He resents discrimination and reacts by not accepting any of the attractive job offers made to him as a "minority" student.

Today, Richard Rodriguez is a middle-class American man. His autobiography exemplifies his talent, intelligence and his ability to be understood. As a student, a Catholic or a member of any minority group, "Hunger of Memory" offers reflections of many recognizable experience. It is a different kind of story, where Rodriguez the human being, is ultimately born.

The Formula For Success

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

It's almost impossible not to like Christopher Cross. Here's a singer-songwriter who surrounds himself on his albums with many of the music industry's best vocalists and writes self-revealing emotional tales that seemingly ask his listeners to share his thoughts.

Cross' second album, "Another Page," is simply a continuation of his highly successful debut album "Christopher Cross" released in 1979, a work that propelled Cross into the musical spotlight after a seven year effort. The album was named Best Album of 1980 and captured Cross a Grammy as Best New Artist. Four hit singles from the lp,including "Sailing," have resulted in sales of four million copies.

While Cross delivers a good live show, his strength is in his studio work. The musicians on this album include Art Garfunkel, Michael McDonald, Don Henley, J.D. Souther, Carl Wilson and Karla Bonoff, a veritable who's who of contemporary rock.

The current hit from the album, "All Right," is a bouncy little number that features Cross and that other great crooner, McDonald. The two of them ooze such optimism that it is as if all the world's troubles can be temporarily forgotten.

The next great love song of the '80's is featured on this album. A duet between Bonoff ("Personally") and Cross on "What Am I Supposed to Believe," is a number that will break the hearts of all the hopeless romantics.

Cross is a fair lead singer with vocals enriched chiefly by emotion. The Texas-born singer formed the nucleus of his group, Rob Meurer, keyboard and percussion, Andy Salmon, bass, in 1978 and they bounced around the bar circuit and made unsuccessful demo tapes until landing a recording contract with Warner Bros. in 1977, two years after the addition of drummer Tommy Taylor.

Other good songs on "Another Page" are "Deal 'Em Again" and "No Time for Talk," which features a solid sax solo from jazz great Tom Scott. One disturbing note is the lack of a solid rocker like "Ride Like the Wind" from the debut album. Cross rides the middle line on this album with mostly easy listening material.

"Another Page" is successful in that it follows the same pattern of his first work, blending believable lyrics with smooth instrumentals. The songs are all light, cheerful and ultimately optimistic. It's going to be another spring and summer of Christopher Cross on the radio.

Cheyney Outlasts Wildcats

By LAUREN SEAVER

With only about a month left in the season, the women's basketball team plays only five more games before it must head off to the Big East tournament. Plagued by many injuries, the team now holds a 10-11 record. Last week, the Cats added both a victory and a loss to their record after playing against La Salle and Cheyney State. With a final score of 74-64, the Wildcats were victorious on La Salle's home turf.

Last Saturday Nova was defeated by Cheyney State. Yet, in spite of the loss, the women played an excellent game. Though Cheyney State ranks fourth in the nation, the Wildcats managed to keep pace with their opponent.

At the half, Villanova trailed by only eight points. Junior guard Nancy Bernhart scored a game high 18 points while senior forwards Rosemarie Burke and Kathie Biesel scored 14 and 10 points, respectively. Other scorers in this game were Katrina Messenger, Mimi Coleman, Andrea Burton, Kathy Razler, Noreen Kemether and Kym Goodnight. The Wildcats lost, 81-63.

The women's basketball team has encountered many bad breaks this year. After capturing the Big East title last year and placing third in the AIAW Final Four, the team was anticipating a similar season. Though hopes and confidence have not diminished, the record now stands at 10-11.

According to head coach Harry Perretta, the setback this season is "a combination of losing players and many injuries." Last year's squad had much height, but this year there is a lack of height. The tallest player is six feet, 2 inches, while the other Wildcats are all under six feet.

According to Perretta, the injuries to starters are what has really hurt the team. Over Christmas break, starter Sandy Williams injured her knee and is now out for the season. Razler suffers from a knee injury while Burke sprained her ankle earlier in the season. Also, Coleman was out for a while due to the flu.

According to co-captain Beisel, "over Christmas we didn't even have enough people to do warm-ups."

This year is the first in three that Villanova has not been ranked among the top 20 teams in the nation. According to Perretta, the Wildcats have incurred more losses this year than in any other season. "My lowest record was 17-8 which was in my first year at Villanova," said the coach. "Up to this point our record was 88-23 and we've incurred almost half of those losses this year."

Two outstanding players are Biesel and Nancy Bernhardt. Both are All-American candidates. According to Perretta, "They are two of the outstanding players in the Big East Conference."

The Wildcats now focus on getting healthy and gearing themselves to play well in the Big East Tournament. According to Biesel, "We still have a chance. If we win the Big East, we automatically get a bid to the Nationals." The main objective now is to win the tournament held on March 3-4.

And the Wildcats feel they can do it. "If we win this year, we'll prove we're better than our record." said Razler.

NCAA Policy Shift Spurs Controversy

First of two parts.

By JOE MARUSAK

It has been only four weeks since the National Collegiate Athletic Association gathered in San Diego and decided to make some moves. But already a controversy has arisen within the ranks of the organization over those shifts in policy.

At the root of the dispute is Proposal 48, which NCAA convention delegates passed on Jan. 11 and goes into effect in August 1986.

Proposal 48 says that an incoming athlete who wishes to play a varsity college sport must have at least a 700 SAT combined score and a 2.0 high school grade average.

In the eyes of the majority of college presidents, faculty representatives and athletic administrators who were in San Diego, the stiffened requirements are a good idea. These educators argue that the new measure will significantly reduce the number of academic scandals plaguing many schools.

Yet there are others who vehemently oppose Proposal 48. For the most part, this group consists of black educators who claim the rule is racist.

"Racism wasn't even considered"

— Dr. Aceto

"In my nine years here I have never seen so many presidents who were (in San Diego) to lobby for and against this particular issue," says Ted Aceto, director of athletics at Villanova University.

Aceto, along with Father President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. and the Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A. (chairman, Board of Trustees) represented Villanova at the 77th annual NCAA convention.

"But I would think, if I recall," Aceto continues, "predominantly all the black school presidents were against Proposal 48 right there on the floor of the convention. It was quite evident they were trying to make it a racial thing."

The Villanova representatives did not think so. "In our decision making racism was not even considered," explains Aceto.

Proposal 48 thus got an approving nod from the Villanova group. Even so, Aceto claims the measure will not have much of an effect on university athletics.

"I believe the majority of our athletes fit that bill (the new standards)."

Daniel T. Regan would probably agree with Ted Aceto. Regan, a Villanova philosophy professor, is the academic advisor for all varsity athletes — scholarship or no — on campus.

"We have our own criterion for eligibility at Villanova, which is higher than the NCAA regulation currently in effect," Regan says.

At Villanova, the varsity athlete must maintain a 2.0 in order to participate in a varsity sport. More than one failure and he or she becomes ineligible.

So, of Proposal 48 were to be put into action tomorrow, its impact on Villanova would appear to be insignificant.

But that's Villanova. According to Regan, the problem will be with certain high schools.

"We're going to ask the high schools to get their act together. I don't think the urban high schools are going to do that."

And if they don't do it," Regan continues, "then the students in the urban high schools — and most of them are minority students — are in fact not going to be able to achieve 700."

Any suggestions?

Regan has heard of at least one. Instead of the 700 requirement, a certain sliding-scale might work.

"If Villanova's average is 1050-1100 (SATs), we shouldn't take anybody who is less than, maybe, 800. And if a black college's average board score is 700, maybe they shouldn't take someone less than, say, 500."

In other words, each college should stick to their present requirements for incoming students when recruiting athletes. (Villanova centers around the 500 mark in both verbal and math; a predominantly black school, Grambling, lists no SAT requirements).

Still, Regan does not find the 700 request too unreasonable, especially with the four-year gap between eighth grade and college.

"If you could guarantee the high schools could get their act together," he affirms, "it would probably be even less prejudicial than it probably is."

Next week: The opposition to Proposal 48 speaks out.

Quintet Bids Farewell Tonight at Field House

Senior Night: The Last Hurrah

When you look over your shoulder
And you see the life
When you think it over
do you ever wonder?
Jackson Browne,
"You Love The Thunder"

By KEVIN McKENNA

Five Villanova seniors will probably do just that tonight when they play their final basketball game in the Field House. For three of my teammates, it will be business as usual when they start against a vastly improved Pittsburgh team. However, for two of us, it will be quite an experience as the game marks our first starting assignment on the collegiate level.

Before the opening tap though, Stewart Granger, Marty Luschaunig, Mike Mulquin, John Pinone and myself will be honored with our parents during a pre-game ceremony. In addition, senior manager Tom Nally, equipment manager Bill Higgins, trainer Joe Pendrak, their parents and the senior cheerleaders will also be introduced to the capacity crowd.

So, after four years of practicing and traveling; watching films and winning and losing, what does it all mean? What memories will the five of us take with us when we leave the Field House floor for the final time?

"I will always remember playing with Rory Sparrow," said Stew, who will leave Villanova as the school's all-time assist leader. "Rory was not a great player talent-wise but he always got the job done because he was so smart. I learned so much from him," he added.

Stewart also pointed to three NCAA Tournaments as another thrill, while, on the negative side, he looks upon his play against North Carolina as his biggest disappointment. Ironically, Stew will have a chance to vindicate himself this Sunday when we take on the Tar Heels again. For the most part, Stew now overlooks the wins and losses.

"It's been a great experience playing with my four teammates," Stew explained. "All of us made contributions in our own way and because of it we became very close," he continued, "and developed a genuine love for each other."

After being cut his freshman year, Marty proved his determination by making the team for the next three years. For his efforts he was awarded a scholarship last semester.

"Aside from the Georgetown victory, I think our trip to El Paso was the biggest thrill for me," Marty recalled. "I had only been on the team for a couple of months and we went down to Texas and won the tournament. I'll never forget our side trips to Mexico," he added.

One thing Marty claims he won't miss is the early morning workouts we had in the fall. However, that's not the only thing he's anxious about avoiding.

"I won't miss Coach Mass standing in front of me at the games," Marty said with a grin. "I'll probably be able to see better next year from the stands."

The best way to describe John is to use language that is plain, simple and straightforward. Hence, he is a fierce competitor who comes to play every night and is consistent day in and day out. During the last four years, John had led the team in scoring and finished first or second in rebounding.

"It's been a great experience," John said. "I would do it over again if I had the chance because I certainly don't have any regrets."

Well, there is one. According to John, he is still disappointed about coming so close to making the Final Four last year yet falling short. The Bear, however, will have one more chance as we all do.

Final Four or not, John will take many pleasant memories with him.

"I'll never forget our last game in the Palestra against Georgetown," stated John. "And I'm sure I won't forget our last one in the Field House, either."

For four-year letter-man Mike Mulquin, it goes a lot deeper. A physical, all-around player who gave as much effort whether he was starting or coming off the bench, Mike has become a favorite among many.

"I'll miss Villanova," Mike said. "I'll not only miss the fans and our entire program," he continued, "but the many friendships I made on the team and throughout campus."

Like John and Stew, Mike has vivid memories about last year's Eastern Regionals in Raleigh, N.C.

"Just the fact that we made the Final Eight was a great thrill," he said. "Every minute of the tournament is exciting and I'm looking forward to it again this season."

During my career, I have usually been the last one off the bench, so it is fitting that I comment last. Once again I am limited, if not by time, by space. I could echo my teammates' sentiments but that would take too long.

Consequently, I just say it has been a great experience wearing the Blue and White for so long. Sure, there have been sad times, but they are far outweighed by the good ones. Four years ago I walked-on the team. Tonight I will walk off the court for the last time with the following words in mind.

People stay just a little bit longer
We want to play — just a little bit longer
Maurice Williams, "Stay"

Women Set Marks

By BEVERLY REILLY

Through faith in themselves, the Wildcat women tracksters caught a glimpse of heaven on earth last Saturday at the Princeton Relays.

Within the walls of the Jadwyn Gymnasium, the women tracksters reached two NCAA qualifying times, broke two school records and set a new meet record.

Junior Patty Bradley, sophomore Veronica McIntosh, and freshmen Vickie Brown and Joanne Kehs combined their efforts in the two mile relay to capture first place within the highly competitive field. The two mile relay team ran the impressive time of 8:54.7, qualifying for NCAA Division I Nationals. With that same time, the Wildcats set the new two mile relay meet record.

Combining the talents of both Bradley and McIntosh, along with freshmen Sharon Margaretha and Tracy Carter, the Wildcats placed second in the mile relay. With their time of 3:48.81, the Wildcats reached another NCAA qualifying standard. Also, the mile relay established a new Villanova school record in that race.

In other relay action, the sprint medley team placed fifth in the event. The promising all-freshmen team consists of Carter, Anne Silknitter, Judy Palmer, and Beth Lyons. With their time of 4:11.8, the sprint medley team broke the school record.

Highlighting individual events, sophomore MaryEllen McGowan was in the spotlight for Villanova. Amidst the tough competition, McGowan ran a strong race to take fifth place in the two mile run. With her time of 10:35.71, McGowan broke the school record, which was her own, of 10:44.0. Having been named to the All-New Jersey Cross Country team, McGowan always exhibits an enormous amount of determination and dedication.

Frosh Duo Good As Gold

By MICHAEL BETZ

John Gargula and Pete Maloney have, through a complicated series of events, been dubbed the "Golden Boys." That's "gold," as in "gold medal." For Gargula and Maloney, Villanova's freshmen swimming standouts have already won eleven races between them. Add that to their nine second place finishes and eight third places, and the duo has finished in the top three in 28 of their 31 races. The "Golden Boys" have quickly made a name for themselves.

Maloney is 6-0 and built with the lithe frame that every swimmer wishes were his. "Pete's got a natural ability — a God-given gift," Assistant Coach Darryl Linder remarked. "He's the most gifted swimmer on the team." Maloney, who attended Wissahickon High School in Ambler, Pa., was a High School All-American in the 100-yard backstroke. The engineering major was recruited heavily by area schools, but chose Villanova because, "I liked the general atmosphere."

Gargula, at 6-1, is only slightly taller than Maloney, but is built like a brick pool. "John Gargula is an animal — and you can quote me on that," Linder proclaimed. "John gives 110 percent all the time. He's a real madman." Gargula, like Maloney, was a High School All-American, at Bishop Noll High School in Hammond, Indiana. He was recruited by many of the Ivy League and Big 10 schools, but opted for Villanova because of its accent on the individual. "It's not a real big school," Gargula explained, "and they (his recruiters) offered me a good education."

THE "GOLDEN BOYS": Freshmen Pete Maloney and John Gargula have shined all year long for Coach Ed Geisz. The two have placed in the top three in 28 of their 31 races.

Head Coach Ed Geisz has nothing but praise for his "Golden Boys." "I feel that they're the two outstanding freshman swimmers in the U.S.," Geisz said. "They could swim for any school in the country." Geisz was also quick to point out that the "Golden Boys" are much more than just swimming wonders. "They're both very good students. They love competition, they're coachable, and they're delightful to have around."

For freshmen, the "Golden Boys" have a very practical approach to competitive swimming. Gargula began racing when he was seven-years-old. Maloney when he was eleven. Once in high school, each realized that his swimming excellence could pave the way to a college education. "In high school, I knew that swimming would help pay for college tuition," Gargula acknowledged. Maloney agreed, but added that he enjoyed swimming because "You push yourself as hard as you can. You're in total control of yourself."

Away from the pool, Maloney and Gargula are roommates and best of friends. "John keeps me on my toes," Maloney offered. "He keeps me alert." Gargula returned the compliment. "Pete's eccentric. He can clap with one hand."

Eccentricities not withstanding, the "Golden Boys" have arrived on the Villanova swimming scene. And, by all indications, they plan to be around for a while.

Swimmers On Roll

Riding a five meet win streak, the men's swimming team began last week with an impressive win over Temple. With both teams equally matched, the two teams stayed within four points of each other until Wildcat divers Steve Leonard and Carl Sparano swept first and second in the one-meter optional diving, giving the Cats a lead and an eventual 65-48 victory.

The Cats traveled to St. John's Saturday and defeated the Redmen 66-47 for their third Big East win of the season. Matt McKean paced Nova's performance as he captured top honors in the 200-individual medley in 2:10.94 and 500-yard freestyle in 4:55.74.

Finishing with Rutgers on Monday, Villanova lifted its record to 10-4, when they won 69-39. The Wildcats took seven of 13 events including the 400-yard medley relay as Pete Maloney, Jose Alvarez, John Gargula and Mike Gallagher finished in 3:45.1.

The squad takes its talents on the road this week, facing Navy on Feb. 9 and Army on Feb. 11.

Cats Fall to B.C., Topple UCONN

BEARING DOWN: Connecticut native John Pinone lays in two points during the Cats 86-79 win over the Huskies of his home state.

Staff Photo by Joe Fresno

By TOM REUSCHE and CHARLES GUIDA

In their best display of aerial fireworks this season, the Wildcats shot a scorching 60 percent from the field Tuesday night to turn back the Connecticut Huskies, 86-79.

Connecticut may have marvelled at the Wildcats' outside shooting, but winning Coach Rollie Massimino did not exactly gloat over this victory.

"I guess it was not a particularly pretty game," said Massimino. "One thing in particular, our intensity level was horrendous."

Horrendous or not, the Wildcats rediscovered the art of perimeter shooting, last practiced here by Tom Sienkiewicz. Eleven of Stewart Granger's 15 rainbows found the twine, while freshman Dwight Wilbur netted four of five in his second start of the season.

The Huskies' first half defense collapsed on John Pinone and Ed Pinckney, holding the inside duo to a combined seven points. Seeing no openings underneath, and facing a 29-22 deficit at the 6:21 mark, Granger shot over the defense for ten points in a three minute span to give the Cats a 34-33 lead.

Fourteen of Villanova's 19 first half field goals were perimeter jumpers, but their gaudy 66 percent accuracy was necessary to combat the Huskies' own hot shooting (56 percent), as the half ended Villanova 42, UConn 39.

Earl Kelley, UConn's sensational freshman guard, put the Huskies ahead, 47-44, early in the second half, with two of his team high 20 points.

The Cats ran up a 26-13 tear over the next ten minutes to take their biggest lead, 82-67. The spurt was punctuated by nine points from the virus-plagued Pinone. Despite easing to a 15 point lead with 3:57 remaining, the Cats' inability to hit free throws almost let the Huskies back into the game.

Forced to send Villanova to the charity stripe, the Huskies' strategy could have worked. The Cats missed seven one-and-one opportunities in the final minutes, including four straight by Pinone, Frank Dobbs, Granger and Dobbs again.

Fortunately for the Mainliners, UConn could only climb within 10 points with 56 seconds remaining. By then, the plug was already pulled by the Huskies.

There wasn't much Villanova could do against a super-charged Boston College team last Saturday. The Eagles took advantage of a lax Cat defense, and helped by a jam-packed Roberts Hall crowd that almost shattered the windows when it roared, kept themselves in Big East contention by beating the Cats, 76-70.

The Eagles dominated the first half up to the 4:11 mark when Dwayne McClain, top scorer for the Cats with 18 points, hit a baseline jumper that tied the game at 25. Within the next two minutes, Villanova began to run with the ball to put eight straight points on the board. At the end of the first half the Cats had taken a 35-32 lead.

The second half proved fatal for Villanova as their defense fell apart. "We didn't defend down the stretch," said Coach Rollie Massimino. For the Cats that's as rare as snow on the Fourth of July. The Eagles showed no mercy, outrebounding the Cats 57-31.

Both teams were deadlocked in a classic barnburner througout the second half until 5:07 when Martin Clark banked in an eight-foot jumper to give the Eagles a 58-54 lead. Villanova struggled from then on, only coming within two at 1:09 on an inside shot by Ed Pinckney.

"If you don't get a second shot, you're in trouble, and we gave up too many seconds shots," said Massimino. "Playing here is really difficult," he added.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Ed Pinckney

This week's Bud Athlete is Villanova men's basketball star Ed Pinckney. Pinckney's performance in the Georgetown game on Jan. 31 helped Villanova come back from a 10 point deficit at halftime to capture a 68-67 victory. "E.Z. Ed" grabbed 22 rebounds and scored 27 points, both personal bests.

With just seconds left in the game and Villanova trailing 67-66, Pinckney was fouled and calmly sank two free throws to give the Cats the lead for the first time, 68-67. Georgetown was unable to score and the Wildcats came away with a well-deserved victory.

Most of his game-high 27 points were scored against Georgetown's big man, Patrick Ewing. Pinckney went to the boards consistently throughout the game. "He asserted himself offensively," says assistant head coach Mitch Buonaguro.

As a freshman last year, Pinckney set six freshman records and three Villanvoa individual records. He held the freshman marks for most rebounds, most blocked shots, free throws made, free throws attempted, best field goal percentage and best rebounding average. He holds Villanova records for most blocked shots in a season and a game and best field goal percentage.

With a tough schedule ahead as the season slowly winds down, the team will be looking for Pinckney to continue playing the way he did against Georgetown.

"For his size, Ed is very versatile," says Buonaguro. "Most big men can do only one thing but Ed is an all-around player. He has the ability to take over a game. He is one of the top players in the Big East."

Nova Stays On Right Track

By PAUL MACCHIA

The weekend of Feb. 4-6 saw the Wildcat track team compete in two meets, the Los Angeles Times Invitational Meet on Friday and the Princeton Relays on Sunday.

At the L.A. Times meet, outstanding performances came from sophomore John Marshall and senior Mike England. Marshall won the 600-yard run with his fastest time ever (1:10.6) defeating runner up Demetreus Cook by .8.

England ran a personal best in the 1000-yard run crossing the line second behind Scott Rider in 2:10.7.

Marcus O'Sullivan finished fourth in the mile run in 4:01.84 behind American outdoor record holder Steve Scott and fellow Irishman Ray Flynn.

Senior Rodney Wilson ran a 7.26 clocking for the 60-yard high hurdles but placed fourth in his heat behind eventual first and second place finishers Greg Foster and Toni Campbell.

On Sunday, the Wildcats ran in the annual Princeton Relays. Freshman John Keyworth ran his best performance this year for the indoor season. Keyworth placed 3rd in the 3000-meter run with a time of 8:13.17. Teammate Brian O'Keeffe was just a stride behind for 4th place. O'Keeffe was clocked in 8:14.36.

Martin Booker placed fifth in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.59 seconds. Senior Russell Palmer placed 7th in the 35 lb. weight throw (49'8").

The mile relay and distance medley relay placed second and third respectively. The mile relay team of Jim Adams (49.3), Craig Morris (48.6), Martin Booker (50.1), and Carlton Young (47.7) placed second to Virginia Military Institute with a time of 3:15.64. The distance Medley team comprised of John Borgese (1.54.4), Chip Jenkins (50.2), J.J. Clark (3:02.6) and Tony O'Reilly (4:19.4) took third behind Georgetown and Rutgers. They were clocked in 10:06.51.

In the upcoming weekend, Wilson (55m Marshall (600m), England (1000m) and the mile relay team of Adams, Morris, Marshall and Young will be competing in the Vitalis Olympic Invitational at the Byrne Meadowlands Arena in Rutherford, New Jersey. The remaining Wildcats will travel to the Midwest to run at the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Icecats Falter

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

In Villanova's final Division III contest of the season, the Icecats were forced to accept a disappointing 8-3 loss to Upsala College. The game marked the return of assistant captain Chris Mancuso, who turned in one of the finest performances of the season.

The first goal of the game was scored by Nova sophomore Tim Curran, on assists from captain Frank Segreto and Sophomore Jamie Huston. The other Villanova tallies came from the sticks of freshman John DiMaio and sophomore John Padova.

This will be the last edition of the Villanovan until March 11.

'83-'84 Tuition Increases Proposed

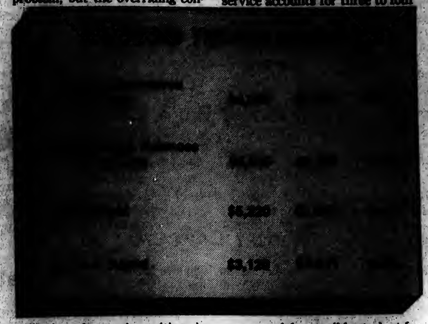
By LINDA BOND

Tuition hikes ranging from 10.8 percent to 11.5 percent and room and board rate increases of 10.3 percent for the 1983-1984 academic year are expected to be proposed by the University Senate Budget Committee at today's Senate meeting.

Should the increases be adopted by the Board of Trustees as proposed by the Senate Budget Committee, tuition for students in the College of Arts and in the College of Commerce and Finance would jump 10.8 percent, from $4,990 to $5,420, while Engineering and Sciences and Nursing students would see their tuition fees rise 10.9 percent, from $5,040 to $5,590. Tuition for Garey Law School calls for the largest increase, 11.5 percent, to $5,820, as compared to $5,220 from the previous year.

Room and board fees would rise from the current $3,120 to $3,441 per year.

Vice President for Financial Affairs Gary Fenner said, "This is going to be a communications problem, but the overriding contributing factor in tuition increases is the interest on the $25 million dollar bond issue, which is covering Senate priorities that were approved last year." Debt service accounts for three to four percent of the possible student fee increases.



It is expected that other projected University expenditures for 1983-1984, have forced student costs up, including a six percent budget increase for faculty and staff, a projected seven percent increase for certain business office and Falvey Library expenses, and a projected 10 percent budget increase in telecommunications, legal and accounting fees and postage.

Fenner said students should have expected this year's tuition rise last year because the University is now in the midst of refinancing its bond issue.

The planned athletic complex, expenditures in the computer sciences program, modernization of engineering labs, and proposed dormitories and dining facilities all account for the use of Villanova's bond money.

Fenner said that most colleges will increase tuition this year by as much as Villanova, if not more. He feels Villanova is still a "nice price" and a good buy in the college market.

Certain assumptions were used in fomulating the University's budget.

Revenue is generated in large part by student tuition and fees and the new freshman class is targeted at 1550. In addition, government grants, IAG funds from PHEAA, are expected to remain at the same level.

An anticipated 25 percent fallout from the 1981-1982 level of private giving and grants is expected as a consequence of Covenant II Campaign giving. Also expected is lower revenue in other investment income reflecting lower interest rates on short term investments.

An increased income from the University store and Connelly Center reflects a larger volume and higher cost of goods sold and there was an increased income associated with Big East Conference television coverage.

Blizzard Shuts Down Villanova

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

A record breaking snow, dubbed the Blizzard of '83, dumped 21.3 inches on the Philadelphia area cancelling two days of University classes and curtailing numerous activities.

The predicted blizzard which began last Friday morning forced the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the University, to make the final decision to cancel classes on Friday.

With the emergency situation over the weekend, "Fr. Driscoll agreed it would be insane to hold classes on Monday," said the Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president of administration.. Not enough parking space was plowed to accoommodate the number of cars driven to campus by the commuters, faculty and staff.

Commuters, constituting 50-60 percent of the student population, need the main parking lot on Lancaster and Ithan and the lot was not cleared in time for classes to be held on Monday.

The lower Bartley parking lot was not plowed until late Sunday night, but the staff was asked to come in, if possible, so that offices could be opened. The cancellation on Monday applied only to classes.

It is "quite liable" that the two snow days will effect the school calendar. The two reading days scheduled for the end of May could be used for make-up classes. The decision will be made "very soon," according to the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of academic affairs.

"Plowing of the student parking lots was delayed because there was no cooperation by the students in moving their cars from the lot," said Rice. "I was out in the lot on Monday night and the harrasment by the students, toward the men plowing, was very inconsiderate."

Students complained that the snowplows were blocking in their cars, preventing them from shovelling their cars out.

"When you take a hard look at the situation, maintenance and food service did a remarkable job in fulfilling their service in this worst blizzard of the century." said Rice.

Those contracted to plow the area on campus were working all day on Saturday and continued thru Monday, "stopping only to eat and sleep," added Rice.

Rice attributed the ability for classes to resume on Tuesday to the "superb" effort put out by maintenance.

"Most importantly," said Rice, "The residents on campus were well provided for during the blizzard. They had all they needed on campus so did not need to go out during the snowstorm. They were lucky to have the extra time to catch up on some studying, relax or enjoy the time socially."

To enable the food service staff to be on campus for work, the bliz-

University Senate to Meet

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The Villanova University Senate will meet for the first time this year to focus on an agenda that includes the presentation of the proposed 1983-84 student tuition rates.

Also to be covered is correspondence from Board of Trustees Chairman Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., and Edward Murray, assistant to the president, a motion from the Senate Rules and Review Committee seeking the elimination of three Senate subcommittees and the Library Committee report.

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Alvin Clay is expected to present to the Senate the proposed tuitions that feature close to 11 percent increases in the undergraduate programs and a 10.3 percent room and board increase. Included in the report will be a listing of the revenue and expenditures assumptions employed in formulating the budget.

Following Clay's report, a constitutional amendment will be proposed by Dr. Richard Neville, chairman of the Senate Rules and Review Committee. The resolution will call for the elimination of three subcommittees of the Academic Policy Committee: the Admissions Committee, the Faculty/Student Committee and the University Research Policy Committee.

The disbanding of the committees was suggested in December 1980 when the Senate Academic Policy Committee reviewed all the subcommittees and determined the three to be expendable.

At the October 15, 1982, Senate meeting, resolution US 82SS-S-2: "that the University should increase the hours Falvey Memorial Library is open" was remanded to the University Library Comittee for a study to be presented at today's meeting.

The Library Committee has approved several changes after examining the feasibility of expanding the current library hours.

The Library Committee agreed that the library should add four hours to its schedule Friday and Saturday nights, allowing the facility to remain open until 9 p.m. During midterms and finals, the committee has recommended that the library be open Sunday through Thursday until 1 a.m.

The committee requests an additional nine people to service the expanded hours at a cost of approximately $500 a week, not including the cost of extra security.

The Senate meeting will be held in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 4 p.m.

Project Sunshine

Sunshine volunteers: plans are underway for April Sunshine Day. Watch the Villanovan and the bulletin board in Dougherty for details. Reserve Mar. 8 at 12:30 p.m. for planning meeting. New and old volunteers are most welcome!

Emergency Food Drive

Emergency food is needed for needy people in Philadelphia drastically affected by this week's snow. An S.O.S. came to the Social Action Office hoping Villanova could help. Drop off food or blankets at 121 Tolentine or call 645-4079. Thanks for anything you can do.

Peace and Justice

Anyone interested in becoming involved in social issues such as nuclear freeze/international peace movement or U.S. intervention in El Salvador, please contact Fred Slattery at 642-6709.

Lent '83

Lenten mission: Rev. Ralph Monfaro, O.S.A., will be a guest speaker at all the daily liturgies from March 14-17.

Penance service: A common penance service will be held at 5 p.m. in the Main Chapel on Mar. 23.

Easter retreat: An Easter retreat held at Kilkridge. Please sign up in Campus Ministry. March 30 to April 1.

Balloon Day

There will be a general meeting for all those interested in working on Balloon Day on March 9 at 4 p.m. in St. Rita's Chapel. Your help is needed to make this day a success.

Rugby meeting

For all those interested in playing for the Villanova rugby team, there will be a meeting Sunday at 7 p.m. in a location to be announced through flyers on campus. New members are welcome. If unable to attend, contact Fred Murphy at 525-9402 in 118 Sullivan.

Black Cultural Society

The Black Cultural Society's variety show originally scheduled for tonight is postponed until March 18 in St. Mary's auditorium.

Society of Women Engineers

There will be a meeting of the Society of Women Engineers on Feb. 21 at 7:30 p.m. in 212 Tolentine Hall. Our speaker will be Mr. Frank Falcone. Be there!

Psychology Club

Dr. Robert Stokes of the Villanova University Career Development Center will speak on "Job Opportunities for Psychology Majors" on Feb. 22 at 12:45 p.m. in 305 Tolentine. Everyone is welcome!

Concerned About the Environment?

If you feel that we must perserve our wildlands for future generations, that we are entitled to clean air and clean water, that our parks are essential and must be protected, and that environmental awareness is not just a secondary consideration, then perhaps you would be interested in helping to establish an organization on campus dedicated to that cause. If you are interested or would like to know more about this group, which would seek to broaden awareness of issues and events concerning the environment through speakers and field trips, please contact Greg Johnson, 415 Stanford at 527-5504.

Air Force

The Air Force will be showing a film, "Air Force in the 21st Century," on Feb. 23 at 2 p.m. in Corr Hall, second floor. Pizza, hoagies and refreshments will be served. For information, contact Mary Lou Cubbage, Career Development Center, or Sgt. Walt Anchors at 352-4422.

Dormitory Plans

Architect's sketches of the new dormitories and the new athletic facility will be on display next week in the Student Government Office, 204 Dougherty, during office hours.

Tau Beta Pi

There will be a meeting for all members of Tau Beta Pi on Feb. 21 from 3:30-4 p.m. in 202 John Barry. Nominations and election of officers for the 1983-84 school year will be held during this meeting.

Wildcat Investment Club

There will be a recruitment meeting for all students, faculty and friends interested in joining the most exciting organization on campus. Learn about the stock market while investing for a profit. Bring your checkbook and questions to 106 Bartley on Feb. 22 at 12:45 p.m.

Freshman Record

Anyone who is interested in working on the Freshman Record, please stop by the Villanova Union Office and sign up. Editor positions are still available.

M.A.S.H. Celebration

There will be a M.A.S.H. celebration on Saturday, Feb. 19 in the Day Hop Cafeteria from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Army fatigues or nurses uniforms requested. Student I.D. required. Tickets available in the R.S.A. office, 219 Dougherty Hall.

Tickets

Student tickets available for first game of the Big East Tournament. Tickets will go on sale March 8 from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. at the Field House ticket office.

200 tickets available — two per student with student I.D. Cost: $5.

Tickets available 1 DAY ONLY!

Career Development Workshops

The Career Development Center is offering the following workshops next week: Resume Writing, Feb. 21 at 10:30 a.m.; Interview Process, Feb. 22 at 3 p.m.; Interviewing Skills, Feb. 23 at 10:30 and Effective Job Techniques, Feb. 24 at 3:30 p.m.

The workshops are 50 minutes long and will be held in the Bryn Mawr Room of the Connelly Center. If interested in attending, please sign up in the Career Development Center, Corr Hall.

College Work Study

College Work Study has been extended to May 31, 1983. For additional CWS awards or increases, contact the FAO, Kennedy Hall.

Winter Concert

On Feb. 19 the Villanova Singers will once again be lifting their voices in song to celebrate the season of winter. Their special guests will include the Marist College Women's Glee Club and the Women's Glee Club of Chestnut Hill College. The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. in St. Mary's Chapel and admission is free. Don't miss this musical extravaganza!

Dance Marathon

All are welcome to come dance for 12 fun-filled hours in the Alumni gym beginning at 6 p.m., Feb. 19. Music courtesy of WKVU. Donation is $1.50 at the door, proceeds to benefit spring break projects in Appalachia and New York City. Refreshments will be served.

Volleyball Marathon

The Easter Seal Society of Philadelphia will continue to recruit teams for the Century 21/Easter Seal Volleyball Marathon through Feb. 21. The world's largest volleyball marathon, expected to include almost 250 teams, will be held in the five-county Philadelphia area on Friday and Saturday, Feb. 25 and 26.

Teams raise money by obtaining donations from friends, relatives and businesses before the event. All teams play for two hours. Valuable prizes will be awarded to teams raising the most money. Top money-raising teams will appear on the Easter Seal Telethon on March 26 and 27.

Registration for the 24-hour event is $75 per team. For more information on locations and time, call Easter Seal's Volleyball Hotline at (215) 879-1005.

Improv Group

The Villanova Improvisational Club will meet Feb. 21 at 8 p.m. All those interested are encouraged to attend. For place and further information contact Ann at 525-1645.

Writers Needed

ATTENTION! Budding Vincent Canbys and Clive Barnes — this is your chance. The Entertainment section of the Villanovan is looking for writers to review concerts, books, movies, restaurants, albums, conduct interviews with personalities, etc. Need we say more? Come to the Villanovan office, 2nd floor Dougherty, or call 645-7206 for more info. Ask for Ratso.

Villanova Theatre

"The Lady From The Sea," a lyrical drama by Henrik Ibsen, will be the next production at Villanova Theatre. The show, directed by Irene Baird, will run Wednesday through Saturday, Feb. 9-12 and 16-19.

Henrik Ibsen, known for his brilliant portraits of women in "A Doll's House" and "Hedda Gabler," created in "The Lady From The Sea" yet another memorable heroine, Ellida, a woman torn between devotion to her husband and a longing for the life of total freedom she led before they met. The light and color of a Norwegian summer are the background for the play, which is one of the most romantic and appealing of Ibsen's works.

All performances begin at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theatre. Tickets are $5 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6 on Friday and Saturdays, with student discounts and group rates available.

For tickets and information, call the box office at 645-7474 or the theatre office at 645-4760.

Theatre Lecture

On Feb. 25, JoAnne Akalaitis, director of the Mabou Mines acting company, will speak at Villanova University's Vasey Theatre at 2 p.m. Akalaitis, who has been with Mabou Mines since 1970, conceived and directed their most recent production, "Dead End Kids, A History of Nuclear Power," which will be playing at the University of Pennsylvania's Zellerbach Theatre Feb. 23-27. Winner of the 1981 Obie Award for outstanding production, "Dead End Kids" is an exploration or nuclear power from the alchemist to the present.

Akalaitis' talk at Villanova is free and open to the public. For more information, call the Villanova theatre department at 645-4760.

Philosophy Lecture

The Philosophy Department is sponsoring a lecture on "Philosophy and Business" on March 7 at 8 p.m. in 215 Tolentine.

Guest speaker is John Ladd, professor of philosophy, from Brown University.

C.E. Guest Lecturer

Dr. Fazil T. Najafi and the civil engineering department are sponsoring a presentation by Dr. Thabet Zakavia, director of the transportation unit of the Delaware Valley Regional Planning Commission, on the "Year 2000 Plan" for the Delaware Valley region. The lecture will be given on Feb. 21 at 2:30 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. All are invited to attend.

Need a Tutor?

Gamma Phi Honor Society sponsors a free tutoring service for any business student in need of help. If interested, contact Mrs. Coyle's office in 327 Bartley.

Cultural Film Series

The Cultural Film Series presentation for Feb. 20 and 21 is "The Godfather," Francis Ford Coppola's classic crime epic. The film will be shown on Sunday at 3:30 and 7 p.m. and Monday at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. The price for students, faculty and staff is $1.50.

Transformer to be Installed

By HENRY DI BENEDETTO

"The proper transformer to accommodate the additional fuses in the Field House will be in operation late this week," said Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance. The Butler Annex was recently shut down as a result of an overload of fuse capacity in the Field House.

"Transformers that were removed from a local Villanova monastery a few years ago will temporarily be used to power the Field House," said Trucks. "The transformers are stored under the stadium and will be installed in the Field House."

"These transformers are nearly three times the size of what is now installed in the Field House," added Trucks. The Field House currently operates with a power load of approximately 260 amps. The newly installed transformers can hold a power load of 600 amps.

"However, because of the age of the transformers, which is over 35 years old, the power load will be set to only 400 amps," said Trucks. If the transformers were relatively young, we could use the full 600 amps."

The Butler Annex.

With this temporary plan in effect, it will give Trucks and his staff time to plan for the future. According to Trucks, it would have taken 16 weeks to obtain new equipment to counter the problem. This would mean that the Butler Annex would remain closed, and very limited power would continue in the ATRA building. "Now, we can carefully make an intelligent study for a permanent solution to this mess and still keep the complex in operation," explained Trucks.

"This short term solution will cost about $6000," Trucks explained. "Right now, the strategy is to get the Field House back into full operation quickly for the least amount of money possible.

"As for the long term plan, we are still unsure of what we want to do," said Trucks. Trucks said that he and his staff are working on the permanent solution now. Trucks did not wish to comment on the plan until one had been firmly established.

Heating Cost to Decrease

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

As part of an energy conservation program, the federal government is matching funds with Villanova University to save energy costs by lowering the ceilings in Alumni Dorm.

The alumni ceilings, being dropped from a height of 13 feet to approximately 10 feet 6 inches, will save the University about $10,000 in energy cost per year.

Alumni Dorm Room.

Alumni, one of the oldest buildings on campus, was considered a high priority. The ceilings qualify under the federal government's energy program since it was discovered as a source of inefficient heating.

The federal government matches the cost of construction at a 50-50 ratio, but at a set limit of $22,500. Villanova received the highest grant amount given to any college or university in the country for the energy conservation projects maintenance listed on a grant application. The list included lowering the ceilings in Alumni Hall, John Barry, and portions of Simpson Hall, and the insulation of attics and roof areas for several buildings.

The energy conservation project's cost for Villanova exceeds the cost amount matched by the federal government "in spite of the substantial amount given by the federal government," according to Ed Meagher, maintenance supervisor, "but the University will definitely be saving money in future energy costs.

The alumni ceilings in the public areas are in the process of construction now and the balance will begin as the students vacate the building for the summer.

Construction should be completed before the end of July," according to Meagher.

The lowered ceilings will lead to the restriction of lofts in Alumni Hall, according to Janosik. "Plans are likely to retrict furnishings to those provided by the University," added Janosik.

A federal grant matched the university at the 50-50 ratio in cost for the recent installation of radiator controls in Fedigan Hall. "Unfortunately, the controls have already been vandalized and the students will pay for the work that will have to done," said Meagher.

"The vandalism could adversly affect any federal grant given to the University in the future," continued Meagher.

Residence Life had been applying for a federal grant to help provide the money for the new residence halls which are planned to begin construction this spring, "but the federal government money is drying up," said Janosik.

Graduate Student Wins Settlement

By DAVID POMA

A Villanova University graduate student has been awarded $125,000 in a lawsuit charging the University with negligence. The University, however, is liable for only $6,250.

The lawsuit stems from injuries the student suffered when she was struck by a car crossing Lancaster Avenue at Ithan Avenue in November 1980.

The student, Linda Hoffman, 27, sued Radnor Township, the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, the driver of the auto, David Schroeder, and the University, charging that all were negligent and could have prevented her injuries. The suit alleged that the University was responsible because its main parking lot is located opposite the campus, across Lancaster Avenue.

A Delaware County jury declared that Hoffman was 49 percent negligent because she crossed against the traffic light, and that Schroeder was 36 percent negligent. PennDOT, Radnor Township, and Villanova were each judged five percent negligent.

During the court proceedings, the question of an overpass for pedestrians crossing Lancaster Avenue arose.

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for student life, said that the University has considered an overpass several times in the last few years, but that it was impractical because "students would not use it." He added that "We are very much concerned with the safety of our students, but the intersection is not unusually dangerous if pedestrians and drivers use due care" when passing through the intersection.

Neville commented that cost was not a factor in the University's unwillingness to build an overpass. "The main reason is that an overpass would require a lot of extra steps that students would not take. Many of them would still cross at street level."

Neville added that the University has joined with Radnor Township in several studies involved with making the intersection safer. He said a "walk/don't walk" light system was considered, but would be ineffective. "Evidence shows that this kind of system is more dangerous than what we have now.

Hoffman will receive only $18,750 of the $125,000 award. Schroeder's insurers settled out of court for $100,000 before the lawsuit was brought to court. The balance of the $18,750 will be paid by PennDOT and Radnor Township.

Blizzard Shuts Down V.U.

zard forced 29 of the personnel to spend Friday night at St. David's Inn. The University's contingency fund covered the cost for the 15 rooms the food service staff occupied.

Leslie Gies, director of food service, was "very appreciative" to those who inconvenienced themselves to stay near campus, away from home on Friday night.

"The blizzard may have restricted many of the food service staff from making it back to school on Saturday," said Rice. "It was even questionable whether they could get home safely on Friday night."

Besides cancelling classes, the '83 blizzard opened up Friday night's basketball game as general admission. "There were students on campus who wanted to go and were able to, unlike many off campus who had tickets," said Ted Aceto, director of athletics. Friday's game against Pittsburgh opened general admission at 8 p.m. by the request of Aceto.

The campus post office never received any mail delivery on Saturday just as the Villanova post office did not receive a delivery from Philadelphia. "The delivery in to the major cities was not bad," said Les Brown, postmaster at Villanova post office, "but the cities had trouble getting to the suburbs."

The volume of mail was abundant and a concentrated effort was made on Monday to get the mail delivered on time. "We caught up 100 percent," said Brown.

The campus post office had its "busiest day," according to post office employee Ralph Iadarola, "since there was two days mail delivered on Monday and there was already a lot of mail being delivered for Valentine's Day."

Connelly Center's business dropped "considerably," according to Tony Alfano, assistant of business operation. The food sales fell substantially without the commuters and night school students there to eat their meals. The lack of personnel forced the Belle Air Terrace to close early, but sandwiches and some hot food was available in the ice cream shop when the Belle Air closed early," said Alfano. Staff members who live on campus worked overtime to hold the hours of personnel unable to work.

Security advised the library to close all day Saturday reporting the insufficient parking situation and hazardous road conditions. The library closed early on Friday, at 2 p.m.

G.P.A.'s Analyzed

By PAULA SOLLAMI

The national grade point average (g.p.a.) of college students is on the rise, according to Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs.

"This shows that students are beginning to realize the seriousness of maintaining a high g.p.a.," stated Gallen. "A student's g.p.a. affects their life in college and life after college."

Villanova requires all students to have at least a 2.0 g.p.a. in order to graduate. All students with a g.p.a. less than 2.0 are subject to probation or dismissal, while juniors with less than a 1.80, and freshmen with less than a 1.60 are also subject to dismissal.

The University defines a student in good standing as one with a cumulative g.p.a. above 2.00.

"On the whole, a student's average tends to rise considerably from freshman to senior year. This is due to the fact," Gallen explained, "that students become more familiar with the expectations of the professors here. Also, the students work harder after they make their initial adjustments to the school."

Honors at graduation are also determined by g.p.a. A student with a 3.90 g.p.a. receives summa cum laude honors, while a magna cum laude graduate carries a 3.75 g.p.a., and those with a g.p.a. of 3.50 receive cum laude honors.

A student's ability to continue graduate studies is determined in part by g.p.a. The Villanova School of Law requires a 1.67 g.p.a. for a student to advance into the second year. Second and third year students must maintain a 1.75 average to remain in school.

In order to participate in extracurricular activities, Villanova students must have a certain g.p.a. Student athletes are required to maintain a 2.0 average for four years. Fraternities and sororities require an average of 2.5. The Greek organizations provide mandatory study hours for its members, while varsity sports provide a regularly scheduled study hall for its athletes.

Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs.

In addition, student athletes receiving scholarships, or grants-in-aid, are required by NCAA and Villanova regulations "to maintain a satisfactory scholastic record," according to the text of Villanova's letter of intent form.

Paying the Debt: Tuition Increases

It should come as no surprise to Villanova students that the annual tuition increases proposed for 1983-84 will once again be in double-digit figures — close to 11 percent for undergraduates. What should be recognized and explained is that established priorities originally called for a six or seven percent tuition increase but that the additional percentage increase was included to cover the debt service on Villanova's $25 million bond issue.

A University Senate study recommended last November that with a predicted inflation rate of approximately 5.7 to seven percent, tuition increases should be minimized to keep Villanova competitive. A six or seven percent tuition increase was applauded at the time as satisfactory to all. Also called for by the priorities committee was the provision of sufficient funds to cover the bond issue that will finance the construction of new dormitories, the new Field House and capital improvements. This was recognized as one of the highest priorities because of the contractual obligations it involves. What wasn't revealed at the time was that the insurance against default on the bond was to be provided by students in the form of increased tuition. Villanova already depends on student tuition for over 90 percent of its revenue.

Some short-sighted critics argue that the built-in percentage increase should not be added to the present Villanova student's tuition because they will not benefit from facilities and improvements while at the University; it is estimated construction will last approximately two to four years. It is a known fact that students will always face the reality of paying for future improvements without actually using them. However, one question remains: when establishing priorities for formulation of the 1983-84 budget, was debt service on the bond originally expected to be included in student tuition or was it simply tacked on when other funds weren't expected to be realized?

The University has met one priority at the expense of another. We recognize the importance of fulfilling the contractual obligation, especially one involving enormous amounts of money that could shape Villanova's future as an educational institution. If the projects are completed on time and meet the expected standards, it will firmly establish Villanova as a 'modern,' growing University. But it remains to be seen how many students will be able to afford to attend this modernistic campus.

What price success?

Same Old 'Snow Job'

Once again Villanova students have been subjected to hazardous conditions resulting from the inadequate removal of snow on campus. The storm, which dumped a record 21.3 inches of snow on the Philadelphia area, was forecast well in advance by the metropolitan area's news media; the Villanova maintenance crew had ample time to prepare for it.

Yet, the maintenance crew's inexcusably poor performance in removing the deluge would lead one to believe otherwise. That there were no serious injuries is a minor miracle.

The condition of walkways on campus was deplorable. Paths were covered in sheets of ice, making their navigation a considerable accomplishment and a truly memorable experience. It was indeed worth the inconvenience and safer walking through the snow than risking life and limb on the paths.

The parking lots, in a word, were a mess. It seemed as though the efforts of maintenance to adequately clear the lots were merely perfunctory. Because of the quality of snow removal, or lack thereof, several drivers who usually parked in the Lancaster Ave. lot were forced to park instead on Lancaster Pike itself, resulting in a $10 ticket courtesy of the Radnor Police Dept.

We, at the Villanovan, appreciate the fact that because of its sheer volume, clearing the snow was no easy task for maintenance. But, the crew could have and should have done a better job.

Letters to the Editor

Learning to Accept the Truth

To the Editor:

Try as I might, I cannot help but resent a certain group of people: everyone else. This group of other people is most often called society, and the words "them" and "they" are frequently employed in reference to this body of persons. My resentment stems from the fact that throughout my life, "they" have inhibited my every impulse, guided my every activity, and looked over my shoulder whenever I've done anything even slightly clandestine or fun. And, most significantly, "they" tried (quite unsuccessfully) to prevent the full expression of myself, sexually and otherwise.

Now you are probably thinking, "So what? Big deal, everyone is bound by societal guidelines." That is true. Imagine though, as bizarre as it may sound, that you are not just "anyone," but a homosexual.

The concept is hard to grasp. If you have a good imagination, however, and a knowledgeable idea of what being gay might be like, you will understand the problems "they" bring upon gays. Paranoiac thoughts such as, "What will my friends think?" "What will they say if they found out?" and "Will my parents still love me?" will run through your mind. The most frustrating question of all (and nearly impossible to answer) is, "Why am I gay?" Most gays experience a frustrating struggle. Having to lie and deceive family and friends is painful.

After several years of thinking, attempting to answer these questions and others, the pressure from society will lessen. No longer will you feel abnormal, nor will you be insecure. Realizing there is no way to change your sexual preference, you will develop a positive self-image and feel like an ordinary human being. You may even gain the courage to tell your closest friends, who (as in my case) will accept your sexuality because it obviously plays a small part in any friendship. You are relieved.

But the point of this letter is not to sum up my life, or the life of any other homosexual. Rather, I want to convey a few points to the Villanova community.

First, homosexuals are as diverse a group of individuals as heterosexuals. The popular stereotype of the gay male — the lisping, limp-wristed, effeminiate "fag" is just that; a stereotype, and is not accurate. On the contrary, homosexually-oriented persons have varied lifestyles, with nothing in common except for their preference of sexual partners. We are males and females; grown adults and teenagers; Catholics and Jews; educated professionals and blue-collar workers; and more specifically, we are part of the Villanova community; whether students, faculty, or administrators.

It is simply unfair that the societal guidelines that all of us experience are more like iron bars for homosexuals. Gays do not deserve to lose jobs, careers, and their lives due to some uncontrollable genetic or environmental cause. Both restricted and irritated, I have one wish — and this is for the benefit of homosexuals as well as every other repressed minority: I wish that all the members of "society" would think for themselves and consequently lessen society's rigid rules of behavior. Human beings are separate, individual singular persons, each of whom has a mind of his/her own, so why conform with "them?"

Please remember the next time you are tempted to repress, mistreat or make fun of a homosexual, that gays are normal. More importantly though, remember to stop and think if what you feel reflects the deep beliefs from within you, or whether it is just an automatic result of your conformity with society.

To the Editor:

The Wildcats won a lot more than a basketball game this past Sunday in North Carolina. They gained the respect and country-wide acclaim they deserve as a first-rate team that does not know the meaning of the word "underdog."

The victory over the top-ranked Tar Heels brought a sense of unity to the university that was invigorating.

Thank you on behalf of the students at Villanova to Coach Massimino and the entire team. They aroused our emotions and renewed the feeling of being proud to be a Villanovan.

'The Hunt'

To the Editor:

I was appalled at the advertisement for "The Hunt," in the Connelly Center. Being a Marine-option N.R.O.T.C. student, I have often found myself having to react to comments that we are being taught to kill; that the Marine Corps, and the military in general, is wrong; that we have no place at a Catholic university and even an occasional cold stare from certain Augustinians. Yet, these people who question our purpose are willing to allow a "game" which simulates murder. If one were to examine the training that we receive, they would see that we are taught and we practice a method of organization, leadership, self-discipline, personal integrity and honor. "The Hunt" practices, under the guise of play-acting, the systematic extermination of other human beings simply because their names

Armenti's Book Offers Insight on 'Divine Power'

In the contemporary academic setting which is increasingly dominated by courses in business, physical sciences and sports, an interesting turn of events has recently occurred. At the beginning of January, 1983, CBS Morning News aired a story that student enrollment in religion courses has shown a dramatic rise during the past year. Anchorwoman, Diane Sawyer, suggested that this movement might have been spurred by the troubled times now facing America, and noted that some major universities have actually experienced a doubling in the number of students enrolled in religion courses.

Of the many questions thoughtful students are asking, one of the most popular — and, perhaps the most universal — concerns the nature of the force(s) predominating our lives. Is it "the stars?" Is it "economics?" Does ineluctable "Fate" dictate our destinies? Or, are we in the grip of "Divine Providence?" In this age of cultic and "fundamentalist" movements, one age old answer resounds: "the workings of the world are the acts of divine power."

In the Judeo-Christian traditions the nature of this "divine power" is revealed in the Bible. Some of these traditions which have become popular over the centuries understand the Bible to contain the revelation of a clearly monotheistic belief in a God who is a Supreme Being (or, Being-Itself), and who is Omnipotent (being able to do anything). God therefore, is ultimately a transcendent entity who utilizes "power." This is the position of the major traditions, but is it the position of the Bible, particularly the Hebrew Scriptures, and does this notion stand up to reason?

If this question seems hard to answer — don't worry! You are right — it is difficult! And, to sober minds, it is even challenging! In fact, after reading Elements of Divine Power in the Old Testament by Dr. Joseph Armenti, an alumnus of Villanova (University Microfilms International, no. 8229337, Michigan, 1983), the meaning of "divine power" appears to be a far more complex matter than anyone, including many leading thinkers and scholars, has ever imagined.

Armenti's book is the most recent of his works and is by far his most difficult one, utilizing, as it does, sources in seventeen languages.

To give thorough-going review of a work such as this is beyond me, therefore, I am confining my remarks to a few of the broader points in the book.

Armenti begins his book as he did his research by scrutinizing the opinions of eminent philosophers, theologians, and scholars in various fields on the subject of "divine power." In the process he discovered that fundamental notions contained in the original Hebrew Scriptures had been obliterated in the history of Western thought. "Revelation" was concealed in the philosophic concepts of later ages, beginning with the Hellenistic era and continuing down to our own times. To get at the "truth" behind the distortion of centuries, Armenti erected a new method based on a criticism of previous methodologies which contributed to — if not caused — this obfuscation.

Applying the new method, he begins to rectify matters by examining and defining the various elements comprised in the notion of "power" in our times. This examination is carried over to the original Hebrew texts and their ancient translations into Greek and Latin. Having gained a clearer idea of what is encompassed by "power," he goes on to discuss the relationship of "power" to "things," and then, to "God." Along the way, Dr. Armenti rejects the standard equation of "God" with "Being." "The confusion of millenia may be resolved by understanding that "God" ('el) in the Hebrew religion is not our present-day metaphysical entity "God," but rather a radical metaphor for the various "dynamics" of those phenomena and events which taken together we call "history" and "nature." (p.31) Likewise, after much deliberation, he rejects the idea that the Hebrews were en masse "monotheists," believers in only one "God." Armenti concludes his philosophical work with a unique, comparative study of the different ways in which "divine power" is represented among the various forms of religion.

As I have already said, only a few broad points could be touched on in this review. Much, much more could be gained from this book. It is, on the whole, an uncommon book, a book which provides rational, thought-provoking answers to some of the most difficult questions which we can pose; it is at once a resource book, and a rational revelation which belongs in every college and university library.

Aside from the moral transgression of this most dangerous "game," we cannot ignore the invasions of privacy, and even rapes and murders, which have occurred at other universities during similar "games" and have prompted many universities to ban such activities.

Guns are very dangerous weapons and should never be treated in a flippant manner. Furthermore, the use of a deadly weapon is a very serious matter, and one that should not be joked about. As a Marine officer I hope that I never have to even lift a hand against another human being; but should I be forced to, I assure you that I will not take pleasure in it, nor will it be fun.

As to the question of our place on campus: Who would you rather have leading our armed forces, a Villanova graduate who has had four years of Catholic education and values the quality of peace, or someone educated in a totally military environment who may have no concept whatsoever of religion? Personally, I prefer the former.

Snow Removal

I write this letter in the hope of getting some answers and, more importantly, some results. After being notified three days in advance of the impending blizzard that hit our area last Friday, the Villanova administration, headed by President Driscoll, neglected to fulfill its duties and was not prepared to deal with the effects of the storm, namely on the Lancaster Avenue parking lots. Not only were they not prepared they added insult to injury by waiting until Monday to begin the clean-up. How can a school that charges students $35 a year for the clean and safe use of the parking facilities justify this kind of behavior? Because of their negligence, students were forced to find weekend parking anywhere they could — including the ever dangerous Lancaster Avenue.

On Tuesday, commuting students were left with the dilemma of finding parking in a lot with randomly placed piles of snow. The reason for the piles of snow was because the clean-up that did take place was one of the most inefficient jobs that I've ever seen.

It would be a different story if this was an isolated case, but it's not. Every time it snows, the students that pay for the use of the parking lots are penalised because it takes the school at least 12 hours to start the clean-up procedures.

I call on President Driscoll, the administration and the Senate to resolve this problem before users of the parking lots are again faced with the task of either plowing through snow drifts or competing with piles of snow for the few parking spaces that are available.

R.A. Firing

To the Editor:

This letter is in reference to the recent firing of Chris Kenny, Resident Assistant for Stanford 1-C by Marc Thibodeau, South Area Coordinator.

We, the members of 1-C, would like to express our opinion of Chris as an R.A., Marc Thibodeau as coordinator, and to the matter at hand.

The general consensus of the members of C-wing is that Chris has done an outstanding job as a R.A. This favorable consensus has been reflected in the campus wide survey conducted on the performance of each R.A.; Chris was rated among the top 3 percent of ALL R.A.'s at Villanova. Chris has commanded the utmost respect from each resident of 1-C, based on his fairness in carrying out his duties.

In regard to Mr. Thibodeau, very little has been seen of him due mainly to his irregular office hours. This observation has been made by those upperclassmen, who witnessed the job done by the former coordinator, Peggy Dierkers. Mr. Thibodeau seems to possess a grudge against Chris, which has adversely affected the entire wing. Mr. Thibodeau, focusing unwarranted attention to C-wing, has slandered it's members with spreading blantantly false rumors.

In conclusion, we know Chris Kenney as both a friend and a R.A. He is being treated unjustly, based on personal grievances with Mr. Thibodeau. We demand 1) Reinstatement of Chris Kenney, 2) An immediate review of Mr. Thibodeau's performance as South Area Coordinator.

Computer Dating Service Formed

By LINDA BOND

In an effort to "get himself a date," junior electrical engineering major, Mike Taclosky, designed a computer program which now makes available a free computer dating service to Villanova students.

Taclosky spent a month designing the dating program in January and now runs the game through his personal account at the University, making impovements and corrections in the system periodically and getting rid of "garbage" messages when necessary.

To play the game, an individual may log on to any VAX terminal and type in the command DATE-GAME. Taclosky said that if a student does not have a computer account, he may use a friend's account.

The program asks a student a series of questions about himself or herself and then asks a series of questions concerning the qualities in a prospective date he or she would like.

Information such as height, weight, eye color, hair color, year in school, and particular college is gathered in the game. Typical questions, some of which are answered on a scale of 1-10, include: "Do you like expensive dates or inexpensive dates?; How much do you love animals?; Would you feel more comfortable in jeans or a tuxedo?; If you had to describe your behavior as an alcoholic drink, would it be an old-fashioned or a screwdriver?; Are you a leader or a follower?; Are you an introvert or an extrovert?; Are you a conservative or a liberal?"

Taclosky said that when the dating service was first advertised in the Villanovan three weeks ago, the program was run over 200 times that day and computer center operaters were "furious."

To date the program has been run over 900 times, 400 times by men and 150 times by women. Taclosky said a lot of people run it twice and that the program is designed to use the most current answers. He also said it is possible to run an imaginary person through the game so as not to release your information but receive it on those people who match up with you.

A student will be given three descriptions of three different people who complement their own description but not personal names because everyone uses code names in the game.

To meet the people you match, game users must type in the command CALL-DATE to send a message to the other person's account via their code name. Receivers of messages muest then contact senders if they want to contact the sender at all.

Taclosky said anybody can run the program. No computer background is necessary.

He said more men have run the program because more engineers have accounts and most of the engineers at Villanova are men.

"A lot of people have commented that it has been a lot of fun," said Taclosky, "and there is obviously a need on Villanova's campus for this. I came up with the idea coming back from a ski trip in Vermont. I was thinking about the second semester and I wanted to get a date."

Taclosky said that the computer dating service is good publicity for the University's computer center. The game is not run through the Villanova Union or the student activities office however, Taclosky said. "There is no money involved."

Taclosky worked for the University over the summer as a programmer for CAUSE-CAD.

Snow Days Lift Student Spirits

By CAROLYN MILLER

On Thursday night the news media were predicting a snowy blizzard. By Friday morning, a blanket of snow had covered the Philadelphia area. For Villanova students, the worst snow storm since 1909 began with the phrase: CLOSED — 528 — Delaware County. The weekend had begun!

Sugartown Mews' hallways shook with shouts of joy, "Go back to bed!" The all-nighter for Friday's test was unnecessary, but it did not matter. For the Villanova residents of the Regency Apartments, the 21 inches of snow was the beginning of an adventure!

The race was on. Students scrambled to stock up on food and liquor supplies early in the day; there was a long weekend ahead. "Soap maniacs" were able to watch entire episodes of "All My Children" and "General Hospital" — in luxury.

By nightfall, the snow was knee-deep. Mothers had called to confirm that their children would not drive. Parties and dances alike were postponed until further notice. Yet, neither snow nor cold gusts of wind prevented loyal friends from trudging through the night to celebrate the mini-holiday.

The quarters were flying, the mugs were clinking and the TV was tuned in to the "Wildcat Wonders." While at the Field House, campers flocked to the free game to enforce a Pittsburgh defeat. Midnight snowball fights followed in honor of the 'Nova triumph.

The Saturday morning ski trips were soon forgotten. At 10 a.m. that morning, it was time to start shoveling. The parking lot looked like a sack of flour. A few lucky ones were able to walk through it without falling. Racing engines, spinning wheels, buckets flinging snow and muscular arms all contributed to digging out the cars buried under snow drifts.

Upon bombing thy neighbor or roommate with a snowball, one found thyself face down in the white stuff. There was equal opportunity for snow people, as descriptive snow women were constructed on the terraces.

That evening, as wet socks and gloves adorned drying racks, monopoly tournaments and domino strategies occupied many Villanovans. While on campus, rumors were heard of wild Stanford parties, dorm semi-formals and frat sweetheart dances.

Off-campus residents could not get to church on Sunday, but they could pray for no school on Monday. A phone call from an ecstatic friend and, alas, the word was out — school was cancelled for Monday! After all, the main parking lot was not cleared.

Villanova fans were in North Carolina — in spirit — to witness a monumental victory over the Tar Heels that afternoon. Campers once again flocked to the Field House that evening for a Wildcats' pep rally. Those biased sports announcer's predictions were proven false.

By Monday morning homework had once again become a reality. In mid-afternoon, Villanovans struck with "cabin fever" were seen walking to the Acme for exercise. Cars were still skidding on the ice. Since the sidewalks lining Lancaster Avenue had not been plowed, walking in the streets against buses and "monster" plow trucks was treacherous.

It was Valentine's day. The mail had been delayed and the roses did not arrive. No good news that day, school was opening again on Tuesday.

Early Tuesday morning there was a search to find a parking spot in the still uncleared lot. Like "deja vu," it was once again a scene of skidding cars and bruised bottoms.

There was a happy ending to all of this. The big snow of '83 was the best "pre-spring break" present for which any Villanova student could ask. Besides, maybe mid-term exams will also be postponed.

Dancers Warm Up

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The Villanova Dance ensemble gathered to exchange hellos, while discarding their warm-ups, and dispersed quickly as a voice commanded "kick-line!," "NOW!" Each graceful silhouette was outlined in black lycra and illuminated by a silver sequence cumberbund and matching bow tie. The top hats were now in place and the leg warmers, once removed, revealed fishnet stockings. Next the black high heeled shoes gave way to a unison of rythmatic steps. All at once the melody swept them away.

The Villanova Dance Ensemble under the leadership of Jean Havor has been a part of the University's activities since the fall of 1981. Havor brought to Villanova 20 years of experience in dance choreography. She has produced various attractions throughout the Montgomery County area.

"I really enjoy working with the young adults. They're enthusiastic and dedicated individuals. We don't try to star any of the dancers, but try to create a blending of unique individuals. Each contributes what talents they possess to the groups efforts," commented Havor.

Prior to the beginning of school, the performing dancers spent a week of dance camp at Villanova. The dance camp was instrumental in providing the extra work and concentration needed to prepare for their schedule of appearances. The ensemble now spends at least four hours of group preparation for weekend performances.

"We live for the performances and so does Jean. Her dedication and enthusiasm sets an example for all of us," commented dancers Kathy Kirk and Katherine Palmer. Palmer then added, "She tries to give everyone a chance, but her high expectations demand a great deal come showtime."

Havor initiated the dance ensemble two years ago. As with all new charters, the ensemble spent the first year organizing and establishing its foundation. What began with 12 members is now a cast of 26 dancers. Only eight of the original dancers have returned making the remaining members rookies.

The performers, having cut through the red tape, are now a performance oriented group. Their performance during Homecoming and Parent's Weekend attracted a large number of spectators.

'Getting There' Can be the Best Part of Any Vacation

By PETER BERKERY

During the upcoming spring break, many Villanova students will be traveling to places like Florida or Bermuda with only one thought in mind — to get as far away from Villanova as possible. In choosing their mode of travel, most people decide on flying because it's fast and convenient. Too often we're in such a rush to get to where we're going that we don't have time to plan an interesting journey. Unfortunately, when we fly we don't see many places other than our departure and arrival points. So, if time allows, travel by bus, train or even car, is highly recommended.

Riding on a bus or train allows us to escape the narrow confines of our own world and to intimately explore other worlds, other places and, most importantly, to meet other people. This can be the greatest learning experience in the world, even when traveling in our own country. We call ourselves Americans, but how familiar are we with America and the people who live here? How does a Villanova student differ from a Maine lobsterman, a Georgia farmer or a Texas rancher? How do cities like Memphis or Dallas differ from cities like New York or Chicago? The answers to these questions are best found at ground level.

Over the semester break, I had the opportunity to take a bus trip from New York to Tucson, Ariz. via Memphis, Tenn. My main reason for the trip was to visit my brother and his family in Tucson, but for reasons previously stated, I decided to take a bus rather than a plane. The entire trip took two-and-a-half days.

Between New York and Washington, D.C., I sat next to a middle-aged black woman who told me that she lived in Washington, but she had been in New York looking for an apartment. She had lived in New York all her life and only recently moved to Washington. She hated Washington because she didn't know many people there and she didn't feel safe walking the streets alone. She explained that it wasn't easy to find a place on a limited income but she was going to keep on trying.

Late the next day, an elderly gentleman got on the bus in Knoxville, Tenn. He proudly pointed out the World's Fair grounds and explained what some of the exhibits were like. He recounted how in his "younger days" he had traveled all over the world on tramp steamers. "I liked Australia best, wanted to live there but the wife wasn't too thrilled with the idea," he said. His home town now is Blue Ridge, Tenn., located right in the middle of the beautiful highlands region of Southwest Virginia and Northeast Tennessee.

Early the next morning we made a breakfast stop in Naples, Texas. The only other customers in the small cafe were some big ranchhands wearing cowboy boots and hats. They didn't look too friendly, but no need to worry; across the street was a small pink and white brick building containing three small offices. The doors read: "City of Naples Police Department," "Office of The Mayor" and "Judge's Chambers."

A few hours later, we arrived in Dallas, Texas. We had an hour to walk around while the bus was being serviced. A young businessman took time out to explain what a few of the many new glass buildings were. Of course, the big question was "Where is J.R.'s ranch?" He patiently replied that we couldn't possibly see it from downtown, but maybe as we left the city we'd get a glimpse. "You know, from the way they take the shots for Dallas, you'd think J.R.'s ranch was the only one out there, but actually there's a whole bunch," he said.

That night, just outside El Paso, I was awakened from my sleep by a man who shouted, "Border patrol," and then proceeded to ask everyone on the bus if they were American citizens. I wanted to reply, "No, I'm actually Fidel Castro in disguise," but the patrolman didn't seem to be in a humorous mood. Along the Texas-Mexican border, illegal aliens are no joke.

Hey kids, listen up . . . hot off the rumor mill this week . . . remember the trustee committee formed recently to study the return of football? . . WKWC understands word is out that a certain university "constituency" (hint: they wear white collars) is lobbying to have football brought back only at the bush league Division III level . . . everyone else wants either I-AA or II . . . look for the alumni and selected others in the vociferous minority to be a touch outspoken on this issue . . . speaking of angry as hell . . . how 'bout them dawgs over in maintenance? . . . wonderful job those guys have been doing, eh? . . . where did they learn the art of snow removal anyway? . . WKWC thinks it must have been through a correspondence course, and that the lessons on blizzards were lost in the mail . . . and while we're on the topic of snow jobs . . . WKWC sees that the annual double-digit tuition increase is on its way again . . . what we want to know is, why is tuition going up at a rate almost twice that of inflation? . . . is it because someone put the C-Center's financial wizards in charge? . . . we'll never tell . . . moving right along . . . . . seems that somebody's set up a computer dating service for all the Ms. and Mr. Lonelyhearts on campus . . . is it really true that the girls in Good Counsel weren't allowed to sign on? . . . anyway, speaking of frigid . . . Ensemble Prepares Routine

Since the Fall, their schedule has included the Devon Ball Room, Marion Mercy Motherhouse, the Inglis House for Incurables and various nursing homes. They have also added neighboring malls including the Gallery, King of Prussia and the Willow Grove Park Mall.

The exposure has enabled the dancers to gain experience, not only in routines, but in the ability to adapt them to varying environments. Havor explained, "each place that we perform is different. The area allowed for a show is often much smaller than the area in which we practice. Often, on the spot changes are needed. The group has learned to make the necessary changes on their own. Gabrielle Zampini added, "Once we had to change everything in order to dance around the trees that were planted within the dance area."

Ruth Galvin said that the dancing experience was not the only advantage. "We have come to know different types of people and this has been very rewarding," she said. "When you hear the 'thank yous' and see the happiness in their smiles, it all seems worth it," agreed a number of girls.

Cindy Keane also pointed out that "it teaches you a lot about dedication and hard work, but the returns are very fulfilling and a lot of fun."

What does the future hold for the performing artists? Havor hopes to present a showcase theater at Villanova. She explained, "the showcase is similar to an invitational of dance groups, to perform in a day's collection of shows. I also plan to have different feature choreographers come in to provide the group with a variety of style in routines."

Havor expressed her need of male performers as the only major weakness in the program. "I have brought in three experienced male dancers from other Ensembles. Dancers Steve Spadafora, Steve Runk and Tom Pileggi are quite experienced, and dedicated dancers and have contributed a great deal to our success," said Havor.

Travelling

By the time I reached my ultimate destination of Tucson, I had been to towns I never knew existed, and had met some very interesting people. Most of these people had never even heard of Villanova and didn't really care whether it existed or not. Unfortunately, I had to fly home to New York. I was in a rush to get back to Villanova in time for classes.

Police React to DUI Law

"One of the best effects of this new 'drunk driving law' is the concern it has raised among the public. People are beginning to realize the seriousness of drinking and driving and the needless deaths it causes every year." That was Radnor Police Chief Maurice Hennessy's reaction when asked about the new 'drunk driving law' in Pennsylvania. The law, which went into effect on Jan. 14, 1983, holds more serious penalties for individuals who are convicted of driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol (D.U.I.).

First offenders of the new D.U.I. law may apply for Accelerated Rehabilitative Disposition (A.R.D.); however, it is not automatically granted. If granted A.R.D., the offender must pay a fine, make restitution for any damage, pay the cost of prosecution, pay for and complete an alcohol safety course, accept a license suspension of up to one year and meet any other court-imposed requirements. If the driver is denied A.R.D. or elects to go to trial, a conviction will result in a fine of not less than $300 and a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment of at least 48 hours. All persons convicted of D.U.I. will have their licenses suspended for one year.

According to Hennessy, the law gives policemen more of a chance to justly enforce the statute. Now police can administer a field test to establish probable cause prior to bringing anyone into the station for a breathalyzer test.

If the breathalyzer test registers a .10 blood alcohol content or higher, then it will result in a conviction for driving under the influence. No other evidence of intoxication is needed for conviction. This does not mean someone is 'drunk,' only that they are under the influence.

Chief Hennessy feels that the amount of publicity surrounding this new law has had a positive effect on people in general. "I think people are being a bit more cautious about their drinking habits," said Hennessy. In Radnor Township there were 32 arrests for D.U.I. in 1981 as compared with 46 cases in 1982. "That's an increase of almost 40% in one year; obviously there was a need to do something," added Hennessy. There have been 10 cases thus far this year, according to Hennessy.

The increase in irresponsible use of alcohol is not limited to just Radnor Township, the trend is nationwide. Pennsylvania now has one of the toughest laws in the country dealing with D.U.I., and New Jersey has recently enacted similar legislation. State legislatures across the country are reacting to the serious problem of alcohol abuse, particularly among the young. Since 1976 twenty states have raised their legal drinking age and at least fourteen more are considering such action. New studies show that raising the drinking age has reduced traffic accidents and fatalities as much as 31%.

Finally, Hennessy concluded with this thought, "the law is a good one, but, for it to work properly, all concerned must act responsibly, this incudes the police, the public, and the courts."

"Your Life Is On The Line. . ."

On an average weekend night, one out of every ten drivers on the road is legally drunk — and for every legally drunk driver, there are thirty others who are alcohol impaired and potentially dangerous.

Don't bet your life of these statistics — you have a 50% chance of losing. Put the survival odds in your favor:

- IF YOU DRIVE AFTER DRINKING, REMEMBER THAT EVEN SMALL AMOUNTS OF ALCOHOL WILL CAUSE SOME IMPAIRMENT OF DRIVING ABILITY. To be able to drive you must be able to accurately judge speed, time and distance. Your judgment is the first important driving ability affected by alcohol. It's affected with your first drink and critically impaired by your third. Almost 90% of the information you need to drive comes to you through your eyes. Visual abilities critical to driving are influenced after three or four drinks.
- SET YOUR LIMIT IN ADVANCE AND KEEP TRACK OF THE NUMBER OF DRINKS YOU CONSUME. Because alcohol affects your judgment, it might be difficult, once you start drinking, to know when you've had enough. It takes about an hour for your body to metabolize one drink. If your limit is two drinks in two hours, and you decide to have that third drink, wait another hour before you drive.
- STICK TO YOUR LIMIT. Don't drink more just because you don't feel the first few drinks. Alcohol is a lot like sunburn — when you begin to feel it, it may already be too late.
- EAT WHILE YOU DRINK. Food slows down the rate at which alcohol is absorbed into the bloodstream. Keeping your mouth busy with food, also slows the rate at which you drink. When dining out, if you must drive home, have your drinks with dinner, not afterward.
- IF YOU'RE NOT SURE ABOUT DRIVING — DON'T! If, in spite of your best intentions, you drink too much, don't compound your error by getting behind the wheel of a car. Get a ride from a friend, take a cab, or stay where you are until you're sober enough to get yourself home safely. Only time can remove alcohol from your system. Cold showers and black coffee just won't do it.
- STOP FRIENDS FROM DRIVING AFTER THEY'VE HAD TOO MUCH TO DRINK, and refuse to be a passenger in a car driven by someone who is intoxicated. One of the most serious drinking problems is that so many nice people get into their cars after a "few" drinks and somebody gets killed. True friends don't let people they care about drink and drive.
- THE BEST ADVICE ABOUT DRINKING AND DRIVING IS — DON'T!

By CHRISTOPHER M. JANOSIK

Critical introspection, sacrifice and penance do not uncommonly represent the conceptual framework through which many understand the meaning of the lenten season. It's in this context that I learned to ritualize Lent, and consequently, for me, it is traditionally an intensely private time, the results of which are rarely expressed openly, or are outwardly known.

Over the course of the next six weeks, Campus Ministry's liturgical theme, "Lent As A Time For Growth," offers me and anyone who had a previously similar orientation, an opportunity to experience preparation for the Resurrection from a fresh, perhaps a more shared perspective.

In the gospel reading for this first Sunday of Lent, Christ, fasting in the desert, is tempted by the devil. While prayer, fasting, resisting evil and obedience to God's will are familiar focal points, we might do well to reflect to each other on the kind of courage Christ must have needed to proclaim who he really was and that in which he really believed: We should reflect on the risks that befall all who resist the expedient, the popular, the self-serving, quick and easy approach to life.

Genuine people live their lives with conviction. They dare to be transparently real with others. Real people accept the risk of insisting that their "outer" visible selves agree with, mirror their "inner" reflective selves. Jesus demonstrates his own genuineness clearly for us, his insistence on remaining "real," throughout his temptation by the devil. Is this our challenge? I wonder if Lent might become more alive for each of us, a more valuable communal experience for us all, if we were to anchor a commitment to personal growth during this season, on Christ's example in Luke's gospel? If so, how might we go about becoming genuine?

It begins, for me, with serious introspection, a sometimes painful discovery of one's real self. Our shared lenten commitment, our personal relationship with God, and our belief in the words of Paul to the Romans are our encouragement. "No one who believes in him will be put to shame. All have the same Lord, rich in mercy toward those who call upon him." The communal element, personal growth, becoming genuine, more real are fulfilled only by accepting the challenge of portraying our discovered truth to mankind, just as Christ did in the desert.

The hardest part? The greatest risk? I would contend that the fullness of one's life may best be measured by how much of it is shared with, given to, others. Fullness is rarely experienced in isolation, growth never through anything less than truthfulness with ourselves and one another. So, as we begin our lenten observance, may we each obligate ourselves to Christ's example in Luke, finding growth and fulfillment.

Ibsen's 'Lady' Emerges from Vasey

By BARBARA SIMON

If Ellida, from "The Lady From the Sea" had only read "The Cinderella Complex" by Colette Dowling, perhaps she would not have had to struggle in terror and depression for ten years. But alas, "The Cinderella Complex," a book about the roots of women's inner conflicts and fears of independence, was published in 1981 and Ellida was born in 1888, the creation of Henrick Ibsen in his play "The Lady From the Sea," now showing at Vasey Theater, February 9-12, 16-19.

"Lady From the Sea" as directed by Irene Baird, an associate professor in the graduate theatre department at Villanova, and presented by the Villanova Theatre is a stimulating and haunting rendition of Ibsen's play. The mood is pensive and the theme concerning women's lack of freedom and dependence is reiterated until the end of the play.

The setting is a summer resort town in the fjords (long narrow arm of the sea between high, rocky cliffs) of Northern Norway. There are transparent wire meshes hanging (from the ceiling) throughout the stage creating an atmosphere of ambiguity; Ellida and the other actors weave in and out, hide behind and get tangled in the flowing meshes representing their mental anxieties and hostilities.

Ellida is played by Anne K. Miller, who gives a masterful performance as the nervous wife who is devoted to her husband but is mysteriously obsessed with her secret commitment to the Stranger, played by Len March, a man she promised to marry 10 years ago. She symbolizes a melancholy "mermaid"; half of her feels limited and confined, connected to the half of her that yearns for freedom. She turns to the sea for comfort and escape, where she feels neither owned nor exploited. Miller successfully captures the intensity, confusion and rage that dwell within a woman, as she stealthily moves in and out of the meshes or when she grips desperately to the nautical scaling rope. Ellida is appropriately referred to as the lady from the sea.

Ellida's husband Wangel (pronounced Vangel) is played by Dante Giammarco. He depicts the perfect loving husband, but blind to the fact that his marriage is meaningless. Both Ellida and Wangel act out their parts socially, but there is no communication or any real interest in each other. Wangel is indeed simple, and his intentions remain sincere for convenience. After all, he had to marry again after his first wife had died.

Wangel's two children from his previous marriage act to entertain and heighten the themes of the play; individualism, dependence/independence and communication are the motifs presented in "The Lady From the Sea." Pat Lamay is Bolette, an immature replica of Ellida, with dreams of freedom, and ironically choosing a dependent means to escape.

A contrast to Bolette is her younger sister, Hilda, played by Joey Nielson. Nielson portrays the "nasty brat." She is cute, chunky, obnoxious and blatantly honest. However, like the other females, Hilda gets drawn into the traditional idea that women must depend upon and center their lives around men.

Arnholm and Lyngrstrand are two delightful characters played by Mark Conti and Donald R. Beck. As the play progresses,their fine performances as typical male chauvinists are realized. Arnholm is Bollete's old tutor. Like Wangel, he plays a winsome man who wants to own and control his wife. He smiles and tempts in order to engage Bolette in marriage. Beck also epitomizes the superior-minded man; although he is a dreamer and sickly,he continues to pretend and deceive himself.

Ballested, the resort artist, acts as the narrator and serves the purpose of separating scenes with his painting-on-wheels. Played by Mark B. Dykes, at times Ballested is too melodramatic; his obtrusiveness upon the audience is overbearing as he prances around the stage between scenes shouting his lines. Often his lines are missed because his antics are so powerfully distracting.

One stage prop that seemed more agitating than effective is the scaling rope that is tied to the ceiling, hovering over the audience to the immediate right upon entering the theatre. Actors clamor clumsily to the middle or to the top of the ropes, rocking wildly, or hang on desperately. In one unfortunate incident, Arnholm kept his cigarette with him as he climbed up the ropes; ashes and sparks descended to the heads below. Later on, chunky Hilda took her turn up on the ropes and rocked herself violently; the scene was hysterically disturbing.

"The Lady From the Sea" is well worth seeing despite the few technical distractions. Reading the play first could possibly diminish any initial confusion one might experience from this unique production. In the beginning, Ellida appears to be quite mad; she runs about surreptitiously, calling out and imagining voices. Another intense scene is when Ellida and her husband are playing a tug-of-war with the Stranger. Holding onto long pieces of transparent cloth, the enraging conflicts have surfaced; rocking, grabbing, tighter, loosening, pulling and twisting. It is a scene not to miss.

"The Lady From the Sea" is a play for women because it is about inner conflicts of fear that bind them to traditional roles they might not have chosen or perhaps could not escape from. This play is also for men to see. It is important for men to understand women and for them to be aware of their part in fostering dependence in women. The "cinderellas" in society are clearly epitomized in "The Lady From the Sea." It is a thought provoking play that reveals the importance of the individual and the need for a society which would give the individual the fullest opportunity for self-development.

Anne Miller portrays Ellida "The Lady From the Sea."

Women in Today's Society

By JOHN F. LYNCH

Love Lives: Why Women Behave the Way They do in Relationships by Carol Botwin is a book which depicts the various types of women who exist in today's society. The message which the book seeks to convey is that women react differently in relationships than most people perceive. Botwin explains the difficulty women have in balancing both their need for independence and desire for attachment with a male partner.

Botwin devotes a section of the book to the mental health of married women vs. the single women. It is stated that single women are in better emotional shape than both married women and single men. Single women are out in the real world taking care of themselves and establishing a positive identity. So it is clear that the myth that single women are frustrated spinsters is apparently distorted.

One of the more interesting types of women which Botwin describes is called the "Princess." Defined as a woman who wants a man for his looks, his wealth and his ability to be a great lover, a Princess has the bizarre talent of leading men on, while at the same time not coming across as being too easy. The myth that all Princesses are Jewish, once again,is a stereotype. Cases in point: Jacqueline Onassis, and in fiction, Scarlett O'Hara, are just a few of the women Botwin calls Princesses.

Another woman which Botwin analyses is referred to simply as "The Bitch." Known notoriously as a woman who has come from an emotionally deprived background, the Bitch, she writes, has been through many hardships and finds men to be the source of her problems. Men who are kind and gentle often are attracted to a Bitch because they feel they can pacify this emotionally strung-out woman.

Finally, there is what Botwin calls "The Superwoman." The Superwoman is a professional perfectionist who usually starts her day at 4 a.m. with a 2- mile jog and ends at 9 p.m. by tucking her 2.3 kids into bed. The Superwoman is always right and as a mother she insists that her kids not only do well in their endeavors but must succeed at them. The Superwoman has adapted to today's society almost too well. She inhibits many men who want to "get acquainted" with her.

From here, the book goes on to list 15 ways to sustain a good relationship. The first, and obviously the most important "rule," is that a woman should not submerge into a relationship and take her identity from her male partner. It is important for a woman to retain a sense of autonomy to know who she is apart from the relationship.

Another important guideline for women is to deal with a conflict directly. It is very important for any relationship to keep a line of communication. Running away from an argument can only make matters worse. Finally, women should not expect a man to rescue them from their problems or feel that marriage is a panacea. These two mistakes could be fatal.

Love Lives is a thorough investigation of the various traits of today's women. Botwin, in her previous book Love Crisis uncovered the types of men that women encounter. In Love Lives, the tables are turned.

It seems very interesting that a woman is the author of a book which is somewhat critical of how females act in sexual endeavors. Botwin's honest approach to the subject is to be admired.

Her research is well-defined and her style makes the book easy to read. Love Lives opens doors about the real feelings women have towards relationships. It is a book recommended for both men and women alike.

A 'Choice' Performance by Streep

By MIKE NOONE

"Sophie's Choice" is the film version of the popular novel of the same title by William Styron. Meryl Streep, in the title role as Sophie, portrays a Polish immigrant living in Brooklyn two years after World War II. Sophie is a refugee from a Nazi concentration camp, and throughout the movie there are flashbacks showing her experiences and emotional scars. Sophie suffers guilt because she survived the camps, but her parents and children did not. Sophie is not a Jew, but her lover Nathan (Kevin Kline) is. He often cruelly pours guilt on her because she survived.

Sophie (Meryl Streep) and Nathan (Kevin Kline) share an obsessive love in "Sophie's Choice."

The story is told through the eyes of Stingo, a young, naive writer from the South, played by Peter MacNichol. Stingo moves to Brooklyn to enhance his writing, attempting to escape his stifling Deep South background. In renting an apartment directly below Sophie's, he is thrust into the turbulent and dynamic lover's world of Nathan and Sophie. Stingo discovers that Nathan rescued Sophie when she first arrived in America, severely ill and lost in this foreign land. Over the years, they become lovers, and despite the torture Nathan sometimes inflicts on Sophie, she remains faithfully attached, almost masochistically, to him.

The film is slow-paced but gripping. The center of this interest is Streep's outstanding portrayal of a confused and disturbed woman. Streep first received wide recognition for her performance in "Kramer vs. Kramer," as well as her role in "The French Lieutenant's Woman." Although well-acted, these roles limited Streep in their content. Through her latest role as Sophie, Streep has proven herself a versatile and accomplished actress. The other actors' performances are mediocre; Kline overacts his part. He is stark-raving mad throughout and not terribly convincing. However, the film is worth viewing, if only for Streep's performance, which outweighs any drawbacks in the film.

Though extremely blunt, the technique of the film evokes the true spirit of Sophie's memories. The director, Alan Pakula, is not interested in making a broad statement opposing war against the Nazis, despite several compelling scenes. Instead, he wishes to convey, and is successful through Streep's performance, the personal agonies and tortures of one woman caught up in the cruel, injustices of life. One interesting scene shows the daughter of the camp commandant lying in order to protect Sophie from punishment, poignantly depicting the ambiguity of war. The director Pakula also expresses the embarrassment and anxiety that Sophie suffers from Nathan's cruelty in the presence of the young writer Stingo.

"When I first acquired "Sophie's Choice," Pakula has said, "I knew it would occupy several years of my life. What better project on which to spend several years of one's life? It was a decision I haven't once regretted."

The contradictions in the relationship between Nathan, Stingo and Sophie suggest to the audience that, although it is a strong friendship, some sort of fall or tragedy is inevitable. The film is in no way predictable; in fact it includes several twists and surprises, which further entangle the audience.

"Sophie's Choice" is a poignant and timeless film about one woman's tragic life and the effect it has on those who love her. The film is successful, almost totally because of Streep's brilliant performance. It is a powerful movie, one of the year's best, and should surely not be missed.

Duran Duran's 'Rio' is a Grand Follow-Up

By BILL SANTOS

"Rio" is the follow-up release from the group Duran Duran, which consists of brothers John, Roger and Andy Taylor, Simon Le Bon and Nick Rhodes.

Duran Duran employs an abstract approach toward their music, as exhibited on their first hit from their debut album, "Girls On Film" and others from "Rio", such as the title track and "The Chauffeur." The most popular song on the album is "Hungry Like The Wolf," which features erotic, female moans, a steady beat, and strong guitar. Two other songs of note are "Rio" and "Hold Back The Rain." "Rio" begins slowly but winds up as a powerful song. It compares a girl to the Rio Grande, "that river twisting through a dusty land." "Hold Back The Rain" is a crisp rocker with lyrics that contrast the singer to the wind. Its biting guitars and relentless drumming provide a powerful end to the first side.

The second side is just as good as the first. With strong melodies and tantalizing lyrics, every song on "Rio" is a potential hit. "Save a Prayer 'Til The Morning After" is a slow, romantic song that is quite a nice change of pace. The melody is sweet and the lyrics are stirring. "The Chauffeur," the album's final cut, is reminiscent of the Beatle's "I Am The Walrus," in that it has a mystical air to it.

Two interesting techniques that make this such a fine album is the use of scat-like experimentation throughout the album. 'Scatting' is when a guitarist plays exactly the same notes the vocalist is singing. This interweaves music and lyrics into one. Lyrically, the band is influenced by the English Romantics. Verses like, "Sweating dew drops glisten fresh in your side . . . the sun slips down bedding heavy blind" give each song substance rather than the usual cliches one is used to hearing.

"Rio" is an album that is destined for critical, as well as popular acclaim. The caliber of this album reflects the talent and "tightness" that Duran Duran possess. Today, such precision as this, is the exception rather than the rule.

"Rio" may require a few listens before one will take a liking to it, but it is well worth the effort. In today's record industry, albums like this are hard to find. "Rio" is truly Grande.

Villanova Snowbound

The Philadelphia area's heaviest snowfall since 1909 delivered 21.3 inches of the white stuff to Villanova this weekend, forcing the cancellation of two days of classes.

The campus was not without activity as recorded by the Villanovan cameras.

Most students found the going a little difficult because of the icy conditions. Apparently, some were less fortunate than others, and were literally 'buried' in the deluge.

However, neither rain nor sleet could halt the delivery of Valentines, on the snowiest of Valentine's Days. That is, those that didn't have to be delivered by car. Despite the efforts of V.U.'s maintenance crew, the parking lots could not be cleared in time for Monday's classes. Snowbound campus residents could take advantage of Connelly Center which remained open despite the wintry conditions.

The pre-spring break now Break gave students the opportunity to catch up on studying for mid-term exams. More likely than not, though, the snow gave students the excuse to celebrate the basketball team's defeat of the No. 1 rated North Carolina Tar Heels.

Swimmers 'Psyched' for Championships

By JOE BAGLEY

Dual meets and regular season records have a way of melting into the background as conference championships approach. Villanova's men's swimming team is no exception as it cruises into the Big East Swimming Championship (Feb. 17-19 in Pittsburgh) with a 10-6 mark.

The Cats, defeated in the championships last year by 12 points by Syracuse, fell again to the Orangemen during the regular season.

"We really wanted to beat Syracuse this season," said swimming captain Bruce Baltera. "It was the only goal we had that was not realized. It was a close meet, and it could have gone our way by only one event.

"But the Penn State meet," Baltera continued, "was definitely our biggest win of the year." In addition, the swimmers knocked off Georgetown, Penn and a powerful Temple team.

End of the season losses to Navy (71-42) and Army (75-38) didn't seem to phase Coach Ed Geisz. "Those two teams just overpower you because they outnumber you in everything. We have 17 swimmers. They have 70 each."

Geisz, Villanova's winningest active coach in any sport, spoke optimistically about the past season. "I had hoped we'd win nine. I'm delighted with the 10-6 record. Cindy Richards coaches both the men's and women's diving teams and she did a super job for us. And (assistant coach) Darell Linder was invaluable."

When asked for his expectations concerning the championships, Geisz was crystal clear. "We expect to finish second behind Pittsburgh. They've got a real strong, solid team.

"We're still going to have some records fall though," Geisz added. He foresees Villanova winning several events, including the 200-yard butterfly with sophomore Dan Nies and the 100-yard backstroke featuring Pete Maloney.

Swimming Coach Ed Geisz

And Baltera should be churning for golds in the 200-yard butterfly, the 100-yard butterfly (swum only at championship meets) and the 100-yard freestyle.

"Towards the end of the year," related Baltera, "just before the championships, I get nervous. I'm nervous already. And when I get nervous I swim better."

It is a fact that swimmers shave the hair of their bodies before big races, making the skin especially sensitive and garnering a psychological advantage.

"If Pitt doesn't shave, we have a chance," Baltera remarked. "They might decide not to until the Eastern Championships (held in two weeks). Swimming is really psychological. If you think shaving will help you, it will."

Pinone Makes 'Pitt-Stop'

Bear Nets 25 Points

By JOE MARUSAK

It could have been no one else's night but John Pinone's.

The senior center on Rollie Massimino's Wildcat basketball team played his final Field House game last Friday night against Pittsburgh, and he couldn't have gone out any better.

Despite having a viral infection, Pinone poured in 25 points and snared five rebounds in leading the Wildcats to a 78-65 victory over the Big East Panthers.

"John was a little nervous tonight because it was his last game (on campus)," said Head Coach Massimino after the contest. But on the court Pinone certainly didn't show it.

And neither did Stewart Granger or Mike Mulquin, who were wearing the Blue and White for the last time at the Field House.

Mulquin did his thing in the first half. The 6-7 forward scored six points early on to push Villanova out to an 8-4 advantage.

Fellow senior Granger had yet another consistent effort with seven assists and eight points overall.

But the seniors had some help on this, their night. A lot of it came from Dwayne McClain, who rediscovered last year's shooting touch in the second half.

With 15:16 remaining, Pitt had made it close at 46-44. Then McClain took off. Within the next eight minutes, the 6-6 guard scored 12 of the Wildcat's next 16 points to seal the victory.

"I was much more into the game . . . much more relaxed," McClain commented. "I was in the right spot at the right time."

Indeed, McClain was in the right spot many times as he ended up with 14 points.

And it was a good thing McClain was on when he was. Because Pittsburgh has a player by the name of Clyde Vaughan. He's the name of a shooting touch that has vaulted him to the top of the Big East scoring charts.

Vaughan really didn't get going until the 12:59 mark of the first half. When he did, it was off to the races as he proceeded to score 14 of his team's final 21 points.

That fact also helped keep the Panthers in the game. At the half, they trailed by only seven, 40-33.

The junior forward kept it up in the second half. This time though, he had some help from George Allen. At one stretch, the 6-0 sophomore hit three straight buckets to bring the Panthers within two points, 44-42.

But McClain came alive, and it was all Cats after that. With :37 left on the clock, Nova had built up a 74-63 lead.

It was also at that point that Stewart Granger left the Field House court for the last time. At the same moment John Pinone went to the free throw line and calmly sunk two shots. Then he too exited.

"It was kind of an emotional thing," said the Bear. "Tonight seemed like it would never get here . . . I think this shows we're not just basketball players. We've grown as people."

REBOUNDS: Villanova shot a school-record 69 percent . . . Pregamesenior night festivities were cancelled due to the weather conditions . . . most ticket holders living off-campus never got to the Field House because of the snow. That made for an unusually high number of students in the stands. . . . Kevin McKenna and Martin Lutschaunig started the game along with fellow seniors Granger, Mulquin and Pinone.

Women Trounce Orange

By BOB HELLER

Last Wednesday at the Villanova Field House the women's basketball team took on the Orangewomen of Syracuse in a Big East Conference match up. Coming into the game the 'Cats had a record of 1-2 against Big East competition and a 10-11 record overall.

Syracuse jumped out to a 4-0 lead early in the first half. The Cats came back to tie the score at eight with a 15 foot jumper by Nancy Bernhardt. In the next four minutes, the Cats ran off ten straight points to take an 18-8 lead. Continuing to dominate the game, the Wildcats brought their lead up to 21 points on three straight baskets by Bernhardt. The strong play of the Cats propelled them to a 46-29 lead at halftime.

Both teams exchanged baskets early in the second half, with the Cats leading 52-35 with 16:18 left in the game. The Orangewomen then ran off 12 straight points in the next four minutes to make the score 52-47. This scoring spree by the Orangewomen prompted Villanova coach Harry Perretta to call time out twice during that time period.

The Orangewomen cut the lead to one point, 54-53, with 10:21 left in the game. Baskets by Bernhardt, Andrea Burton and Kathy Razler brought the lead back up to five, 60-55, with 8:39 left. Neither team outscored each other for the rest of the game and the Wildcats were victorious 72-67. The win upped the Cats' record to 11-11 overall and 2-2 against Big East competition.

The Wildcats presented a well-balanced scoring attack led by Bernhardt and Razler with 17 points each. Kathie Beisel had 13 points for the Cats while Rosemarie Burke and Katrina Messenger added eight apiece. Andrea Burton and Noreen Kemether rounded out the scoring for the Wildcats with five and four points, respectively.

Scheduled basketball games this past weekend against Boston College and Boston University were cancelled due to the bad weather. They will be played on Feb. 26-27, just before the Big East Tournament in Providence March 4-6.

Proposal 48: Charges of Cultural Bias

second of two parts.

By JOE MARUSAK

When the National Collegiate Athletic Association passed Proposal 48 on Jan. 11, a furor arose among many black educators who charged that the new measure is culturally biased against blacks.

The debate continues. Those same educators still want something done about this new rule that requires a 700-combined score on the SAT and a 2.0 high school grade average on incoming Division I athletes.

Proposal 48 also says that those who do not meet the requirements may still receive athletic scholarships but they would be ineligible until their sophomore year — after satisfactory progress.

The black college presidents though, don't focus on that. For the most part, they are at odds with the SAT requirement. And when they argue their point, they offer these facts:

- About 56 percent of black high school students had a combined score of less than 700 in 1981. Only 14 percent of white students taking the test did the same.
- A year ago, black students attained 341-verbal and 366-math averges. White students averaged 444 on the verbal and 483 on the math.

What these educators are trying to say is that the SAT itself is biased. And 'they claim that black-college athletes would have to produce higher scores than other students.

"The NCAA is saying," explains Alabama State President Dr. Robert Randolph in a recent Sports Illustrated article, " 'These are the admission standards for athletes. We don't care what they are for other students.' This is discriminatory."

Ed Collymore probably wouldn't go so far, but he too hopes for some changes in the proposal.

Collymore directs the office for social action programs at Villanova University. Part of his job is the Academic Advancement Program, which is for Pennsylvania students who might not normally qualify for admission but who show evidence that they can succeed in college.

"I have mixed emotions about this," says Collymore. "I can see where some college officials are trying to upgrade the athletic programs. They probably feel that this is one way to do it. I don't know if that's necessarily true."

"I would wager," he continues, "that there are athletes who come in who have scored under 700 (and) have done very well in college, graduating successfully."

Potential seems to be the key. The ability to academically succeed is there in many cases. It needs only be developed.

But in Collymore's view, the new SAT requirement can eliminate those hopes.

"If they (NCAA) are saying 700 as a norm, and they're using the norm to be the total population black and white, then they're making one solid statement. And I think there will be a lot of people hurt."

Collymore sees a way out — an alternative which is really nothing new.

"One answer might just be to go back to the freshman rule. You're given a scholarship, but you have to show you can do the work in college."

Whatever the concerns, those opposed have well over three years to get something done.

As Villanova's athletic director, Ted Aceto, says about Proposal 48: "It doesn't take effect until 1986. And so in that four-year period of time — if there are recommendations from the black schools — they can always come back to the convention floor with these changes."

For now though, the storm over Proposal 48 continues unabated.

"It is a concern," emphasizes Collymore, "that I think everyone should be aware of."

Icecats Prep for Playoffs

By TOM KOLON

On Sunday night, the Villanova Icecats snapped their three game losing streak with a 3-1 victory at West Chester State College in a shortened contest due to poor ice conditions. A damaged compressor could not keep the rink cold enough and the ice nearly turned to slush by the end of each period. Thus, the playing surface hampered the stick-handling and skating abilities of the two clubs.

Senior Chris "Sal" Mancuso set Villanova on the right track by drilling a power play goal into the Golden Rams' net with assists from Frank Segreto and Tim Curran. Later in the first period, Mancuso won a face-off in West Chester's end and Segreto flicked a backhand shot past their net minder for a 2-0 lead.

West Chester bounced right back to start off the next period by deflecting a shot from the point over the shoulder of senior goalie Bob Brown, starting his first game for Villanova.

With less than 4 minutes remaining in the period, consecutive passes between Jim Hageney, John Padova and John Pepe enabled Pepe to break free in an end-to-end rush, fake out the goalie and drill the puck into the net.

The contest stood as a 3-1 Nova victory since the referees deemed the conditions to be too hazardous for further play. The two-goal lead made the game official according to an agreement beforehand.

Captain Segreto commented on the team's improved play. "We had to fight through terrrible conditions. John Pepe came through with a really clutch goal that allowed us to get back on the winning beat."

The conquest raised the Icecats to 4-3-2 in the MACHC play (10-10-2 overall) and with two conference games at home this weekend against Drexel and Delaware, Nova is looking to clinch a playoff spot.

Nova Halts 18 Game UNC Win Skein

Cats Stun No. 1 Carolina

By LARRY GOANOS

Neither rain, nor snow, nor dark of night could prevent Rollie Massimino's Villanova Wildcats from delivering their message to the college basketball world on Sunday.

The announcement, proclaiming the Cats to be one of the top teams in the nation, was punctuated by a 56-53 nationally televised victory over the No. 1 North Carolina Tar Heels. In the process of avenging last year's 70-60 NCAA Tournament defeat, Villanova snapped an 18-game Carolina winning streak and joined an elite list of only four non-ACC teams to beat Carolina in Carmichael Auditorium in the last 16 years.

"There's no question this is our best game of the year," said Massimino after the win. "We played hard and the kids really deserved it."

Determined to avoid the hole into which they had dug themselves against Kentucky earlier in the season on national television, the Wildcats built an early 7-0 lead on two Dwayne McClain free throws, a John Pinone lay-up, and a three point play by Ed Pinckney, who was fouled on a lay-in.

Carolina finally lit up the scoreboard when junior Matt Doherty buried a foul line jumper at the 16:42 mark to cut the Nova lead to put Carolina up, 31-30.

The Heels' lead was short-lived however, thanks to a Pinone baseline jump shot at the 16:56 mark.

One minute later Villanova fans saw the season flash before their eyes as Pinckney hit the deck with nova a little breathing room. Freshman Harold Pressley sunk a hook, guard Gary McLain banked in a five-footer off a break, and Mulquin added a lay-up to advance the score to 47-37 with 6:35 remaining.

In order to frustrate Carolina's comeback bid, Massimino employed a stall, a tactic very familiar to Smith, only this time the shoe was on the other Heel. The Cats executed almost flawlessly down the stretch.

"They went to the delay game early and we had to chase for an awful long time. Pinone really makes that go because he's such a good ballhandler," commented Smith.

Crisp, intelligent passing and sure ballhandling helped Nova to stave off the Tar Heel attack, allowing UNC to come only within three, and that being the final margin of 56-53.

"The name of the game is turnovers, and we didn't run into turnovers down the stretch like we did against St. John's," explained Massimino.

Aside from the lack of turnovers, the Cats also improved their shooting percentage in the second half (60%) and finished the game with nine more rebounds (30 to 21) than the defending national champions.

"We congratulate Villanova.

> "It's not fair for the Big Five to take the credit, but we'd like to think that the competition here helped prepare them (Villanova) for Carmichael Auditorium. We're very proud of their accomplishment."

to take the credit, but we'd like to think that the competition here helped prepare them [Villanova] for Carmichael Auditorium. We're proud of their accomplishment," he remarked.

Exactly how much significance can be attached to this important victory? At the post-game victory celebration in the Field House, assistant coach Mitch Buonaguro referred to the win as putting Villanova basketball on the map. Indeed it did, and all roads point toward Albuquerque.

7-2. Pinckney replied with an alley-oop jam off the feed from Stewart Granger, restoring the Cat lead to seven at 9-2.

Carolina's standout junior forward Sam Perkins wasn't about to let his squad wilt, however. The 6'9" Perkins hit some picture-perfect shots to combat the aggressive inside maneuvering of Pinone and Pinckney. Sparked by guard Michael Jordan's hustle and the roar of the home crowd, the Heels were able to knot the game on a Perkins slam with almost 2 minutes left in the half. Granger provided the rest of the scoring before intermission, a single free throw, to put Nova up, 24-23.

The Wildcat's halftime lead was indicative of their relentless hustle; Carolina was out-shooting the Cats (42% to 32%) but Nova held the rebounding advantage (18 to 14) and had managed to launch ten more field goal attempts (31 to 21).

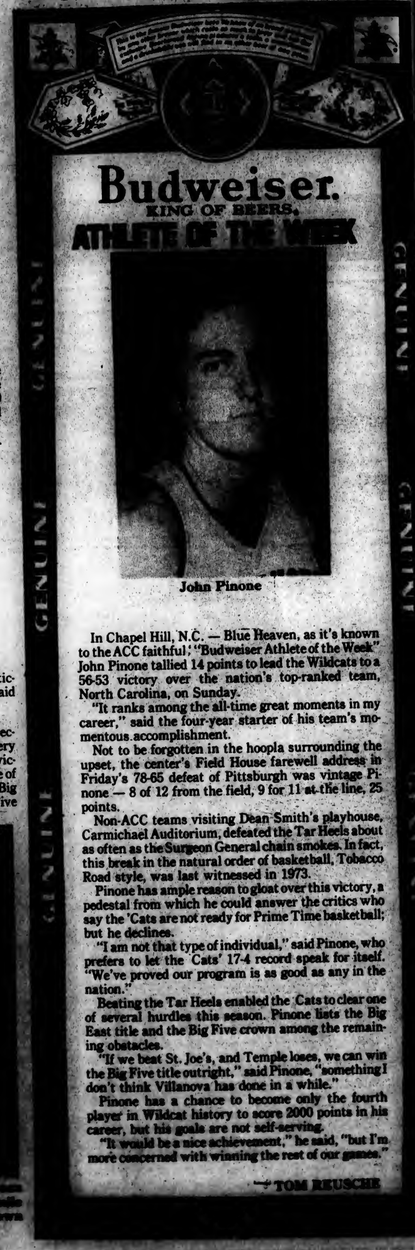
"Neither team shot well in the first half, although both had good shots," said UNC Coach Dean Smith.

The second half tempo began with Pinckney and Pinone setting up shop under the boards for Villanova on offense, while at the other end Carolina's Jimmy Braddock was busy airmailing jumpers from the top of the key. With the Cats on top 30-29, Jordan followed a Tar Heel miss with a spectacular move that resulted in a hoop to an ankle sprain. Mike Mulquin proved to be a competent replacement. "When Pinckney got hurt, Mulquin came in and gave them a lift with an outside shot," said Smith.

The Nova margin remained slim until a 2 minute span midway through the half gave Villa- They did a tremendous job, particularly in the second half," said Smith.

Dan Baker, the executive director of the Big Five, was very pleased with the Villanova victory. "Unquestionably, it is one of the biggest wins ever in the Big Five. It's not fair for the Big Five

LOOKING CAROLINA BLUE: North Carolina's Cindy Brown Smith and junior forward Sam Perkins look on helplessly as Villanova's Dwayne McClain (23) and Ed Pinckney (54) celebrate a basket in the Cats' 56-53 win Sunday. The win dropped Carolina down to third in the AP poll, while Nova moved up to eighth.



John Pinone

In Chapel Hill, N.C. — Blue Heaven, as it's known to the ACC faithful; "Budweiser Athlete of the Week" John Pinone tallied 14 points to lead the Wildcats to a 56-53 victory over the nation's top-ranked team, North Carolina, on Sunday.

"It ranks among the all-time great moments in my career," said the four-year starter of his team's momentous accomplishment.

Not to be forgotten in the hoopla surrounding the upset, the center's Field House farewell address in Friday's 78-65 defeat of Pittsburgh was vintage Pinone — 8 of 12 from the field, 9 for 11 at the line, 25 points.

Non-ACC teams visiting Dean Smith's playhouse, Carmichael Auditorium, defeated the Tar Heels about as often as the Surgeon General chain smokes. In fact, this break in the natural order of basketball, Tobacco Road style, was last witnessed in 1973.

Pinone has ample reason to gloat over this victory, a pedestal from which he could answer the critics who say the 'Cats are not ready for Prime Time basketball; but he declines.

"I am not that type of individual," said Pinone, who prefers to let the Cats' 17-4 record speak for itself. "We've proved our program is as good as any in the nation."

Beating the Tar Heels enabled the Cats to clear one of several hurdles this season. Pinone lists the Big East title and the Big Five crown among the remaining obstacles.

"If we beat St. Joe's, and Temple loses, we can win the Big Five title outright," said Pinone, "something I don't think Villanova has done in a while."

Pinone has a chance to become only the fourth player in Wildcat history to score 2000 points in his career, but his goals are not self-serving.

"It would be a nice achievement," he said, "but I'm more concerned with winning the rest of our games."

CHI Sponsors Justice Seminar

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

U.S. Sen. Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., West German Ambassador Gunther Van Well and Dr. Paul Walker, program director of the Physicians for Social Responsibility, are among the speakers featured at a three day conference titled "Peace, Justice and International Institutions" currently being held at Villanova through March 12.

The conference's fifteen workshops and four plenary sessions are open to the general public and free of charge to Villanova students.

"The purpose of the conference," according to Villanova's Common Heritage Institute Director, Dr. John Logue, chairman of the conference, "is to inquire whether an effective peace strategy requires increased attention to justice and the strengthening of international institutions as well as to arms control and disarmament."

The conference's workshops are considering such subjects as: "The Arms Race and Common Security"; "Poverty and Hunger"; "Defense, Food and Jobs;" "World Federalism"; and "Multinational Corporations: The Role of American Business in Creating a Just World Society."

The Conference has approximately 40 speakers in its plenary sessions and workshops and among the "distinguished" speakers are Philip Geyelin, syndicated columnist, and for many years editorial page editor of The Washington Post, who will speak in the workshop on the Middle East and Major Yaron Eitan of the Israeli Army, who will speak in the workshop on Human Rights. Another, Dr. Frederick Heldring, deputy chairman of the Philadelphia National Bank, will address the topic "How to Avoid a Breakdown in the International Financial System."

The Villanova Conference is being co-sponsored by 21 organizations. "The idea came with so many involved, so much, in nuclear arms and peace issues, that to bring together those with interests in peace internationally, to take a broader look at International Institutions on global situations, seemed beneficial," said Colleen Driscoll Sullivan, conference coordinator.

The sponsoring organizations include the Philadelphia Branch of the American Association of University Women, SANE, the U.N. Committee of The Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, the Villanova Political Science Department and the Committee of Universal Disarmament of the Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania. The conference is being convened by Villanova's Common Heritage Institute (CHI).

Dean J. Willard O'Brien, of Villanova Law School, spoke on "The Holocaust: A Case Study in Individual Responsibility," on Thursday night and Dr. Arthur Crabtree, also of Villanova, spoke on "The Human Family in the Philosophic Tradition." Logue lectured on "The Human Family: An Essential Concept for a Realistic Foreign Policy," to follow in the conference's opening based on the Human Family.

"People must look at themselves as part of a whole family and realize how intermixed their lives are with others," said Sullivan.

Emphasis was set on an individuals' necessity to become a part of the world community and as the conference progresses, international economics, to help solve problems through more workable international institutions, will be discussed. "By breaking the illusion that we are alone in the world and facing the reality that what is happening overseas does affect us, we are able to then work together toward solutions," said Sullivan.

Today's afternoon sessions to be held from 1:30 to 4 p.m. will discuss: "Human Rights: An Internal Affair or Everyone's Concern?" "Jobs in a Peaceful World"; "Can We Ever Reach a Workable Disarmament?" "International Law in Search of Peace and Justice"; and "The New International Economic Order." The workshops will be followed by a 4 p.m. session on Building International Institutions: Problems and Opportunities" with a major talk by Van Well.

The five Saturday morning workshops, from 10 to 11:30 a.m. will consider: "World Federalism: Utopianism or Realism?" "Sharing and Preserving the Earth's Resources"; "Peace, Education and Responsible Activism"; and "Multinational Corporations: The Role of American Business in Creating a Just World Society."

U.S. Senator Joseph R. Biden, Jr.

The theme of the final plenary session, at 11:45 a.m., is "Where Do We Go From Here?" After Heldring's talk on "International Financial Systems" there will be brief reports from the workshops followed by a general discussion.

"The last session has been changed from 1:45 p.m. in an attempt not to conflict with the NBC scheduled televising of the Big East Basketball tournament," commented Logue.

Classes from Villanova and nearby colleges will be in attendance at the conference. Classes have been assigned to specific workshops and International Relations classes have papers to do on specific workshops and will have an active part in the discussions.

From the community, approximately 75 people have registered to attend the workshops and the banquet.

"The conference on Peace, Justice and International Institutions" is pertinent to many Villanova students "because we tried to make it as broad as possible to join the people with different emphases on the International Peace subject to think through together on the international problems and understand all views," said Sullivan.

"The conference will touch on economics since there is only so much money available to spend and a decision must be made whether to spend it on missiles, the starving, or the elderly," continued Sullivan. "Those in the religious studies area have an important role in the issue because there is a moral angle in the way the people will choose to use the money available.

"It is interesting that for so many more people the way thought is going is that the issue should be looked at together as each position on the Peace and Justice International Institutions overlap in some way," said Sullivan.

Alcohol Abuse Analyzed

By PAULA SOLLAMI

More than 100 delegates from several New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware colleges and universities attended the program "Alcohol on Campus: Use and Abuse," in an effort to solve drinking problems on their respective campuses. The program, sponsored by Villanova University on Feb. 18, was geared toward solving the problems of excessive drinking on college campuses.

All delegates attended a general discussion, held in the Connelly Center, about the problem of alcohol abuse among college students. Delegates discussed how the problem was handled at their schools.

Seminars preceded the discussion and delegates then attended two of the six possible seminars offered. Speakers for these special interest groups were all professionals on their specific topics.

"Legal Responsibilities and Liabilities of the University and University Personnel" was one of the seminars included in the "Alcohol On Campus: Use and Abuse Program." The speaker for the seminar, Arthur Shuman, Esq., of the Philadelphia District Attorney's Office, informed his audience of college administrators of the legal risks involved in permitting alcohol use on campus.

Shuman stated that colleges and universities have a clear choice when making their alcohol policies. Either the college must take full responsibility for its students' drinking or the university must strictly prohibit the use of alcohol on college premises.

If the college decides to assume the responsibility of allowing and serving alcohol on campus, the college must regulate its distribution and assume legal responsibility for all accidents which might occur as a result of this on-campus drinking.

If a college chooses to prohibit the use of alcohol on campus for minors, then the university is not liable.

Shuman asserted, however, that this prohibition is not likely to deter college students from drinking. With prohibition, the students would then drink by sneaking liquor on-campus or go off-campus to drink, thus increasing the danger of drunk driving.

From a legal standpoint, Shuman feels it would be in the best interest of the university to prohibit alcohol consumption on-campus, assuming no responsibility for the actions of its students. From a moral standpoint, on the contrary, the university that prohibits drinking on-campus, stated Shuman, is indirectly encouraging off-campus drinking and the problems that arise from this drinking. "It is not easy, I never said that this problem was going to be easy to solve," stated Shuman.

Shuman offered his own solution to this problem. He stated that there was a way for a university to be somewhat moral and free from liability at the same time. Shuman suggested a plan where the university or college would prohibit alcohol use on campus and enforce this prohibition when a student is caught with .10% of alcohol in his blood. "It might pay to buy a breathalizer," he said. Then, the guilty student would have a choice of expulsion or satisfactory completion of an off-campus program against alcoholism. In assuming most students would choose to attend a program and remain in school, the university is then partially taking an interest in the welfare of its students. At the same time, the university would be free from liability charges.

Shuman's plan for prohibition would only apply to minors, of course. These laws would be enforced by campus police. Shuman pointed out, furthermore, that every student, even legal drinkers, would then be affected by his plan. For, if anyone was caught "visibly intoxicated," he would be arrested, because anyone in the state of Pennsylvania "visibly intoxicated" is breaking a law.

Do you know what your blood pressure is? Do you know your lung capacity? What about your eyes? These are just some of the things you could find out at the Villanova Health Fair on March 18 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Villanova Room. Sponsored by the Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania-Villanova Chapter and the College of Nursing.

Protest Against Drugs

New York City's Lower East Side Joint Planning Council invites Villanova students to participate in a march to Mayor Koch's residence to protest the Drug Trafficing and Gentrification in Loisaida, this March 12. For more information, contact Campus Ministry as soon as possible.

Religious Courses

During the past several years the Religious Studies Department has been publishing a "SUBCATALOGUE." This catalogue has the purpose of presenting more detailed descriptions of the courses to be offered for the Fall Semester 1983 by the Religious Studies Faculty as well as the requirements for these courses. Copies of these "SUBCATALOGUES" are available in the Deans' Offices, the Library and can be obtained at the Religious Studies Department Office.

Former Coach Indicted on Fraud

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Former Villanova women's track and field coach Jim Thompson was charged Feb. 23 with fraudulently obtaining $33,600 in airline tickets to fly team members to a track meet in Hawaii in 1981.

A federal grand jury charged Thompson with conspiracy and wire fraud for allegedly scheming to take tickets from Delta Airlines and withhold payment.

If convicted of the charges, Thompson faces a maximum penalty of 55 years in prison and $20,000 in fines.

The grand jury charged that Thompson and unknown accomplices used the code and credit number of a Los Angeles travel club to order 32 round trip tickets on a Delta Airlines flight from Philadelphia to Hawaii in April 1981.

The tickets were sold to 31 members of the track team and their relatives for $250 each, which, according to the indictment, was about one-fourth their retail value. The grand jury said that Thompson used the remaining ticket.

Jim Thompson

According to Assistant U.S. Attorney John J. Rosenberg, Thompson or his accomplices collected $7,750 for the tickets, but none of this money was paid to Delta. The tickets had been used, Rosenberg said, to fly track team members to a meet with the University of Hawaii, a meet and trip not authorized by Villanova.

Thompson became head coach of the women's track team in 1970, and was also appointed head coach of the women's cross country team in 1973. In 1981, Thompson's contract with the University was not renewed.

"I don't want to say anything about this," Thompson told the Philadelphia Inquirer. "I have been put in the middle of a swindle, and I was left holding the bag."

In a telephone call, placed from Thompson's Villanova coaching office on April 10, 1981, the caller identified himself to Delta as a representative of the Auto Club of Los Angeles. According to the indictment, the caller ordered 32 airline tickets using the travel club's codes and credit numbers.

Tickets issued in Thompson's name were picked up later that day at the Delta office in the Philadelphia International Airport the indictment states, by Thompson and an unknown person.

The investigation began, Rosenberg said, in 1981 when Delta officials contacted the Auto Club of Los Angeles to bill them for the 32 tickets to Hawaii. At that time, Auto Club officials said they had not authorized the purchase.

Law School Selecting Dean

By HENRY Di BENEDETTO

Selection of a new dean for the Villanova Law School is in the first phase of recruitment which was begun in the fall when the Faculty Screening Committee made it known that the position was available.

Recruiting for the position has included advertisements in the American Bar Association Journal, the sending of letters to every law school in the country, and writing to the Board of Legal Consultants for possible suggestions of qualified nominees. Currently, there are 40 to 50 people who are being considered for the appointment.

Some members of the faculty committee have met with some of these nominees at Villanova Law School, and they have also met with about ten others at an American Law School Conference which occurred in Cincinnati in early January.

"I am very happy with the amount of interest that has been shown in the position," said Professor Donald Dowd, chairman of the Faculty Committee. "The favorable response to Villanova's search for a dean is especially significant in view of the fact that about a quarter of the nation's law schools are presently looking for a new dean and as a result, the market for qualified people is very tight."

"Most of the candidates on the list are academics," said Dowd. "Only a few on the list are those in actual practice and one judge has been considered for the position. While the committee has been concerned with evaluating individuals outside of Villanova Law School, it is very possible that a member of the Law School's faculty will be selected. After the list of candidates is narrowed down, this smaller group of candidates will be compared with those on the faculty who have been considered before a final decision is made," explained Dowd.

The next stage in selecting the new dean is expected to begin within the next couple weeks, in which the list of persons will be narrowed down and the remaining list to be handed over to University Committee led by Father Patrick Rice O.S.A., vice president for administration, but not all the other members have been chosen yet.

"I assume that one of the members on the Committee will be a law student because there was a law student on the last University Committee which selected a dean for the Law School," added Dowd. The University Committee will conduct its own evaluations and final interviews with faculty members and some students.

"We hope to make the selection sometime early this summer," said Dowd. "However, if the selection process continues through the summer, Dean O'Brien may contiue to be dean for a couple more months. It is a very tedious procedure," explained Dowd.

Physics Exam Grades Poor

By AMELIA McGOVERN

The results in the Physics 1000-02 final exam retests were "extremely poor," according to Dr. Alan J. Phares, chairman of the physics department.

The final exam, which was given at two different times, Jan. 31 and Feb. 1, was cumulative, while the original final was not.

"On the whole," Phares said, "the performance on the test was poor." He said the final grades were determined in the "fairest way."

The students' work prior to the final was curved, as was the final exam. The curves were divided into three portions, the top, middle, and bottom. Anyone who was in the same portion of both curves received the grade originally assigned him. Students who did worse on the final received a grade either one half or one whole letter grade lower. Those who did better on the new final than during the year received a better grade.

When Phares was questioned about the student committee that was formed to find out how the final grade was determined, he stated they never met with him.

There were three or four proctors at the retests according to Phares, but whether final exams would be run similarly in the future, Phares stated, "It is extremely difficult, no matter how many proctors, to avoid 100 percent cheating. There will always be isolated cases. The students should push for a better code of ethics."

Phares mentioned that if students looked down upon cheating, there would be less of it. He reasoned that those who cheat would not like the disapproval of their peers.

Phares was particularly annoyed at the label "joke physics" for the core physics course. He emphatically stated that students can be "absolutely sure that none of the physics courses in the past, present, or future should be labeled 'joke physics'."

He wants students who plan to take physics 1000 to know they will get their money's worth by getting the best physics course offered for non-science majors.

Professor Marvin A. Gross, who presently teaches both sections of Physics 1000, stated the course has been redirected into a "problem, oriented course."

Gross explained that students will spend all their time learning principles of physics and how to apply them in equations. Students will be tested solely on these problems. Additionally, the textbook from last semester has been replaced by a more mathemtically oriented book.

Phares also emphasized that he wants the students to become "scientifically literate. I hope the students will enjoy the challenge and do very well. They should look to their own future."

New Canon Law to Give Church More Control

By TIM HANLON

Catholic universities in the United States will be under a new Canon Law approved by Pope John Paul II, which will put theology professors under church control. The church, not colleges, will hire and fire them at Catholic schools. The change in the church law requires church officials to approve all theology instructors at the nation's 237 Catholic Universities before they can teach.

The law will not be in effect until translation from Latin to English is completed, Nov. 27, 1983, the first week of Advent. No one knows all the details yet because many things termed in Latin in the code mean one thing in Latin and another in English.

According to the Rev. Bernard Shanley, Religious Education Department at Villanova, "Anything said now about the code would be speculation. One cannot say anything without any degree of certainty."

Shanley believes that the code will not affect academic freedom, jeopardize academic autonomy at Villanova, or have any adverse affect upon Villanova University. "It is a general law for all universities. All are to respect the law since Pope John Paul retains final authority," said Shanley.

According to College Press Service, (CPS), "unless the Pope made significant changes from the original draft of the new canons, Catholic educators say, there could be some serious fallout from the new laws dealing with theology instructors."

CPS stated that if the canons were passed intact, however, some educators think there could be special exceptions made for American universities. "Theoretically, the pope could grant an indult exempting schools in the country from the new provisions," said Father Donald Heintschel of the U.S. Catholic Conference.

Whether or not the new laws will affect the Catholic universities in America more than the old code that was in effect is uncertain. All that anyone can do now is wait for the translation.

Many of the administrators and faculty members at the nation's 237 Catholic colleges claim the proposed change in Catholic doctrine is unnecessary. The prospect of approval has frightened many teachers who claim they'd be forced to choose between teaching theology and imparting church doctrine in class.

In most cases that means the instructors would have to be approved by their regional bishop or archbishop.

"In countries where the Catholic church has a treaty with the local government," said the Rev. James Provost, associate professor of canon law at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., "it means church officials will also have legal authority to approve faculty."

In this country, the issue is if university administrators will give up their academic authority to church officials.

The issue isn't debatable at Catholic University. As a pontifical university — one officially sanctioned to grant degrees in the church's name — the school is obligated to follow all church doctrine precisely.

Most Catholic schools have more leeway in implementing doctrine, and its among them that the new law would cause the most trouble.

Union Elects New Board

By BOB O'MALLEY

The new Executive Board members of the Villanova Union were elected on Feb. 14 and all but three of the coordinator positions were elected on Feb. 24. Returning for his second consecutive term as President is Tom Belmont, and the new vice-President is Kathy Foster. Tim Hanlon was elected as the new secretary/treasurer of the Executive Board.

Coordinator positions filled are Publicity Coordinator, Dave Chen; Visual arts, Jim Lane; Social Functions, Paul Ignas; Major Events, Lynn Shaughnessy; and Recreation, John Happ.

Belmont stated that one of his goals for the Union is to continue on the course of the past year. "We want to continue improving our image," said Belmont. One way he plans to do this is to "continue co-programming with other groups. We are looking forward to running a lot of things on campus, like dances and such," said Belmont. As far as Union programming is concerned, Belmont added that the union will be working towards smaller programs.

In summing up his feelings about the new executive Board, Belmont said, "There are a lot of new people on the Board in the Union. It should be a good year."

Social Functions Coordinator Paul Ignas plans to utilize a Union student survey of the students that was mailed to a cross-section of the student body over Christmas break. "After looking at the survey, and seeing the interest in on-campus dances, I hope to run our dances in the Villanova Room frequently throughout the semester, as opposed to the way it's been in the past," said Ignas, referring to the past practice of running one off-campus dance per semester.

Although Ignas feels that the Union has has a bad image in the past, he feels that this poor image can be turned around with "high-quality, high visibility programming."

Ignas continued to say that students have a misconception of what the Union is like. "I think the other students have to understand that the Union is a committee oriented organization, and that committee members are not just pawns to be used when needed, but are a viable part of the decision-making process. A success is shared by all involved," he added, "as are the failures, but these are a continuance of our education, being outside of our classes and lectures."

The Visual Arts Coordinator, Jim Lane, has a committee in charge of Tuesday Night at the movies, Feature Films and the Big Screen TV. For the Feature films series, Lane hopes to get recent popular films. "I want to get the type of movies that people see more than once. Stripes is an old standard, but I want to get something more original than that," said Lane.

For the Tuesday Night series, Lane said he hopes to show cult type films and horror films, like Clockwork Orange and a good Hitchcock film.

At tonight's conference dinner, Biden, a member of three Senate Foreign Relations Committees, will speak on "New Directions in American Foreign Policy." In addition, Van Well will discuss "The European Community and the International System" and Walker will speak on "Seizing the Initiative towards Nuclear Disarmament.

Following the banquet, students will have the opportunity to talk with the speakers.

Logue encourages all interested students to attend the workshops and plenaries "because they are so helpful in striving toward the quote so neatly said by Pope Paul VI, 'If you want peace, work for justice.'"

Campus 'Study Space' Discussed

By LINDA BOND

The University Senate passed a motion to extend study hours for the library following discussion at the Feb. 18 meeting. The Senate resolution and a Library Committee report will be forwarded to the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the University, for approval.

Student Body President Paul Tufano, who first introduced the amendment last fall, said at the meeting that he felt there existed a "common problem of study space" on campus. He said that students wanted to study more, especially in the "peak seasons" of midterms and finals. Tufano added that Tolentine Hall was usually "substantially full" on Sunday morning.

"Since the mission of the school is academics and we want this for study purposes, we feel this is a valid proposal," stated Tufano.

Last fall the Senate remanded Tufano's motion to the Library Committee for study. An estimate of additional library staffing for an added eight hours per week was given to be $500 per week. It was suggested at the meeting that lower-priced study space might be available through other academic halls if student need was not for reference materials.

John Gardner, arts senator, said there was a need for a library building and not just another study hall.

The Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president of administration, commented that he would prefer to have the library "function as it was intended to function. There are 550 study corals ideally suited to study. We should increase the hours because that is where they should study." Rice also expressed concern over past vandalism to academic halls.

The Senate unanimously passed the resolution to extend library hours. Exactly how many hours and to what days the extra hours will be added is to be handled through the office of academic affairs in conjunction with the student government office.

Also mentioned at the Feb. meeting were the names of the members of the committee established by the Board of Trustees in response to a motion passed by the Senate to look at a possible football program. The Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., is chairman of the committee that includes Thomas J. Burke, Jerry Dempsey, Dr. Joseph DesJardins, the Rev. Edward J. Dobbin, O.S.A., the Rev. David J. Duffy, O.S.A., Gary B. Fenner, the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., Donald Kramer, Joseph Molinari, Edward Riley, Eleanor Strack, and Paul Tufano.

Clay, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, presented the Budget Committee's report. He posed tuition increases of 10.8 to 11.5 percent but added that because there was "a lot of concern raised by the committee, faculty and students concerning the increases, we are going to attempt to work with the administrative budget committee and see about decreasing tuition increases."

Draft Objectors Have Company

By TIM GALLAGAN

"One million men required to register for the draft have not," said Peter Goldberger, professor of law at Villanova, and chairman of the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors at a meeting for Draft Legislation: Legal, Political, and Moral Issues, held Feb. 15 at the law school.

Of those one million, 1,000 have gone public, and only 13 of those have been prosecuted.

"The government claims that the chances of being prosecuted are as great as those of being struck by lightning. I think they are exaggerating; your chances are not that great," Goldberger said.

When men turn 18 years old, they are required to fill out a Selective Service registration card at their local post office. The information on the card is then transferred into a central computer in Washington. Once one's name is in the computer, registration is completed. Should the government lose your card, you are not considered registered.

According to Goldberger, the legislation is the government's way of preparing for war, a Vietnam-type war, where the United States commits troops to a civil war in a third-world nation.

"The draft will not be used in case of a nuclear conflict," said Goldberger. "In the event of a nuclear confrontation between the United States and Soviet Union, the war would last about six or seven days, and the ground troops would not be necessary."

The system, designed by Selective Service under the Carter Administration, allows for 650,000 men to be drafted in a six-month period. These men are to replace the rapid deployment troops, which will have been sent immediately following a declaration of war.

According to Goldberger, quoting from a government directive on Selective Service, the registration is the first step to rapidly mobilize replacement forces. Initially, the president would declare a national emergency and ask Congress for permission to induct soldiers.

On the second day, Congress would grant permission, without discussion; and Selective Service would conduct their lottery to determine draft order. The director of Selective Service would then issue orders, and induction notices would begin to go out. There

V.U. Fights Liquor Application

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The application for a liquor license by the Campus Corner, located next to Villanova on Lancaster Ave., has been appealed by Villanova University. Villanova has the right to appeal the liquor license under the restrictive institution clause stated by the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board.

"Seeing the activities and problems, those not compatible with the moral position of Villanova, which could arise from the sale of beer at Campus Corner, Villanova decided to exercise their option to appeal the license application," according to the Rev. John J. McKenzie, director of planning.

The restrictive institution clause entitles any church, library, school or playground within 500 feet of the establishment applying for the license to the option to appeal. McKenzie added that the Villanova Parish may also appeal the liquor license application.

"A take-out store, under the shadow of the campus, is not in the best interest of the university or students," said Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of student life. "The attractive situation it would face those students under the legal drinking age of 21 is a concern.

"The Campus Corner is not in a good location for liquor sales," according to Neville, "because there is a sparce potential market from Villanova students on campus. It is such an easy access to so very few of age."

Eighty-five percent of the campus residents are not of legal age and McKenzie believes the greater amounts of those students do buy and drink beer, so having the liquor so close to campus would inhibit a control situation.

Store owner Eileen Gerson, filed with the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board for an application for a Malt and Brewed Beverage retail dispenser license which permits only the sale of beer.

There is an anticipated increase in drinking on campus if the Campus Corner is granted the license,

Campus Corner

according to Neville, "because students could easily and quickly go pick up a six pack from the store once they run out of what they already have."

It is the fear of small groups, picking up a few six packs from the Campus Corner to bring it on campus to drink, leading the group to attract others, eventually gathering into a party, that is the problem.

McKenzie told local newspapers that the luncheonette was adjacent to the University infirmary and that it kept the same schedule as the University. "When we are on vacation, they are closed," McKenzie commented.

The University of Legal Council located in Center City has filed the appeal and the work will continue through this Council. The LCB's Report on Campus Corner has been sent to Harrisburg for review.

would be no special draft boards, as in the Vietnam draft. Recruiting offices would open up to serve as draft boards.

From days three to 13, orders would be received by draftees who have two options, to report for induction or request deferment.

A draftee requesting deferment must go to a post office and pick up a pre-printed form. The forms are already printed, and are currently in boxes at post offices and government warehouses around the country. Registered men cannot apply for deferment until receiving induction notices.

Two weeks after a declaration of war, the first inductees are to report; one month after, 100,000 have been processed and six months after, 650,000 men will have been inducted. According to Goldberger, on the basis of troop numbers alone, the United States would be involved in the biggest ground war in its history.

In this six month period, three million induction notices will have gone out, and of these, the government expects only 650,000 or 21 percent to have reported. According to Goldberger, two of every five men will apply for deferment, two will have moved and left no forwarding address, and one will have reported.

The government has realized that selective prosecution of non-registrants is ineffective, and in an attempt to discover more of the million men who have not registered, they are requiring that all students receiving financial aid must first prove that they have registered, if they were required to do so.

The proof is a letter received by all registrants after his name is entered into the computer. Received about one month after turning one's card in at the post office, the letter tells of legal responsibility to report any necessary corrections on the information given, and to report changes of address. One is also told to save the letter as proof of registration.

College financial aid offices are required to see the letter within 120 days of when students claim to have registered; and if the letter is not presented, all aid is cut off.

Arthur Switzer, associate director of financial aid at Villanova said that the paperwork resulting from the legislation is immense. The cost in telecommunications, postage, and printing is $50,000 and Villanova must foot the bill.

Tuition Hike Cut, Aid Reduced

The University Senate Budget Committee has completed its review of the proposed administrative budget and has ascertained that the planned disbursement of funds meets University policies and priorities. Three weeks ago, the budget committee reported an analysis of the 1983-84 budget that called for an average tuition increase of 10.8 percent for undergraduates and an 11.5 increase in law school tuition. It has been learned that the committee has now modified its original analysis of the budget and is recommending a one percent reduction in tuition rate increases to 9.8 and 10.5 percent respectively. In addition, the per credit hour rates for University College have been lowered 3.1 percent. However, these reductions have been proposed as feasible at the expense of cutting back on the original proposals for funds allocated for operation and maintenance of the physical plant, and for scholarships and fellowships. Most importantly, University student financial aid will be cut by almost one-third.

Originally, a 29 percent increase in financial aid was proposed by the administration to meet the high priority of attracting a mix of students. In lieu of the continual calls for strict regulations and possible elimination of various forms of federal government sponsored financial aid, this increase was viewed as a modest but compensatory raise. However, the budget committee has recommended an 8.1 decrease in financial aid to keep in line with the proposed one percent tuition increase reduction. So the scenario has been adjusted: rather than use the revenue from tuition to finance debt service on the $25 million bond issue, it appears funds from financial aid will be reduced to provide necessary insurance to prevent default on the bond. The students have been manacled to the responsibility of fulfilling a contractual obligation.

Without the built-in three percent for debt service, students would be faced with a more than reasonable near seven percent increase. As it is, the recommended 9.8 percent increase is not all that extravagant when compared to the other schools Villanova "competes" with for students: Bryn Mawr, La Salle, St. Joe's and Swarthmore are all adopting increases in the eight to nine percent range. The University can take comfort in the fact that they are "competitive" with the other local institutions. Given no choice, students can at least acknowledge that the University is meeting the priorities. The question is: what is preferred? Paying $50 less in tuition than originally proposed or losing the opportunity of qualifying for thousands of dollars in possible financial aid.

Common Heritage: Working for Peace

The "Villanova Conference on Peace, Justice and International Institutions" is yet another significant event being sponsored by Villanova's Common Heritage Institute (CHI), an organization specializing in shedding light on three world problem areas: the reform and restruction of the United Nations; disarmament and arms control; and the law and politics of the oceans. Since its inception fifteen years ago, the CHI has quietly risen in prominence until it has become regarded today as one of the most highly regarded advisory organizations.

Through the efforts of its director, Dr. John Logue and his assistant Colleen Sullivan, CHI has been responsible for the annual sponsorship and organization of the highly successful Ground Zero Week that features workshops on the nuclear arms race and morality discussions, co-sponsorship of a convocation dealing with solutions to limit the stockpiling of nuclear weapons, and is the main impetus behind this week's conference that features a U.S. senator, and the ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany to the United Nations, as well as several distinguished lecturers and experts who will expound on the importance of the concern for an effective peace strategy requiring increased attention to justice and the strength of international institutions as well as arms control and disarmament.

Letters to the Editor

Campus Housing Problems Aired

The following is a letter from Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life, sent to the parents of all campus residents in the classes of '84 and '85.

Dear Parents:

I am writing to alert you to the upcoming housing lottery that we annually hold to make room selections for the upper classes.

This year the University Senate recommended and the Administration has accepted the housing of all freshmen who are not commuters. This will result in an additional 200 students on campus or to put it another way, a hundred less rooms will be available for seniors and juniors than heretofore.

We regret immensely not being able to house every student who wishes it. With 2,700 beds and an undergraduate population in excess of 6,000 that ideal becomes an impossibility. In order to help resolve this difficult situation, the Board of Trustees has authorized the building of two new Residence Halls to house 160 students each. Although this will not entirely satisfy all our housing needs, it is a great step in the right direction. The new halls will be open in September of 1984.

The lottery is a trying time for our upperclass men and women. We will do all we can through the Office of Residence Life to help these students who are asked to leave campus through the lottery.

I am writing to ask your support and understanding of the problem and our efforts to resolve it.

Dr. Richard A. Neville
Vice President for Student Life

Dear Dr. Neville:

As the parent of a resident member of the class of 1985, I received your letter of Feb. 9 concerning the upcoming housing lottery.

I found your letter disingenuous at best.

You begin by lamenting that because the University Senate has recommended the housing of all freshman who are not commuters there will be one hundred less rooms for seniors and juniors during the next academic year. You go on to say that you "regret immensely" the lack of adequate dormitory housing on campus.

You do not mention the basic reason that there are ever fewer rooms available to upper-class students on the Villanova campus, which is that the University has adopted a policy of expanding the resident student body beyond its ability to provide adequate housing. The University has increased the size of the freshman class for at least each of the past two years knowing that the inevitable result of these increases would be that a growing number of upper-class students would be forced off campus. Many of these students will not only unwillingly lose the dormitory life which is one of the benefits of an undergraduate college career but will also be forced to spend precious education dollars well in excess of the University room and board costs, for what is often overpriced, unsafe and unsupervised housing.

To tell us how immensely you regret the obvious consequences of this expansionist policy which you have chosen to adopt is, quite simply, fatuous.

While there is apparently nothing that can be done by the parents of upper-class students to reverse this policy, you might at least spare us these self-serving, vacuous letters.

Library Hours

To the Editor:

As a member of the Library Staff, I must voice my opinion regarding hours. Library hours at present are overextended. At any one time you can go into the library and find it half full. When there are students there they are spending little time on books and much time on socializing.

Regarding Saturday hours, as a member of the staff working on Saturday, the early hours are a complete waste of time. Most of the students do not come into the library until 11 a.m. and then at the most there are only 25 or so students. I challenge any member of the Library Committee to sit on any given Saturday and see how tediously quiet it is.

As a closing statement and repeating the above challenge, who is the Library Committee? Do they work every day with students (which is very rewarding)? Sit for one Saturday and then and only then judge the appropriate hours to be open. As we all know, the students will wait until the 12th hour to do anything, as well as waiting for the library to almost close.

Amendment Unjust

To the Editor:

I would like to bring to your attention that on Sept. 8, 1982, President Reagan signed the Fiscal Year 1985 Defense Department Authorization Act into law. This amendment mandates that, beginning with the 1983-84 award year, any student who is required to be registered with Selective Service and fails to register is ineligible for Student Financial Assistance provided through programs established under Title IV of the Higher Education Act. These programs are: 1) College Work Study, 2) Guaranteed Student Loan, 3) State Student, 4) Pell Grants, 5) State Student Incentive Grants, 6) Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants.

The law specifically requires that, in order to receive Title IV aid, a student who is required to register with selective service must file a statement with the institution he attends, certifying that he is in compliance with registration requirements. In addition, the student must submit a copy of his registration acknowledgement letter from the Selective Service to the Financial Aid Office.

This amendment to the Military Selective Service Act is blatantly unjust and discriminatory toward male students. It is unjust because it penalizes those students who do not comply with this act, without giving them due process of law. This penalty refuses them financial assistance which had been provided for them through programs established under Title IV of the Higher Education Act. It is discriminatory toward male students because this amendment does not apply to all males who are required to register with Selective Service, but only to those males who have gone on to college.

In addition to these objections, there are also obscurities beneath the surface of this amendment. For example, since male students will be the only ones penalized by the Defense Department Authorization Act, is President Reagan insinuating that male students are suspect of non-compliance with registration requirements to a greater extent than males who are not students?

I feel it is imperative that the objections I have expressed to the passing of this amendment must be addressed by President Reagan, and these injustices remedied to the satisfaction of all. If we let such injustices go by unchecked, we will be leaving the door open for the passage of further unjust and discriminatory legislation.

I therefore petition all concerned students to address their comments and opinions to: Ms. Andrea Foley: Office of Student Financial Assistance; U.S. Dept. of Education; 400 Maryland Ave., S.W.; Room 4318 Regional Office Building 3; Washington, D.C. 20202.

Apology

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly apologize to all Bahamas trip participants for all the inconveniences that occurred during the recent Spring Break trip to the Bahamas. The travel agency that we contracted with, Inter-Collegiate Holidays, was the same that we had used for the past five years without any problems. Unfortunately, this year, due to the hotels grossly overbooking rooms, they were not able to accommodate all of us in the same hotel. As you know, we were not alone in our dilemma, as people all over the island were getting shuffled from hotel to hotel.

As I'm sure all of you will agree, the manner in which we were treated is clearly unacceptable. We certainly realize that no one received what they were originally promised when they paid, and at present we are in the process of negotiating rebates for all participants from the travel agent. We will notify each of you as the situation develops.

On behalf of Tom Belmont, my husband Matt and myself, I would like to personally thank each of you for your support and understanding during the week, and I hope that you were able to enjoy yourselves in spite of all the problems.

On Campus

By ELISE VALADE and JOHN WALSH

This week the Villanovan asked students: "If Campus Corner obtained a liquor license, would that influence your choice of drinking establishments?"

"I think people would go there more often because of the alcohol, but I don't know if I would."
Gina Dunleavy
Junior, Nursing

"No, because I'm not old enough to buy alcohol anyway."
Maria Karr
Freshman, Nursing

"Yes I would because it's closer than other bars."
Tom Walls
Freshman, Economics

"Yes, because it's close by and we need something new around here."
Janine Alfano
Sophomore, Nursing

"It would be good for take out, but I would never hang out there."
Tom Martin
Freshman, Business

"No, it's not my idea of a drinking establishment."
Lisa Perrotta
Freshman, Liberal Arts

"No, because I live near Kelly's."
Scott Gehring
Freshman, Liberal Arts

"Yes it would most definitely. Because of its proximity, it would be a lot easier to get to. I think our campus needs an establishment where students can get together and I think this would be a good place to start."
John Popp
Junior, Communications

"It wouldn't make any difference, I don't live near the campus."
Dominick Zampogna
Freshman, Business

CEN Fails to Lure Concert Goers

All was set. Campus Entertainment Network (CEN), in one of its biggest programming coups, would put together the biggest college concert ever, featuring one of the biggest names — The Who — ever to play the college circuit. And it'd all be done in one glorious night.

CEN would televise the group's purportedly-final North American concert live from Toronto, December 17th, beam the signal at a satellite, and back down to thousands of screaming college students who had paid to see the concert on 125 campuses around the U.S.

But when the signal got to Chapel Hill, North Carolina, for example, there was no one there to get it.

University of North Carolina students had been gone "at least a week" by then, says Linda Wright, UNC's major production coordinator.

Only seven schools nationwide that were still in session by then agreed to show the concert.

So it's been going for CEN, the space age venture organized in January, 1982 with a promise to bring live video concerts and events to campuses, which, of course, ordinarily couldn't afford to book those big-name acts and expensive theater productions.

But the marvelously-enriched campus cultural life CEN hoped for hasn't come off as planned.

CEN has had fewer productions, broadcast to fewer schools and lured a lot fewer students than it thought it would during its first year.

Things have gone badly enough for the company to call off its programming for the time being.

"There are many considerations" behind the company's failure to pull off its plans, says Robert Skinner, CEN's corporate communications director: (concert) hall considerations, funding, and it's a lot of hard work."

Individual campuses also tell stories of scheduling conflicts with tests and even party weekends, unforeseen costs, some internal inefficiencies, technical problems and competition from cable television driving them away from CEN.

When CEN broadcast a Devo concert to 15 campuses in October, only 100 students bought their way into a University of Washington 1200-seat auditorium. The same night at Memphis State, only 300 people wandered into a 3000-seat theater.

"It was a party weekend," explains MSU's Deborah Baker.

Fourteen hundred of UNC's 1600 seats were empty at the Devo concert, Wright reports.

And Lehigh University could coax only 500 students away from "the biggest night for fraternity parties" of the year to the Devo concert, Assistant Concert Director Steve Gordon says.

Things didn't go much better for CEN's broadcast of Duke Ellington's "Sophisticated Ladies" in November.

North Dakota had to call off its "Sophisticated Ladies" showing because of satellite interference, though North Carolina did find the "color, clarity and tone" of the show far superior to what it got from the Devo show.

There have in fact been bright spots in the experiment. North Dakota, for example, made a gross profit of $2900 off The Who concert, says Student Union Chairman Brian Wilson.

Notre Dame was happy with the 1500 Who tickets it sold, adds Steve Strake, its union director.

And, though it only sold 500 seats for Devo, Lehigh's Steve Gordon expects "a lot from (CEN) next year. It works well for us."

CEN still hopes to work for them. Skinner says the network is planning "four productions for the 1983-84 school year" and "developing a package of subscriptions with 15-to-30 presentations" after that.

"We were generally satisfied with the campus responses," he contends. "People do like the idea, as long as the quality of the picture and sound is high."

He's "still fairly confident we will meet" the goal of signing up 125 schools by the end of this school year.

To attract them, the company commissioned Dr. Perry Ashley of the University of South Carolina to poll college audiences at The Who broadcasts. Ashley refuses to divulge what he found out.

It might have been confusion. UNC's Wright says some students after both Devo and "Sophisticated Ladies" asked for their money back, saying they'd been deceived by ads for "live" concerts that were instead only televised live.

Wright, for one, is down on the project, although UNC is one of the 39 schools to sign two-year contracts with the network.

She worries that CEN's pay-per-view concerts can't compete with cable television's MTV, which features films and tapes of groups and artists performing their songs.

"CEN is not the kind of thing that is going to go over at our university," asserts University of Washington assistant programmer Jack Edgerton.

UW Programming Director Teresa Correa declined to show The Who "because Devo had been such a fiasco."

And Ball State University is withholding any further commitment to CEN for now. "CEN still owes us over $2000, and that is all I'm going to say," remarks Ball State's auditorium director Earl Williams.

Despite being wary of pay-per-view satellite concerts even after the local success of The Who, Notre Dame's Strake thinks it "might work one or two times a semester."

Panhellenic

To the Editor:

Through various sources, it has come to the attention of the Panhellenic Council that there are some questions that need to be answered and some problems that need to be reviewed concerning both Panhellenic Rush and the entire Panhellenic system here at Villanova.

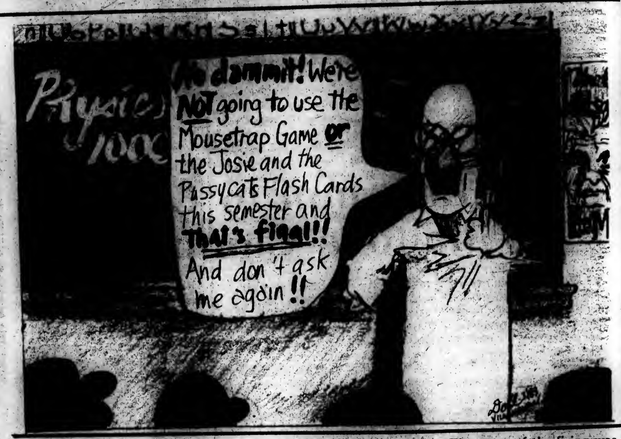
First of all, this semester's rush was the first one of a Panhellenic nature on this campus. It is designed to give everyone, both members of the sororities and those rushing, a fair chance, and the opportunity to meet as many people as possible. It was also meant to be an enjoyable experience for all. We began advertising rush prior to Thanksgiving and held our first informational meeting on November 29. Interested girls then had until Jan. 20, the beginning of the formal rush period, to register for rush. We ran announcements in the Villanovan and in Connelly Center, as well as posting them in forms, in the hope of reaching all those interested. I regret that we failed to do so; however, I strongly urge those who didn't rush to do so next year.

In regard to the other questions concerning the breakdowns of class balance and of commuters versus OCRs and residents, the Panhellenic Council has set up a committee to gather statistics and find out which groups of students are not well represented and then suggest ways to reach those students and get them involved.

I, as well as the other members of Panhellenic, firmly believe in the growth and strengthening of the entire Greek system on this campus. By no means do we want to cater to just an elite group of students. This rush attracted a larger number of girls than any previous one at Villanova and we hope that more and more girls will rush in the future. For these reasons, we have begun looking at the possibility of expanding our system so as to accommodate an even larger number of girls.

We are still in the formation stages of this organization and we are open to suggestions concerning our policies and procedures. If you have any suggestions or any questions about our Panhellenic system, I urge you to contact me or any member of the Panhellenic Council through the office of Student Activities.

Julie A. Dougherty
Panhellenic President



"Hi neighbors. Sure is a lovely day. A good day to try and make heads or tails of the Big East basketball tournament. It's not that far away you know. Why, it's coming up quicker than a speedy delivery. Sure it is. So, because you're special, and the Villanova basketball team is special, and we're all such good friends, let's predict how our friends will fare on the road to Albuquerque. Can you say Albuquerque? Al- boo- kur- key. Good. Well, though you know it's not nice to leave out some of our friends when we play games, we won't have to worry about Seton Hall and Providence, will we? Can you say 1-15? Sure you can." Toot! Toot! "Oh, it's time to take the trolley to the Land of Make Believe, where some of our friends have picked their favorite big boys in shorts. See what happens when you eat your collard greens? Sure. Well, first, for obvious reasons, our friend Mr. Mc Pheeley the postman, likes Syracuse because of their speedy delivery up and down and up and down the court. King Friday thinks that Georgetown's the one, although he still wants to know what the hell, oops, heck, a Hoya is." Knock. Knock. "Oh, someone's at the back door. It must be Boston College. You know, maybe the Land of Make Believe really is in the Roberts Center. #@&%@%!! I mean shucks. But, what will make my special friends at Villanova happy is Miss Henrietta Pussycat's prediction. She insists, meow, meow, that the Wildcats, meow, meow, will be eating meow, meow, tacos, meow, meow, with their Tender meow, Vittles, meow this Easter. Meow. So, that should put a smile on all the little Villanovans' faces. Well, goodbye now, neighbor. And remember you're special 'cause you're you. What a beautiful day in the neighborhood, a neighborly day for a beauty, would you be mine . . ."

Kappa Pledge

To the Editor:

I have a few comments to make in reference to the student who wrote in about the sororities here. I'm a Kappa pledge and I live off campus, as do a number of other pledges. I'm living proof that living on campus is hardly a requirement for being asked to pledge. I think she's kidding herself if she thinks where a girl lives has any impact on the sorority's decision. How about giving Villanova's fraternity system a little more credit?

R.A. Firing

To the Editor:

In the last issue of the Villanovan, residents of Stanford 1-C, including myself, wrote a letter concerning the firing of our resident assistant, Chris Kenney by the Office of Resident Life.

The cause of the firing was a violation of the visitation policy, by which he had a female in his room for 30 minutes at 9 a.m. One small mistake in all of Chris' four years does not warrant such strong disciplinary action, even if he is an R.A. If Father Driscoll made one mistake, would he be dismissed?

Chris Janosik, director of resident life, considers this to be a "major violation of policy." This is based on his own views, which is not supported by the majority of those on 1-C or the University. Janosik believes that students should have no input in this decision. The idea, that an action can be taken without considering those involved or the effect of the action on people, is unChristian. Villanova does not exist for the sake of the administrators, but for the students. The students, therefore, should be involved in the determination of what is a major violation.

It is unfortunate that Janosik did not read his own article in the Villanovan. He said Lent is "a time for personal growth." Kenney had emphasized this belief in "the communal element and personal growth" in his duties as R.A. Chris also treated others as equals, not as subordinates. Our university exclaims in its commercials, "Villanova: Person to Person;" it is too bad the administration does not accept this attitude.

Former Student's Success Story

By NANCY C. ALBERICI

A picture of President Reagan shaking hands with Villanova alumni, Pa. Rep. Robert J. Flick, 16?th district, decorates the wall behind Flick's desk, in his modest office.

A young, successful realtor, and a "typical suburban" family man, Flick exemplifies the American way of life. Success, according to Flick, is not measured by material gain. "Success is more than just earning a great deal of money. You don't measure success in terms of wealth. You measure success in terms of the relationships you develop throughout life," Flick explained. For Flick, his "lovely wife," Patricia and his three "fine sons," Christopher, Michael and Jeffrey, are the primary elements of his success.

Hard work, coupled with a positive attitude is the foundation on which Flick has built a prosperous career. "I don't think you have seen anyone become successful without hard work. You need an inner strength which derives from a positive mental outlook. We all make mistakes. We should see it as an opportunity to learn and not make the same mistakes," stated Flick.

Throughout his years at Villanova, Flick majored in marketing and managed to work 30 hours a week at several area service stations, in order to finance his education. His busy schedule did not afford Flick the opportunity to engage in an extensive social life. However, he was an active member of Delta Phi Epsilon and attended various fraternity functions on the weekends.

Reflecting upon his major, Flick felt that marketing provided him with a background that is useful to him as a realtor as well as a state representative. "Marketing is probably the key area in the business world in terms of the overall impact of whether a company will be successful," explained Flick.

Shortly after his January inauguration, Flick was appointed to the House Finance and Labor Relations committees for the 1983-84 legislative session.

As a member of the Finance committee, Flick's major concern is local tax reform. "I will resist any increase in taxes, although it may be necessary," Flick said. Specifically, he will be co-sponsoring legislation to give suburban residents who work in Philadelphia a city wage tax break.

Playing an active role on the labor relations committee, Flick is focusing on easing Pennsylvania's high level of unemployment. "The best way that I can make an impact at the state level to create jobs and to help the business community, is to be sensitive to the fact that you need to have a 'pay as you go' government. You can't commit the services if you don't have the funds," commented Flick.

Robert J. Flick

Flick has recently co-sponsored a health care plan known as "MEDIC-UN" which allows the unemployed to obtain minimum health insurance coverage without further diminishing public funds. "I believe it is the most affordable way to meet the unemployed persons' health care needs," Flick commented.

The student body, Flick believes, is a valuable resource, aiding him with thoughts and proposed solutions for today's economic dilemmas. "I hope to have the opportunity to be involved with the student body at Villanova. I recognize that the student body has a contribution to make right now and I would like very much to open the lines of communication so we can start working together," commented Flick.

At this time, Flick doesn't have any plans to further his political career, but as Flick noted, "When I was going to school I never thought about running for an elective office."

From Lebanon to Life On Villanova Campus

This is the first installment in a three part series on individual Villanova foreign students and their experiences that led to their emigration to the United States and ultimately to Villanova.

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

The young man sitting across from me in the Connelly Center looked as comfortable and at home as the other students around us. However, not many, if even one of the others could speak of the experiences that Elie Khoury related to me.

Born in Beirut, Lebanon in 1961, Elie is the youngest of four males and two females. Lebanon is a predominately Christian country surrounded by Moslem countries. The Christians and the Moslems live together in Lebanon but the constitution favors the Christians, which creates much tension. War broke out in April 1975 and lasted until late 1976. The war was really not civil or religious but was primarily between different factions with different beliefs," explained Elie. The Phalangists were the right-wing factions fighting the Palestinians, who wanted to create a Moslem Lebanon.

Elie Khoury

"I witnessed much of the war. Because I was young and healthy, I was a 'hot item' for the guerilla draft," remembered Elie. He and one of his brothers refused to fight for the Phalangists and because they tried to remain neutral, they lived in constant fear of assassins from both sides. "The Phalangists would enter homes and pull out the young males; we had to literally hide to avoid this," described Elie.

Elie and his brother alternated days to venture out for food, help carry the wounded to hospitals and aid other families. "We did what we could but because of the constant danger, we remained in shelter most of the time," said Elie.

The two brothers acquired their primary and half of their secondary educations in a French school in Lebanon. In 1976, they fled to Britain to finish their high school educations at Wycliffe College, a private boarding school. Of his experiences in Britain, Elie said, "The adaptation was difficult because although I spoke French and Arabic I did not speak English; I had no relatives in Britain and I found the British to have rather cold personalities." Upon finishing high school, Elie came to the United States and began classes at Villanova in January, 1980.

"From the first day, my experiences in the United States were fantastic. I spoke English and the Americans were more receptive than the British. I feel this is because of the diverse backgrounds and cultures found here in America," Elie said.

Reflecting on his experiences, Elie related, "I really grew up too fast, but my upbringing was so good that I survived. Each of my family members is willing to sacrifice for one another; our family structure is very strong. I feel my mother was cheated; she did not see me grow up and still thinks of me as a 15-year-old boy." Though he has been home only a total of 20 days since 1979, Elie keeps in close touch with his remaining family in Lebanon.

Elie is graduating with a BSG degree with math and business minors and hopes to enroll in a MBA program. He says, "I have adapted very easily to the American lifestyle; I play rugby, badminton and tennis and I love to dance." Elie concluded, with a broad grin, "I have had very fine experiences in the United States and at Villanova and I will be very pleased to become an American citizen in two years."

Saco For 'Sports'

By KEVIN McKENNA

Saco East is to Villanova what Cooper, Rawlings and Wilson are to the National Hockey League, the National Football League and major league baseball, respectively. Saco East is the major supplier of sportswear for most of the fraternities, sororities and intramural teams on campus.

Saco East is a branch of Saco Incorporated, a chain of sporting goods stores in the Pittsburgh area. However, it is operated independently by Villanova graduates Moe and John Blatt.

"Actually, it started out as a hobby," said Moe who graduated in 1978 with a degree in marketing. "I was always printing up shirts or jerseys as favors to my friends and eventually one thing led to another."

Saco East's new storefront says it all.

As a junior high school student in the Pittsburgh area, Moe was introduced to the retail business while working part-time in a sporting goods store. He continued to work through high school and eventually found his way to Villanova in 1974, as his brother had done six years earlier. When he came to the Main Line campus, he thought he had left his retail days behind him. However, a certain chain of events renewed his interest in the field.

"I became a member of D T D and we went out to buy jackets and shirts," he recalled. "However," he continued, "I quickly noticed that the various sporting goods stores were raking the fraternities over the coals."

Moe began to print his own sportswear. After graduating Moe followed his brother's example and became a salesman for a tennis racquet company.

"I really got sick of all the traveling," he said. "I was responsible for nine states and went as far as Illinois. It would take me a week to work my way out and another week to work my way back," he explained. "And usually," he continued, "I would spend a week out there. You can live out of a suitcase and eat junk food for only so long," he added.

By REV. RALPH MONTEIRO, O.S.A.

I have a friend who may well be a mystic. She is particularly gifted with the ability to symbolize the most fundamental truths of our faith. For example, at the beginning of Lent she gave me a small purple candle to which was attached a scroll on which was written "LOVE IS FORGIVENESS."

John's gospel elaborates on these words: "Yes, God so loved the world that He gave His only Son that whoever believes in Him may not die but may have eternal life" (John 3:16). Elsewhere he describes God as "love" (1 John 4:8) and increases our understanding of "love is forgiving" by writing "if we acknowledge our sins, (God) who is just can be trusted to forgive our sins and cleanse us from every wrong" (1 John 1:9).

The acknowledgement of our sinfulness is what this Sunday's gospel encourages us to do. In the parable of the prodigal son, the son acknowledges: "father, I have sinned against God and against you, I no longer deserve to be called your son" (Luke 15:21). The father had awaited the return of his son, seen him approaching and ran out to meet him, and made the reconciliation between himself and his son worthy of a celebration. Jesus announced our God as love that is forgiving.

Jesus is a credible witness to this truth. Throughout the gospels his own relationships with others, his acts of love and forgiveness flowed from the center of his spirit. Being one with the giver of life and the giver of forgiveness he challenged us to pray to our Father: "forgive us our sins as we forgive those who sin against us" (Matthew 6:12).

This "LOVE IS FORGIVING" makes its way throughout the scriptures. We were made "in his image" (Genesis 1:27), "God is love" (1 John 4:8), "whoever has seen me has seen the Father" (John 14:9), "as my love has been for you so must your love be for each other" (John 13:34), "whatever you declare loosed or earth shall be held loosed in heaven" (Matthew 18:18), "Father, forgive them; they do not know what they are doing" (Luke 23:34), "seventy times seven times" (Matthew 18:22). We are called to be the forgiven and the forgiver. What we have received as gift, we must give.

In another parable Jesus warns us not to make light of the gifts we have received. (Matthew 19:21-35). A steward owed his master a large amount of money and received a pardoh because he begged for mercy. When he was pleaded for mercy by a co-worker for a far lesser amount, he had the man thrown in prison until the last penny was paid. The response of the community to the actions of the unforgiving steward caused the master to throw him into prison until he repaid what he owed.

The challenge before the community of believers today is to be schooled in the discipleship of the love which they profess: "we believe in the forgiveness of sins. The natural unfolding of our God-given giftedness to be forgiven and power to forgive evidences our maturing in the image of the God who is love. It is this growth of which we speak this Lent 1983.

Student Donations Sought

By CATHY GROODY

The Villanova Committee for the Homeless is a group of committees established through Campus Ministry who volunteer their time to aid the homeless of Philadelphia. "We are a group of students who feel we have something to give — namely our time," said Edward Sullivan co-chairman of the Villanova Committee for the Homeless. "We believe there are ways of relieving the suffering of others through this committee."

In the past two decades, 20,000 people have been released from area mental institutions. These homeless individuals are suffering from diseases such as schizophrenia or organic brain syndrome. Others have taken to the streets because jails and hospitals are too full to house them.

These people are the mentally ill, the chronic alcoholic and the unemployed victims who have found themselves with no place to go and no one to turn to.

Committees have gone to such shelter homes as Mercy Hospice, a shelter for women and children, St. Francis, a shelter for men and St. Claire Thimble in Kensington, that is for women. While these students are responsible for giving food and clothing to the people at the homes, others actually take backpacks of food to the ones out on the streets.

"But these students cannot do it alone," said Sullivan. They need support from people on campus. If anyone wants to help, whether it be their time or donations of food and clothing, their efforts will be

Spanish Poets to Lecture

A bilingual lecture and poetry reading, featuring Chilean poet Gonzaol Rojas and Prof. Alfredo A. Roggiano of the University of Pittsburgh, will be held March 17 at 4:15 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Jointly sponsored by the English Department and the department of Modern Languages, the distinguished Roggiano will lecture on "Jano en rostros de poesia" (an interpretation of the different ways to write poetry illustrated with poems of representative poets including Roggiano himself).

A distinguished service professor of Hispanic Languages and Literature at the University of Pittsburgh, Roggiano was awarded first prize in an Argentina poetry contest for his 1946 work El rio iluminado and in 1951 received the International Prize of Poetry for Viage impreciso.

Roggiano has also authored

books on various periods in Spanish American Literature including Baroque, Modernism and Romanticism. The poet also serves as director of Revista Iberoamericana, a journal devoted to the culture and literature of Iberoamerica.

Rojas, a noted poet who has spoken previously at Villanova, has been a visiting professor at Columbia University in New York, the University of Pittsburgh and Visiting Professor at the University of Chicago. His research works include Dario y mas Dario, Antologia de la Poesia Latinoamericana and Venezuela en sus Revistas Literarias y Culturales. Rojas has also taught at universities in Chile, Germany and Venezuela.

Phila. Artist's Work Exhibited

By BARBARA SIMON

Imagine four pastel colored heads lined symmetrically; one is light blue, the next is yellow, one is beige and the last one is pink. The heads are set in front of a background of sky-blue-dabbed spots. The shape of each head is identical, the stare is the same and their decisions are the same. It is "The Board of Directors," one of Julius T. Bloch's (1888-1966) most famous paintings. Bloch's one man show is on exhibit in the Villanova University Art Center from Feb. 20 to March 21.

Born in the town of Kehl, Germany, Bloch came to Philadelphia with his family when he was five. He attended the Pennsylvania Museum School of Industrial Art for three years and then he studied at the Pennsylvania Academy for four years, winning Cresson Traveling Fellowships in 1911 and 1912.

Bloch was a professional portrait painter in the 1920s in Philadelphia and was active in Works Progress Administration Projects in Philadelphia, producing many works which are on loan at the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

In the 1930s and 1940s, Bloch was one of the first painters concerned with the American Negro situation. His oil painting "I Will Lift Mine Eyes Unto the Hills" is a portrait of a black man who arches his neck forward as the large whites of his eyes strain upward to the sky in a haunting manner. Bloch portrayed the sufferings of innocent people and he had a natural empathy for the working class, whom he captured in moving portraits and in lithographs. In one picture a young Negro widow sits despondently with her chin in her hand. A 1937 lithograph called "War" is a dramatic portrayal of a woman in a kerchief, hair pulled tightly back, who looks forward with wide fearful eyes while clutching her infant close to her breast. The effect is pensive and enduring as seen in many other of Bloch's works like "Park Benchers" and "Night" in which men are sitting in depressed positions, arms folded or their hands in their faces, while a cold, hunched man huddles in a corner.

Bloch's later work was influenced by his trips to Greece and Italy as shown in "Young Man at the Window" and "Young Woman at the Window." The predominant colors are bright yellows and oranges with checkered shirts and geometric outlines. In "The Boy with the Strawberry Mask" (1939) all the portrait is charmingly basic, the simplicity in the boys face and the background clouds is pervasive.

In 1939 Bloch's first one-man show was held in Philadelphia and he continued to have yearly exhibits. In 1947 Bloch joined the faculty at the Pennsylvania Academy where he taught for twenty-five years. He was represented in all three Philadelphia Arts Festival exhibitions in 1955, 1959 and 1962.

This exhibit at Villanova is an excellent opportunity to witness the humanistic and talented works of a famous local artist. His works exemplify his sensitivity to minorities during the Depression and vivid dramatizations of portraits of suffering individuals.

Through the generosity of Benjamin Bernstein, the owner of many of Bloch's works, this exhibit was made possible.

Homeless Need Help

greatly appreciated. They are in desperate need of everything," he said. "Any kind of food or clothing that may seem useless to you may be useful to someone else."

"Villanova students have been given a lot," said Sullivan. "We have all been given tremendous opportunities that these people have no concept of. As a community, it is up to us to look beyond the fences of Lancaster Avenue to the world of people who don't know what it's like to always have food, much less an education. These people are starving so why can't we as a community that has so much to be thankful for, give to others who have nothing at all. If everyone was to donate even just one can of fruit or one article of clothing, it would not solve the problems of the homeless but at least ease their suffering a little more. They need toiletries like toothpaste, shampoo, soap, and cleaning equipment like sponges, brushes, mops and detergent. Even extra towels, linens or articles of clothing are needed.

On March 13, the Villanova Committee for the Homeless will start a food and clothing drive. They will be going to every dorm on campus as well as work through the Association of Commuting Students (ACS) to encourage commuting students to donate as well.

So Moe left his job and with the help of John opened their first store adjacent to Kelly's Bar in 1974. The partnership was ideal because it not only enables Moe to escape the rigors of travel but in addition, allows him to buy from his favorite salesman, John.

"I buy from my brother," Moe said. "That's part of the reason why we can offer a 10 percent discount to all college and high school kids." "I don't have to worry about whether I'm really getting the best buy or what's in fashion this summer."

Four years later the brothers have done quite well. After starting the venture on a shoe string they have moved to a bigger location at 1045 Lancaster and soon plan to offer sneakers and other athletic shoes in addition to their usual stock. The brothers are constantly looking to expand but are cautious about doing so.

"We're not setting the world on fire but we're not getting burned either," he explained. "Sure, we've been cautious but we own everything in our store and therefore we don't have to worry about being in debt."

Ideally, Blatt would like to cover his overhead with retail sales, leaving all group sales for profit. At the moment though, Blatt estimated that 80 percent of the business is team and group sales. This too represents the cautiousness of the brothers for they only have to order from the manufacturer that which has been ordered in the store.

"You're not really taking a chance unless you become greedy," Moe explained. "There's a lot of untapped resources out there but you better not try to pull the wool over anyone's eyes," he cautioned. "Because," he added, "then your customers will become someone elses. People aren't stupid; they are very aware about what's going on."

Finally, Moe commented on his Villanova education.

"My education at Villanova has enlightened me on a lot of things I would never have thought of," he responded. "It taught me to become more aware of different intangibles and the fact that you have to do your homework just like in school. You always have to be aware of your competition."

Lugosch and All That Jazz

By Dawn C. Balcerzak

Eric Lugosch is an accomplished musician who has performed with the likes of Bill Cosby, Ben Vereen, Joan Rivers, Jerry Lewis, Lou Rawls, Tom Jones, Sergio Franchi, Buddy Rich, Peter Nero, Jerry Vale, Al Martino, Vic Damone, Mel Torme, Tony Bennett and Frank Sinatra. The Villanovan had a chance to talk with Lugosch about his life-long obsession — music.

Villanovan: Can you give a little background information on yourself?

Lugosch: I've studied with Ben Jarnoff, a guitarist in the area who was Matt Jarnoff's son. Matt played with the Philadelphia Orchestra and was one of the co-founders of the New School of Music. I've studied composition, attended Temple University as a composition major which is really classical training.

Villanovan: Have you played with any artists of popular note?

Lugosch: I've played with Leon Redbone and Roy Bookbinder twice.

Villanovan: What music do you prefer to play?

Lugosch: I play a lot of ragtime, which is what I teach; blues, such as Mississippi John Hurt, Rev. Gary Davis. I teach people how to play running bass, etc. That's the kind of music I perform unless I play with a band; then I perform the music that I like best, which is jazz. A lot of Billie Holiday, Esther Phillips — the straightforward jazz.

Villanovan: There seems to be a ragtime revival slowly taking place. I think your offering lessons will attract many people who are interested in this type of music.

Lugosch: I'm offering lessons at Medley Music because my teacher Ben Jarnoff was the teacher there. I teach people to play songs and play by ear so they can sit down, enjoy themselves, hear the songs and figure them out. Music such as, say, David Bromberg.

Villanovan: Are you giving lessons to the person who isn't the "serious" musician?

Lugosch: Sure. While there are people who want to learn how to orchestrate and compose, there are also people who want to sit down and just play a few songs. I teach fingerpicking, which really isn't that hard to learn or teach. You sit down and do it. The student immediately gets immersed in that and starts using his "ear" and learns.

Villanovan: Why do you feel the need to teach this type of guitar?

Lugosch: There are no real music schools in this immediate area. As far as fingerpicking goes, many teachers just do not teach it. There is only one other person in the area who I can think of, offhand, that teaches it.

Villanovan: Is there any one reason why the area is musically starving?

Lugosch: Yes. I think it was a real shame that the Main Point closed down. A lot of good musical acts came around here locally. There was a "music scene" going on. Through my teaching lessons, I'm also trying to encourage musicians to get out and play.

Villanovan: What is your selling point as a music teacher?

Lugosch: Well, I have a fine musical background and teach at a place that caters to a vast number of professional musicians. It's the only store that carries high quality acoustic instruments and has quality people working there. It also offers a private studio with a relaxed atmosphere.

Villanovan: What is the cost of a lesson?

Lugosch: I believe that it is $8 for a half hour, with the month's payment being made the first of every month.

Villanovan: Do you have any comments you would like to leave us with?

Lugosch: There is a lot of great talent out there that's just waiting to be discovered. It's hard work. I'm doing what I love; a lot of people would like to be able to make that same statement.

Sooner Or Later
You'll Get Responsibility Like This.
In The Navy It's Sooner.

You're maneuvering 445 feet of guided missile frigate through the navigational hazards and non-stop traffic of one of the world's busiest ports.

But you'll dock safely. Because you know your equipment. You know your men. And even when the responsibility weighs in at 3,600 tons... you're ready.

After four years of college, you're ready for more responsibility than most civilian jobs offer. Navy officers get the kind of job and responsibility they want, and they get it sooner.

Navy officers are part of the management team after 16 weeks. Instead of boot camp, officer candidates receive four months of leadership training. It's professional schooling designed to sharpen their technical and management skills.

Then, in their first assignment, Navy officers get management experience that could take years in private industry. And they earn the decision-making authority it takes to make that responsibility pay off.

As their management abilities grow, Navy officers can take advantage of advanced education and training in fields as varied as operations management, electronics, and systems analysis. In graduate school it would cost you thousands; in the Navy we pay you.

And the Navy pays well. The starting salary is $17,000 (more than most companies pay). And that's on top of a comprehensive benefits program that can include special duty pay. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, the salary is up to as much as $31,000.

If you qualify to be an officer in the Navy, chances are you have what it takes to succeed. The Navy just makes it happen faster.

'Frances': A Product of Her Society

By BARBARA SIMON

Hollywood did it again to Frances Farmer. They did it to her when she was alive and consistently exploited her when she was dead. A poor movie was made about Farmer, while the best of efforts went into dramatizing and fabricating her life. In the 1930s, Farmer had the worst reputation as an aspiring actress in Hollywood; she did not listen to her mother, talked back to directors and was finally blacklisted in Hollywood. Her outbursts and dissident behavior led her to several arrests, and for eight years she was committed (by her mother) to insane asylums.

"Frances" is a movie about the rise and fall of a film star. The Hollywood pills, alcohol, pressures and Farmer's domineering mother pushed her toward conflicting mental anxieties. Confused and stubborn, Farmer refused to conform despite the consequences.

Frances (Jessica Lange) is sent to the state hospital.

Jessica Lange plays Farmer with the same vigor and iron spirit that seems remarkably close to the real Farmer. Lange's facial expressions become the expressions of Farmer in her intense moments of mental torture when she fights her mother, Hollywood and the doctors. Lange acts indomitably as she captures the weaknesses in Farmer which eventually destroyed her and the strengths that kept ther alive. Lange's hard work and private interest in Farmer's life since 1973 paid off. Lange says, "I believe Frances Farmer was a very complicated person. She has a great vitality, energy and honesty. These attributes were magnified still further by her natural beauty and intelligence that threatens some people — some became extremely vindictive because they couldn't understand or control her."

In the 1930s, Paramount Pictures called Farmer the most difficult actress in Hollywood. They could not control her, and even her arrogant mother could not control her. Only the doctors could tame her by hydro treatments (hours spent in an icy tub of water), shock treatments and a frontal lobotomy.

The major influence on Farmer's life was her mother Lillian (analogous to "Mommy Dearest's" Joan Crawford). Lillian is played by Kim Stanley who succeeds in portraying the tyrant mother of Farmer. In her autobiography, "Will There Really be a Morning?" Farmer wrote that her childhood was cold, unloving and insecure. One scene from "Frances" contradicts this by showing a flashback to her joyful childhood days; laughing and hugging with her mother, an apparently fictitious scene.

"Frances" indeed exemplifies the melodramatic aspects of Farmer's life. True, she was a radical who was a determined nonconformist. But columnist John Rosenfield wrote in her defense, "The Frances Farmer incident should never have happened. This unusually gifted actress was no threat against law and order or public safety. Something that began as merely a traffic reprimand grew into a case of personal violence, a serious charge and a jail sentence. And all because a sensitive, bigh-strung girl was on the verge of a nervous breakdown. The terrible truth is that she stood alone, and lost."

However, the movie version gives Farmer a friend, Harry York, played by Sam Shepherd who is her sometimes lover, but more often her savior. He rescues her from two different asylums and through the years keeps in contact and often asks her to marry him. Unfortunately the big escape scenes are the worst examples of Hollywood's treacherous expoitation.

"Frances" is directed by the noted film editor Graeme Clifford, produced by Jonathan Sanger "The Elephant Man and co-produced by Marie Yates.

Despite its fabrications and distortions, "Frances" successfully depicts the emotional anxieties, culminating in the mind of a young woman amidst powerful Hollywood demands, which contrast vile, humiliating treatment in several mental institutions. Subjected to degradation, beatings and rape, in the end Farmer ultimately gave in to authority. Farmer became systematically de-energized and was subdued to the point of mindlessness. Lange is worth seeing tor her excellent portrayal of a doomed underdog. Farmer's battles against authority are futile and self-destructing, and her mental suffering is beyond belief.

Matrons drag Frances out of the courtroom.

Young Reaps New Harvest

By JAYNE STUART

Neil Young fans have learned to expect the unexpected. Alas, it is doubtful that very many were prepared for his latest effort "Trans." Even the music industry cannot escape the computerization of our society and Young has been caught; the question is, was it voluntary, or was it forced? The theme of "Trans" is just that, a transition from traditional rock-n-roll to the synthesized, computerized sounds of today's music.

Neil Young pondering the success of his latest album "Trans."

This album is different, the most noticeable difference is that Young's voice is transmitted through a voicebox. The problem is that the transition does not seem to be complete, as there appears on this album two fairly "traditional" songs. This almost seems to indicate that Young is not completely confident in this new medium. He is testing out this new material, while accompanying it with some sure-fired hits that will surely gain commercial attention and airplay.

The lyrics to the songs become unintelligible without the lyric sheet and their meaning is lost. This is too bad because these lyrics are creative and humorous, intermittently. The songs become one big mess of computerized music because they sound so similar. Although Young's croaking voice has never been considered his greatest asset, his lyrics are, and to hide them in a voicebox is oractically a sin.

"Little Thing Called Love" and "Like An Inca" are the only uncomputerized melodies. These two songs are catchy and have lyrics that demonstrate the usual creativity and insightfulness that have become Young's trademark. Unfortunately, these two songs are the first and last songs on the album, respectively, and they mistakenly set the listener up for a mroe traditional Young album. Halfway through the album Young seems to lose his direction. The computer age is upon the listener.

In a way, this could be interpreted as Young's message — computers are invading every aspect of our life. At the same time the computerization of our society is causing us to lose our identity. If this is Young's message, it is rather successfully communicated, as the voice on "Trans" has no emotion, individuality or feeling.

With this theme in mind, "Mr. Soul" was the obvious choice to put to computers. The song loses its soul, and could be renamed more appropriately "Just Mr." This song is one from Young's Buffalo Springfield days, a group he was a member of in the 1960s.

"Trans" marks yet another new area for Young. He has been solo since 1969, after breaking up with Crosby, Stills and Nash. Young has almost 20 solo albums to date, along with three movies. He has had countless hits and has been praised from coast to coast. It is safe to assume that Young feels comfortable enough to experiment, much to his listener's chagrin, at times.

Young is the ultimate chameleon. One never knows what he will do next, as he is consistently inconsistent. Anyone who lets Devo choreograph his stage show, "Rust Never Sleeps" has got to be unpredictable. As for this year's show, no one saw it because after being snowed out and rescheduled, Young cancelled the show altogether. Typical.

However "Trans" does merit an attentive listen because there is a message to be found. Still, most of Young's fans will be disappointed. That is, until his next LP is released.

The Metamorphosis of a Musician

By JAYNE M. STUART

There is scarcely a young adult or teen who has not heard of Jackson Browne or some of his music. For those who consider his songs and lyrics a part of their life, here is the book to reveal the life of the man who has composed such songs as "The Pretenders," "Jamaica, Say You Will," "Doctor My Eyes," and "Running On Empty." The book is Jackson Browne, the story of a hold out. Those of you who know Browne's music will recognize in the title the name of his latest release. That album was a conscious attempt by Browne to expose himself to his audience like he never had before.

It is obvious that author Rich Wiseman did his research well on the book. The book begins with Browne's grandfather and the influence he had on Browne's father, Jack Browne. Browne's father was a fine musician himself and was intermittenly in different jazz bands, therefore Jackson's early childhood was filled with music and was a sort of inspiration to him.

Throughout his life, Browne has displayed an uncanny single-minded dedication in anything that interests him. This can be seen in his determination to obtain a varsity letter in high school. Browne joined the football, track and wrestling teams but didn't really have what it took to be a star. His coach said though, "He gave it all he had." Since Browne was not very adept at sports, he turned to music. During this time, folk music was at its height (Joan Baez, Peter, Paul and Mary, etc.) and Browne was attracted to this style of music because of the lyrics. Anyone who listens to Browne's music now should be thankful to these early musicians' influence on Browne because his lyrics are surpassed by few people in the music business today. Another person who had a great impact on Browne is Bob Dylan. He is the one who inspired Browne to put his poetry to music.

The first band Browne was in was The Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, a zany, ragtime outfit. Its sound was good-timey, very unlike Browne's serious and earnest lyrics and compositions of the time. While still a member of the Dirt Band, Browne wrote his first hit song "These Days." This song is about a lost love and the loss of youthful innocence. It was this song that made people stop and listen to this 17 year old. Soon after this, Browne parted company with the Dirt Band, although he still played as a warm-up act for them at the local club, the Paradox. It was during one of these performances that Browne was discoverd by Dick Roaimini, a well-connected music-biz personality. He taped some of Browne's music and began trying to get a record company interested in an album for Browne.

Since then, Browne has to his credit many fine songs and albums; you could say he has come a long way. Browne, however, is not one to be satisfied with the status quo and never stops trying to improve his recordings, live performances and music.

"Throughout his life, Browne has displayed an uncanny, single-minded dedication . . ."

Browne has been responsible for promoting the musical careers of other artists, too. One of these benefitting from Browne's tutelage is Warren Zevon ("Werewolves of London," "Excitable Boy," "Roland the Headless Thompson Gunner") who Browne introduced at one of his own performances at the Main Point, which used to be located in Bryn Mawr. He set aside production on his own work to help Zevon produce his second album. Browne and Zevon have been friends for years and Browne stuck by Zevon in his tough years. At this time, it was necessary for Zevon to have a hit album or his music career would have come to an abrupt end. The album was a success due to Browne's loyalty.

Shortly after Browne returned to the work on his own album, his wife Phyllis committed suicide. The effect this had on Browne is

They're back — No it's not John, Paul, George and Ringo, but Joey, Johnny, Dee Dee and Marky. The Ramones, everyone's favorite three-chord band returns with "Subterranean Jungle," an LP that is (as the press release says) "unmistakably Ramones."

The band, which burst onto the scene in 1975, helped launch the punk-rock movement with their simplistic lyrics and chord changes. Resplendent in leather jackets and t-shirts, the Ramones were the "Rebels with a Cause." That being the rebellion against the dreary laid-back music of the '70 s.

Led by singer Joey Ramone, a 6'7" mumbler, the band was the Beach Boys at 78rpm's. They may have not played all that great, but they sure as hell symbolized the passion that was missing in rock and roll at the time.

In 1980 the Ramones teamed up with "legendary" producer Phil Spector in releasing "End of the Century," a flop album that tried to alter the band's sound. The addition of horns and slick production turned many people off (rightly so) since the Ramones' charm came from their raw sound.

With the music scene once again needing a swift kick in the behind, "Subterranean Jungle" is a pleasure. The album's 12 tracks (played in typical Ramones fashion — 30 minutes) is a mixture of fine cover versions ("Little Bit O'Soul," "Time Has Come Today") and originals ("Psycho Therapy," "Outsider") reminiscent of the band's early days.

What makes this, the Ramones seventh album, so enjoyable is the "Subterranean Jungle" shows that the band realizes its limitations and has rediscovered its sense of humor. "Everytime I Eat Vegetables It Makes Me Think of You" contains such "memorable" lyrics as She turned into a head of lettuce/She eats Thorazine in her farina . . . Of course this is a love-song.

Once again the Ramones are a breath of fresh air in what is again becoming a stale music "industry." So don't look so glum. Music is supposed to be fun. Pick up "Subterranean Jungle" and don't take it so seriously. The Ramones don't. For Godsakes, they aren't even brothers.

Gibson Makes for Interesting Year

By CAROLYN MILLER

"The Year of Living Dangerously," directed by Peter Weir and produced by James McElroy, is film starring Mel Gibson and Sigourney Weaver. Set in communist Indonesia during the middle sixties, it is an intense narrative about the riotous times present in the country and the Australian journalist sent there to report on the political conditions.

The setting realistically depicts the violent atmosphere of a country in turmoil. There is Sukarno, the communist party leader ruling the country, who is ignorant to the corruption, disease and famine of the people. Opposite to this leader is PEKA, a rebellious, discontented group of Indonesians, who demand better living conditions for their people through numerous riots.

Caught in the middle of this revolution is Guy Hamilton. The leading role of Hamilton is convincingly played by Mel Gibson, who looks like a GQ or Calvin Klein model but can also act. Guy is the Australian journalist sent on his first major assignment by the ABS radio/TV corporation. He is one of four journalists from the western world stationed in Indonesia. Viewed by his comrades as the "new kid on the journalists' block," he gets the first shot at several crucial, international stories and is looked upon with envy.

The second main character is Billy Kwan, an Indonesian cameraman who aids Hamilton. As the movie begins, he is the narrator. His voice has a coarse, unsettling — but feminine quality to it. At first glance, Billy is seen as an unpleasant looking, almost deformed dwarf.

Fleetingly, his physical appearance has a hint of femininity to it, but that is soon forgotten.

He is a well-spoken, intelligent Indonesian, definitely the brightest in his country. He knows the right people, takes a liking to Guy and helps him get the interviews for those stories.

Although Kwan is somewhat mysterious, for he keeps files on many of the people in the country, the audience grows to like him. He is only concerned with improving the poor conditions of his country. Concerning his deformity, he sadly but wisely states, "As a dwarf, one can be wise and no one will envy you." The closing credits reveal that this role is superbly played by Linda Hunt.

As an essential element for many good movies is romance, so it is passionately portrayed by Hamilton and the female lead Jill Bryant. This role is played by Sigourney Weaver, who slightly resembles Jane Fonda. Jill, an assistant to a British official stationed in Indonesia, is mysteriously attractive and, at first, quite aloof to Hamilton's attention.

A major theme in the story is Hamilton's obsession to get that "breaking story." At the movie's opening, Kwan comments to him, "The problem with you journalists is that you never want to get involved." On the contrary, Hamilton becomes too involved. Bryant receives top secret information that if Hamilton reports, it could jeopardize the country and their relationship. Guy is his own antagonist with the inner struggle of deciding how much getting that "breaking story" is worth.

A fine job is done on the film's photography. The scenes depicting famine, starvation, disease and the violent riots are realistically and brutally shown. Other parts of the country, revealing lush, green lands, are beautifully photographed. There is an excellent contrast between the starving Indonesian masses and the well-to-do political aristocrats, who are mostly from the west.

There is a moderate to increasing pace as the movie draws to its end. The mounting, pressure-filled tone releases a foreboding feeling as the audience awaits the political movements' actions and the journalist's reactions.

The only setback to the film is that the complicated plot of the political conditions may at times be too involved to follow. One may go away from the movie wishing to have known more background about the political situations of that time.

"The Year of Living Dangerously," filled with good actors, impact, controversial political problems and romance, is highly recommended. Hamilton is a young journalist who sees his assignment as a challenge, and surely lives his time in Indonesia dangerously.

A Catalogue of Knowledge

"The Philadelphia Resource Guide" is an informative collection of noteworthy tidbits which makes Philadelphia an exciting city. The guide's publication was funded by The Pew Memorial Trust along with several local corporations for the purpose of providing, not only Philadelphian's, but also visitors, a means by which they can find out almost anything pertaining to the Delaware Valley.

The format of the guide is similiar to that of a college handbook. It is divided into six sections which covers topics such as the various types of architecture which can be found throughout Philadelphia. At the same time the guide can also tell you where you can go to replace your license plate if it happens to fall off your car. A bit bizzare you may think, but "The Philadelphia Resource Guide" is not bizzare; it is very useful and has something for everyone, regardless of your interests or hobbies.

Don't think that The guide is a light-hearted publication just because on page 49 one can read about the Doctors' Orchestra of Philadelphia which is a 45 - member orchestra comprised of physicians. The orchestra practices Friday evening's in the Medical Society Building and must interest someone if it can be found in The Guide, which takes every one's interests very seriously.

The Guide offers an extensive survey of all the types of education which the city has to offer. Marie's Day Care Center which is offered to kids between the ages of 3-5 and Wharton School of business, one of the finest schools in the country, are just two of the several schools which The Guide describes in their education section.

The Guide also has a thorough listing of all vital health, social, and mental organizations in the city. This is a useful service as many people do not know who to turn to in a time of need or emergency.

"The Philadelphia Resource Guide" is truly a service to anyone who needs to know anything about Philadelphia. If you're in need of the local chapter of the Socialist Party, The Guide can tell you where they can be found. If you're worried about what's new in the country of Chile, well there's a Chile Emergency Committee which is organized to help get Philadelphians aware of the diplomatic problem s between the United States and Chile. Again, The Guide informs us of this worthwhile group.

The Guide's success is in the fact that it has a cosmopolitan city such as Philadelphia as it's source. The real joy of The Guide is in it's unveiling of little shops, clubs, and galleries which few people knew existed.

"The Philadelphia Resource Guide" is a fine publication. It informs the reader of the city's many activities. It gives not only the major details of the city but also gets into the nooks and crannies which enables one to find the bits of nostalgia which make Philadelphia the fascinating city it is.

Slowhand is Back Again

By MICHAEL MORAN

If there were ever any doubts that Eric Clapton was and is one of the premier guitarists/performers in rock history, they were put to rest when he played at the Spectrum on February 21.

The concert was not one expected from a man who was supposed to be traveling on the laurels of his previous performances and albums. From the first chord of his opener "After Midnight," to his last "Thank you, goodnight!" the show was outstanding. After his last album, "Another Ticket," which he was not satisfied with, Clapton put extra effort into his latest album, "Money and Cigarettes" and subsequent tour. This effort proved to be well worth it.

With a formidable backup band of Chris Stainton (keyboards), Roger Hawkins (drums), Donald "Duck" Dunn (bass guitar), and Albert Lee (guitar) Clapton played a concert of his greatest hits from every era of his musical career.

The band played "I Shot The Sheriff," "Lay Down Sally," "Blues Power," "Wonderful Tonight," and other classics from the mid 70's. "Let It Rain," "Key To The Highway," "Have You Ever Loved a Woman?," and "Layla," were the representatives from Clapton's Derek and The Dominoes era. For the encore, Clapton reached back to his days with Cream to play "Crossroads."

The band sprinkled the concert with more recent material such as "Tulsa Time" and "Cocaine." Two new songs, "Slow Down Linda" and I've Got A Rock-n-Roll Heart," blended in with the classics well.

Perhaps the most pleasant aspect of the evening was "E.C's" sincerity and gracefulness. He demonstrated this by giving his protege Albert Lee equal time on solos and letting him sing "Sweet Little Lisa" from his own album, "Albert Lee."

In retrospect, it was a great evening all around for the fans, the promoters, the band and apparently and most importantly, Eric Clapton.

The popular musical Godspell will be the next production at Villanova Theatre. The show will run Wednesdays through Saturdays March 16-19, 23-26, and April 6-9. Terry Fimiano Guerin will direct.

Audiences can expect some surprises in this production of Godspell — the inventive staging will feature an assortment of magic tricks and illusions. Director Guerin, acclaimed for her productions of such shows as How to Succeed and Scapino!, has chosen fourteen multi-talented performers for the Godspell company. Musical Director Claude White, currently Director of Bands at the University of Pennsylvania, has conducted for National Public Radio and the Spoleto Festival in Charleston, South Carolina, and recently composed the music for the Broadway production of William Gibson's Monday After the Miracle.

All performances of Godspell will begin at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theatre. Tickets are $6 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $7 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts and group rates available.

This Con Job is on the Audience

By MICHAEL D. MANNO

It's a battle of wits from beginning to end in the colorful world of gangsters and men and women. The fun is more than just finding out what is going to happen — it's finding out how. In fact don't even try to guess which scam is the last because there's always another one coming.

Unfortunately, "The Sting II" is a sequel to Universal's 1973 Academy award-winning "The Sting," which earned seven Oscar nominations including Best Picture. "The Sting II" resumes the story of two of the most popular con artists in the history of motion pictures, but also exhibits the inadequacies of a sequel.

Jackie Gleason, Mac Davis, Teri Garr, Karl Malden and Oliver Reed star in this film, which is directed by Jeremy Paul Kagan from a screenplay by the author of the original "The Sting," David S. Ward. Also featured are Ron Rifkin and John Hancock.

Since sequels seem to be the popular thing in Hollywood these days, it's worth making a few points about them. The reason for their existence is economic. Industry figures argue that any sequel will make at least one-third of the money grossed by the original.

With the exception of the "Rocky" and "Star Wars" sequels, it is apparent that the American, movie-going public demands something more than this "insult" to their intelligence. They demand originality, and in most cases this is proven by box office gross.

Sequels are divided into two categories: those that continue the story of characters and those that repeat a formula. The evidence suggests that a filmmaker has a better chance with the characters than with the formula. Director Kagan chose to follow the formula format. The principle characters of Fargo Gondoroff and Jake Hooker (played by Gleason and Davis) are totally different from the main characters in the original. Kagan was quoted as saying, "The Sting II is inspired by and is an expansion of the first 'Sting' rather than a continuation."

In "The Sting II," Kagan and David S. Ward, the writer, have a tough act to follow in more ways than one. If the movie were called SOMETHING else and had no association with "The Sting" it would pass as likeable, but that is not the case and 'The Sting II' keeps inviting unfavorable comparisons.

Jackie Gleason, Karl Malden and Teri Garr in "The Sting II."

The action has moved four years from 1936 Chicago to 1940 New York, and "The Sting" is once again put to Lonnegan, played originally by the late Robert Shaw and hammily repeated here by Oliver Reed. Davis is good in the Redford role, but needs a little more than ordinary humor to sustain him.

"The Sting II" begins with a sting and ends with a sting, in fact it's riddled with stings, which after awhile lose the viewer's attention. There is little character development and the plot essentially is a recapitulation of the original. Towards movie's end, the corrupt motivations of one vaguely developed sting gang overflow into the corrupt motivation of the other sting gang and their objectives become blurred.

More than anything, one misses the bite of "The Sting." The chemistry of Newman and Redford as lovable crooks amongst real villians is painfully absent.

evident on his album The Pretender. This is one of Browne's most popular albums, although it received mixed reviews.

But I'm going to let the cat out of the bag. Overall, Wiseman's book on Browne is an enjoyable read. If you know about a songwriter's life, it enables you to understand what motivates him. Browne is only 35 and has experienced an unusual amount of ups and downs, and the book reveals an interesting and sensitive human being, who has just recently shared some of his innermost thoughts with his audience. And his audience is eager to hear what he has to say, for Browne is no pretender.

McGowan Takes Top Honors

Big East No Obstacle For Women Runners

By BEVERLY REILLY

The new Wildcat kids on the block were not at all intimidated by their new and challenging opposition.

Competing for the first time in the Big East Indoor Track and Field Championships, the Wildcat women easily captured the title. In addition, after just moving up to Division I competition, the women tracksters were runners-up to the EAIAW Indoor Track Crown.

At the Big East meet before Break, the Wildcats scored 180 points to totally outdistance the next team, Connecticut, which had 87 points.

Highlighting the meet at the Carrier Dome, sophomore MaryEllen McGowan won both the 1500-and 300-meter runs and consequently was named the meet's outstanding performer. Teammate Veronica McIntosh took the women's Outstanding Performance award after winning the 800-meter run, setting a school record and qualifying for NCAA National with her time of 2:08.89.

Also capturing individual honors was Patty Bradley, who won the 500-meter run and set a new school record in 1:14.97. Freshman Tracey Carter captured first in the 400 meters in 56.64. Joanne Kehs also ran a strong race to win the 1000 meters. Distance runner

Mary Ellen McGowan

Jan Yerkes ran away from the field as she easily won the 5000 meters in 17:15.66. In the field, senior captain Peggy Stewart won the high jump.

Proving that the Big East was no fluke, the women Wildcats defeated all but Penn State last weekend at Harvard. In Division I competition, the Wildcats scored 65 points and placed second behind Penn State with 92 points. Rutgers placed a distant third with 40 points.

Once again Stewart took top honors in the high jump at five feet eleven and one quarter inches. Stewart tied her own school record and qualified for NCAA Indoor and Outdoor Nationals. Also capturing top honors, the two mile relay team of Eva Marie Berardi, Nancy Fleming, Vickie Brown and Kehs finished in 8:55.56.

In other record-setting accomplishments, Yerkes placed runner-up in the three mile in 16:14.89, a new school record. Also, the mile relay team of Sharon Margaretha, Carter, Bradley and McIntosh set a new school record as they placed third in 3:47.48.

SHOOTING STARS: Dave Glickman and Jim Hannan proudly display the prizes which they received for winning the Budweiser Halftime Shoot-Out. The contest was held during the halftime of several Wildcat games this season.

College Hoops: Tourney Time

By STEPHEN FALLON

Just some rabbling musings while anxiously awaiting the Big East tournament in the Big Apple:

This year's edition of the tournament promises to be the most "up in the air" yet. Strong cases can be made for any one of five teams emerging as the champion. Of course, by now at least one of these teams has packed its bags by virtue of losing yesterday.

Villanova teams under Rollie Massimino have a 13-4 record in post-season conference tournaments . . . Dwayne McClain continues to shoot with deadly accuracy since returning to the lineup after his foot injury. McClain in his last ten games is shooting 66.7% . . . John Pinone was named first team Academic All-America by the College Sports Information Directors of America. The "Bear" is also just 60 points shy of 2,000.

Harold Jensen of Trumbull, Ct., Villanova's lone recruit thus far, was named to Parade Magazine's High School All-America fourth team.

Four teams whose youth will blossom next year and who will challenge for the top spots in college hoops: Georgia Tech — Coach Bobby Cremins and freshman star Martin Price are already making noise in the ACC; Michigan — the addition of Detroit superschoolboy Antoine Joubert to Eric Turner & Co. will make the Wolverines a force; George Washington — Mike Brown and Troy Webster anchor a youthful squad that in another year will be heavyweights; Duke — last year's super recruiting year, led by Johnny Dawkins, will begin to pay dividends in Durham. Remember, you heard it here first.

The NIT is toying with the idea of inviting Chaminade (of Virginia fame) and the University of the District of Columbia to its tournament. UDC, a Division II power, features two future NBA first round picks and a coach (Will Jones) who claims he is "every bit as good as John Wooden." The NIT will also try to lure people by using a 30 second clock and a red-white-and-blue ball.

If you can't make it to New York this weekend and need a fix of live basketball, the Atlantic 10 Conference will be holding its tournament at the Spectrum Friday and Saturday. The league is competitive and the action exciting. The winner receives an automatic bid to the NCAA tourney. Also it will be an opportunity to see West Virginia's Greg Jones — one of the best guards in the country.

Lefty Driesell and Maryland are 4-5 against Ralph Sampson and Virginia. Not bad considering the "Lefthander" has been undermanned in most of those games.

Indiana's loss of Ted Kitchel to a back injury will probably cost Bobby Knight a chance at a third championship in seven years.

The most underrated player in the Big East? How about John Garris of B.C. He is second in scoring and field goal percentage and seventh in rebounding . . . This Sunday the NCAA bids and pairings go out. Fifty two teams will be invited and another 10 or so will be very disappointed.

The Final Four in Albuquerque, N.M., will be played Easter weekend. Good bets to be there include Louisville, Kentucky, Virginia, Houston, UCLA and Villanova.

Freshman Martin Booker sails over a hurdle on his way to a fifth place finish at the Olympic Invitational in the Meadowlands Arena.

College Basketball Review

by Al McGuire

College Hoop: 'D' is the Key

I've always said the trick to success in college basketball is good defense. You can't beat it. Defense is like water, it finds its own level. It's there, day in and day out. The offense, on the other hand, is like the stock market. You never know where it's going. That's because some days the hoop is the size of a rain barrel, other days it shrinks up to the size of a tea cup.

A defensive team can practice three days before a game and know they're going to do what they practiced. Whereas, an offensive team can do the same thing, but they don't know for sure if they can do it in the game, because the defense will govern what they can do.

Defense starts at the opening tap, and is maintained by the better teams until the final horn. If handled skillfully, it will allow that club to duel in the sun in Albuquerque.

That's why one of the most vulnerable times in a game is the first three minutes of the second half. That's where the defense can dominate, because the offense has been sitting on its duff for 20 minutes, and few teams warm up properly at the start of the second half. Also, it's a pride thing. The coach who's getting blown out doesn't want to call a time out. It's degrading, because he's just had 20 minutes of oranges and soft drinks.

It seems that all the great rolls in college basketball were defensively oriented. Even when you talk of UCLA, the Wizard of Westwood Years of John Wooden, it was truly his pressure defense that created the offense. And today, I believe that John Thompson's Hoyas play a coast-to-coast defense that will become commonplace in the collegiate game over the next five years.

I've always said, the biggest statistic in basketball is TO — the turnover. It's a four-point swing — two they might have gotten, and two you'll probably get. The ultimate goal of a good defense is two points the other way. Which is why most great defensive teams score in the 60's.

Defense, over the last 10 years, has changed from an individual art to a team concept. And the more defensive faces you can show an opponent, the more you can govern the rhythm and tempo of a game — which is truly the key to ending up with a tournament bid.

The first thing to do, defense-wise, is to break the other team's offensive rhythm. Second, try to get 'em out of their patterns. Whatever's natural, make them go the other way. Keep the ball from the guy who normally has it, make them go to the other side of the court more than they usually do, that sort of thing.

A defensive coach is like a general. He probes to find the belly of the opponent, probes until he finds the defense that will blow you out of there. He probes until he finds an opening, and then sends in the troops.

A lot of things determine the type of defense you want to play. Sometimes you're trying to stop a certain guy on the perimeter, another time maybe to stop the game down on the paint. Sometimes you're trying to change from a Heinz catsup game to a sprint game. But always, you're trying to get the game changed to something you can do well.

At Indiana, Bobby Knight changed the style of the Big Ten when he came there. It was a run-and-gun conference, but he turned it into a world of trench warfare whose motto is, "They shall not score." And North Carolina will alternate their defenses up to six or seven times during a game.

At Marquette, I was a defensive coach, I think, because that's the type of player I was in the pros. You can't coach both ways, you've got to make a commitment one way or the other. And I believe it would have been impossible to have gone to 11 straight tournaments without the consistency of solid defense. It did involve a certain amount of Mickey Mouse ones, Triangle-Twos, Tandom-Threes, full and half-court scrambles, mixed up with pocket zones. But the bread and butter "D" to me will always be hard nose, man-to-man, with no switching.

They say the Four Corners is an offense, but it's not. It's playing defense while you have the ball. With the Four Corners, you're not playing an opponent anymore, you're playing against the clock. You're trying to ice the game out. The key is that you must have a Phil Ford NBA-type guard, and he must be a tremendous foul shooter.

The hardest part is getting the kid to make the psychological commitment to defense, because you can't play "D" in the driveway of your garage shooting hoops. There has to be a certain pride in it, and you have to be able to sell the fans on what you're doing. We did it at Marquette. We were sold out 12 years because we got the crowd aware of the intricacies of defense, the patterns, the beauty of it.

The problem is, most fans and media don't understand it. Most fans want the ball to go down, twirl and curl. But if you succumb to that style, you'll win some you shouldn't win, but you'll lose quite a few games you shouldn't lose, too. Defense creates consistency. Offense never can.

Cats KO Hawks; Win Big 5

By TOM REUSCHE

The Villanova Wildcats won the traditional Philadelphia Big Five title on Feb. 22 in an untraditional City Series setting — the Spectrum — with a 70-62 victory over the St. Joseph's Hawks.

Despite 18,060 fans, the largest crowd ever to witness a college basketball game in Pennsylvania, the game lacked the crowd-frenzied atmosphere annually stirred up when these two rivals meet at the Palestra.

"This was a laid-back type of game," said Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino, "not your typical Palestra game."

Another missing element was a climactic finish. In fact, as early as 12:02 of the second half, a cry, usually saved for the game's waning moments, rose from the W, X and Y sections of the Spectrum: "THE HAWK IS DEAD! THE HAWK IS DEAD!"

The early death knell was echoed for the Hawks because when John Pinone wasn't banging inside for his game-high 20 points, Dwayne McClain was sniping from the outside at a torrid 7 for 7 clip.

McClain's 12-foot turnaround jumper 32 seconds into the game drew first blood and gave the Cats a lead they would never relinquish.

Poor first half shooting by St. Joe's and 12 Pinone points put the Cats up 33-26 at intermission.

Villanova's 10-4 scoring spurt to open the second half gave the Cats a 43-30 cushion at 15:04. Four quick points from Lonnie McFarlan and two Tony Costner jumpers pulled the Hawks back within nine points at 10:37.

St. Joe's comeback hopes were diminished when Costner fouled Ed Pinckney at 8:42, giving "Big Tone," the Hawks' high scorer with 14 points, his fifth foul.

Nursing a nine point lead, Villanova spread the floor and Pinone fed McClain for an open dunk at 4:40 and a 62-51 lead, extinguishing the Hawks.

HANGING OUT: Ed Pinckney grabs the rim for support after throwing down a powerful dunk in the Cats' 70-62 victory over the Hawks. The win clinched the Big Five title for Villanova.

Women Cagers Close Season With OT Loss

Nancy Bernhardt soars between two Eagle defenders during Villanova's 66-63 loss at B.C. The Cats used the game as a tune-up for the Big East Tournament.

By BOB HELLER

Last week the Villanova women's basketball team was in Providence, R.I., participating in the women's Big East Tournament. The Wildcats' first opponent was the Orangewomen of Syracuse, whom they had beaten 72-67 earlier this year at the Field House.

Nova controlled the opening tip-off and quickly ran off a 12-4 lead. The Orangewomen came back to tie the score at 14-14 and took the lead, 18-17, shortly thereafter. Syracuse continued to lead and took a 33-30 lead into the locker-room at halftime.

The Cats slowly clawed away at the Orangewomen's lead in the second half, eventually taking the lead, 37-36, on a 16-foot jumper by Kathie Beisel from the right side. A three-point play by Andrea Burton gave Villanova a four point lead, 40-36. However, the Orangewomen would not fold. They came back and eventually built a six-point lead, 53-47, prompting a Villanova time out.

After the time out the Cats came out charging and regained the lead, 60-57, on a three-point play by Nancy Bernhardt. They continued to control the Orangewomen and held on to win 72-67 to advance to the Big East semi-final match against Providence College.

Nancy Bernhardt led all scorers in the game with 24 points. Andrea Burton and Kathie Beisel added 11 and ten points, respectively, to help pace the Cats.

The semi-final match was against the top-seeded Lady Friars of Providence. The Lady Friars had blown out the Wildcats, 71-49, earlier this year in Providence, but this was a much different Wildcat team they were facing.

Providence looked like they were going to have an easy time against the Cats, taking a quick 8-0 lead. Nova would not give in. They came back to tie the score and eventually grab a two point lead, 16-14, on a 10-foot shot by Andrea Burton. It was a see-saw battle for the rest of the first half with Providence coming out on top, 28-26, at halftime.

The back-and-forth battle between the two teams continued throughout most of the second half. The Cats provided the partisan Providence crowd with a lot of excitement in the final minute of play as they came back to tie the score at 61-61 with just 5 seconds left to go. Overtime resulted.

> "It was a building season and a learning year for us all."
> — Mary Anne Steenrod

The overtime period was just as exciting with the lead changing hands several times in the opening minutes. Providence regained the lead for good with 1:13 left to go. Despite some excellent play by the Wildcats the Lady Friars managed to hold on to win, 71-69.

Villanova was led by Nancy Bernhardt's career high 38 points; her performance set a Big East record for most points in a Big East Conference game. Kathie Beisel, in her final game as a Wildcat, added ten points.

Both Beisel and Bernhardt were named to the Big East All-Conference Team. In addition, Bernhardt was named to the All Big East Tournament Team selected by the officials.

Bernhardt was also named Big East player of the week. She scored 27 and 20 points respectively against conference rivals Pittsburgh and Boston College. She finished the season with 534 points for an 18.4 points per game average. She needs just 198 more points to become Villanova's all-time leading scorer for women's basketball.

Kathie Beisel concluded her Villanova career with 1328 points, placing her third on the school's all-time scoring list. She is also the school's all-time assist leader, chalking up over 500 assists.

The Wildcats' final record was 14-15. "It was a building season and a learning year for us all," commented Mary Anne Steenrod, coordinator of women's athletics. "We had a lot of tough losses, but we showed that we are still a team that commands respect, as shown by our performance in the Big East Tournament."

Tracksters Blaze Past IC4A Field

Also Capture Big East Crown

By PAUL MACCHIA

During the week of Spring Break, the Villanova men's track team performed outstandingly in three meets.

On Feb. 19-20 the Wildcats won the Big East Indoor title for the first time. The Cats finished first in nine out of the 13 running events and outscored runner-up Pittsburgh 142 to 103 points.

At the Vitalis/Olympic Invitational in the Meadowlands, the Wildcats won the two-mile relay and placed third in the mile relay. Senior Rod Wilson won the open section of the 55-meter hurdles. The most dramatic event of the evening came from alumnus Eamonn Coghlan (class of '76) as he broke the world record. His finish was 3:49.78.; the first sub-3:50 indoor mile ever run.

Last weekend at Princeton's Jadwin Gym, the Wildcats proved once again they are one of the best teams in the country by winning the IC4A indoor title. The Cats scored 92 points, ahead of co-runners-up Rutgers and George Mason who each scored 50 points.

The Wildcats were led by freshman John Keyworth who won the 3000-meter run by more than 50 meters with a time of 8:01.19 and set a personal record by 1:21. One hour later Keyworth was back on the track anchoring the distance medley relay team (comprised of John Borgese, Wilson, Brian O'Keefe and Keyworth) with a 4:05 mile.

Dr. Charles Jenkins
. . . pleased with Keyworth

Coach Charles Jenkins remarked about Keyworth's performance, "At the beginning of the season, John contracted a lot of colds and didn't run well in cross-country as a result. But now he has alleviated that problem."

In addition to the 3000 meters and distance medley, Villanova had winners in the 400-meter, 800-meter, mile run and two-mile relay.

Marcus O'Sullivan, who has had several stellar performances in the mile this year, won a tactical race in 4:00.98, ahead of Adam Dixon of Harvard.

Carlton Young won the 400 meter event against a strong field with a time of 47:42. Young has been consistent all year indoors, running in the mid 47s.

Sophomore John Marshall won the 800 meters in a time of 1:50.79, breaking from Herman Brown of Rhode Island in the final stretch. Marshall also anchored the two-mile relay team of Pete Carroll, J.J. Clark and Marcus O'Sullivan. Villanova smoked to a 7:32.28 clocking over Penn State.

A fine performance also came from Wilson in the 55-meter hurdles. He was outleaned at the tape by Eugene Norman of Rutgers in 7.18. Craig Morris placed second in the 500-meter run with a time of 1:03.36.

"Mike England, running with a chronic achilles injury, placed second in the 1000-meter run with a 2:24.01 clocking. The previous day England won the trial and the same heat of the race, which were held four hours apart.

The mile relay team was third behind George Mason and Princeton with a time of 3:17.40.

This weekend the Wildcats will wrap up their fine indoor season with the NCAA Championship meet at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Michigan.

TRACK NOTES: Villanova senior Russell Tucker broke the school record for the indoor 35 lb. weight throw on March 5. Competing in the Connecticut TAC Meet at Yale University, Palmer recorded a heave of 51'2½" to place fourth in the event.

Georgetown Deflates Cats

By STEPHEN FALLON

Last Saturday at the Capital Centre in Landover, Md., Villanova met Georgetown in a rematch of their Jan. 31 thriller. The results were anything but similar as the Hoyas thrashed the Wildcats, 87-71.

Georgetown was paced by Pat Ewing's 21 points and 15 rebounds. But Hoya coach John Thompson cited forward Anthony Jones as the key to the victory. "I thought Anthony was the difference," he said. "He came in and picked us up in spots where we were flat and gave Patrick (Ewing) some help underneath the boards." Jones scored 15 points and grabbed eight rebounds coming off the bench. Several of the baskets came on offensive rebounds after errant Hoya shots.

Villanova coach Rollie Massimino saw the determining factor differently. "We just didn't shoot the ball as well as we did last time and when that happens we're in trouble." The Wildcats shot a meager 41.7% from the field. Massimino added, "Our execution also wasn't what it should've been."

The first half went well enough as Dwayne McClain continued his red-hot shooting of late, scoring 13 points, and John Pinone muscled in ten to keep the Cats within four of the Hoyas, 32-28.

The opening six minutes of the second half decided the game as the Hoyas took advantage of some cold shooting by the Wildcats and eight points by Ewing to outscore Villanoa 17-7 and take a commanding 49-35 lead.

The remainder of the game was a futile attempt at initially coming back and eventually just maintaining respectability. The Wildcats could come no closer than ten points and once again Big East parity was painfully evident.

With the loss the Cats finished the regular season 21-6 and 12-4 in the Big East, good enough for a share of the title along with Boston College and St. John's.

UNABLE TO KEEP UP WITH THE JONESES: Hoya Coach John Thompson instructs sophomore Anthony Jones during a break in the action. Jones poured in 15 points Saturday to spark the Hoyas to an 87-71 victory over Nova.

Nova Basketball Summary. . .

Senior John Pinone hit a desperation 17-foot jumper with one second left in overtime to give the Wildcats a 71-70 win over St. John's on Feb. 26.

The Big East matchup was played before a crowd of 17,583 at the Spectrum. The victory kept Villanova in first place in the conference, ahead of runner-up St. John's.

Pinone forced the overtime after sinking two free throws with just over a minute left in regulation. That tied the score, 58-58.

In the overtime, the lead kept switching between the two teams. Then with seven seconds remaining, Chris Mullin's free throw put the Redmen on top, 70-69.

But Pinone gave the Cats their seventh straight triumph with the last second shot.

Five Wildcats scored in double figures. Pinone and Ed Pinckney grabbed ten rebounds apiece, while Stewart Granger dished out nine assists.

Syracuse's Erich Santifer put on a one-man second half show in front of 28,271 Carrier Dome fans as the Orangemen downed Villanova on March 1, 79-70.

For the Wildcats the loss was only their third in 15 Big East contests. Syracuse boosted its conference mark to 9-5 with the win.

Villanova trailed by only six points, 61-55, with just over five minutes left in the game. But Santifer proceeded to steal the ball from sophomore guard Gary McLain and slam home two points.

The Orangemen hit clutch free throws — 10 of their final 12 by Santifer in the last 70 seconds — to seal their 19th victory in 25 games.

John Keyworth

John Keyworth, a distance runner on the Wildcat indoor track team, won the 3000-meter race and anchored the distance medley relay team to first place last week, thereby snatching up the Budweiser Athlete of the Week title.

Keyworth, a six-foot-one freshman from Bridgeport, England, ran his best times in both events last Sunday at the IC4A Championships in Princeton, N.J. His clocking of 8:01:19 in the 3000 narrowly missed qualifying him for the two mile run at the NCAA Indoor Championships.

"I went into the race wanting to qualify," stated the Englishman. "As the race developed, I wanted to see what the pace was like. I went through the first mile in 4:20 and decided to pick it up a bit. I felt good. I couldn't believe I didn't qualify for it (the NCAA's). Don Paige was standing along the track screaming that I needed 28 seconds on the last lap to qualify. I must have run 28.19."

In the distance medley relay, an event Villanova is legendary in, Keyworth ran a 4:05 mile split, an hour after his 3000-meter victory.

"I got a baton from Brian O'Keefe with a 2-3 meter lead. I was still in front after two laps, less after four, at the half-mile mark, I was overtaken."

The freshman remained cool, however, and stayed at the shoulder of the Dartmouth runner who had taken him. "At the last bend I just kicked [illegible] him."

"At the beginning of the season, John contracted a lot of colds and didn't run well in every meet as a result," said Wildcat track coach Jumbo Elliott.

"I had about four of them," said Keyworth. "I wasn't used to the climate over here. It's warm there cold. In England, it's cold all the time. But I'm all over that now."

Faculty Speaks Out on Football

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO and LEONARD J. LaBARTH

The Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) will sponsor a panel presentation on the question of: "What should be the faculty position on the restoration of Villanova football?"

Edward Rideout, director of the annual Alumni Fund.

The AAUP claims "this will be the first open airing of the issue to occur on campus outside of the Senate."

Among those scheduled to participate are Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics; Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant to the vice president for academics; Warren Richardson, past chairman of the University Senate; Dr. Joseph Des-Jardins, who chaired the Senate sub-committee on the restoration of football; the Director of the Annual Alumni Fund Edward Rideout, and Student Body President Paul Tufano. The panel will be held March 21, at 2:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema.

Each member of the panel will present a three minute opening statement "listing pertinent considerations." Questions will then be asked of the panelists, followed by a discussion among the panelists and questions from the audience. The panel has met with some criticism.

"I don't see that the faculty has a say on the issue," stated Tufano. "I'm against their representation on the Board of Trustees committee."

According to Dr. Sterling Delano, vice president of the AAUP, who will chair the panel presentation, it's about time that the faculty got involved in the football issue.

"The whole purpose is to provide the faculty with an informed choice concerning the reinstatement of football. So far, every other constituency on campus has been involved — the students and the administration. Only the faculty is not," said Delano. "If there is a future decision, it should be made with the most available information. The Executive Board chose six different segments from the University to look at all different views."

Villanova dropped football in April, 1981. Since that date, controversy has surrounded the decision of the University Board of Trustees. The Board has named a committee to re-examine the feasibility of a football program.

Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant to the vice president for academic affairs.

"You can't deny the faculty a voice, everyone should have a voice," claimed Rideout. "The alumni and students have a choice. It's just one more constituency to be heard from."

"The Board's 1981 decision was correct and prudent," Cherry said. "Football had been losing a great deal of money. It had clearly limited benefits from an academic standpoint.

"Basically, I'm representing the academic area. Father Gallen is on the Board's committee so he is a little reluctant to voice his own concerns before the committee does its work," continued Cherry. "Academic costs are such that we can't have the luxury of this type program. It's not an essential part of the University's mission. Having "a quality academic program is."

"Athletics are good for the University in the education of the whole student," Tufano said. "Physical development is part of the mission statement. Football does have a place here, as long as it doesn't affect the University mission. If it can be self sustaining, it should be returned, but academics comes first."

"I think it should return if it shows financial sustainability and consistency with the University's academic goals," stated Aceto. "When I speak at the panel, I will try to give an overview of the situation. Basically, I'm there as a resource, to answer questions on the football program."

"I would like to see it back," commented Rideout. 'It's a positive way to reach our alumni and generate an enthusiasm which is missing."

The AAUP, according to Delano, has historically played an active role in University affairs. "In time of crisis, it has taken the initiative. With a national organization behind it, the AAUP becomes more immediately involved. Where there is stability, there's nothing special notcd about its presence. But if you took a poll, the majority of the faculty consider the AAUP important."

Des Jardins, chairman of the Senate subcommittee on athletics, authored a 14-page study dealing with a potential new football program that was presented to the University Senate in November. The study recognized the importance of the public exposure generated by an intercollegiate football program. Des Jardins' study recommended that the Board of Trustees reconsider its decision to discontinue football.

According to Tufano, "I will show evidence of student support from last year's survey, where 96 percent of the students said they would provide financial support. I think football enriches campus life. Everyone has a benefit from it, and it has shown that it can be self-sustaining."

Dr. Sterling Delano, vice president of AAUP.

"The academic claims on University resources for renovating and constructing buildings, purchasing new equipment, upgrading classroom and office space as well as faculty salaries make it imperative that we do not dissipate our money activities not essential to the University mission," explained Cherry. "To do so hurts faculty morale, and seriously mars our credibility with accrediting agencies and foundations."

"The money for our new computer centers came from the savings on football," Cherry added. "Dropping the football program has in no way hurt us in enrollment, and it hasn't hurt us in terms of fund-

Township Questions Plans For New Sports Complex

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

An approval on Villanova's new Field House plans from the Radnor Planning Commission was postponed for further clarification on the discrepancies concerning pedestrian safety, parking conditions and drainage.

At a special meeting scheduled for March 21, the Planning Commission will review Villanova's proposals to comply with the township's request. If in this preliminary hearing the plans are not approved, construction scheduled to begin in May for completion in September 1984 may be delayed for an undetermined length of time," according to the Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president.

The Radnor Planning Commission found a difficulty and "we agree with it to an extent," said Burnell, in that the increase in the number attending intercollegiate basketball games could aggravate the already existing problem of students crossing anywhere along Lancaster Avenue from the parking lots.

The two new parking lots with the existing lots would provide the needed space for a capacity crowd of 6,400 for an intercollegiate basketball game.

To prevent the students from crossing Lancaster Avenue, except at the light, one proposal being considered by Villanova is to fence in the parking lots. "We hope the committee will accept this measure being taken to control pedestrian safety," said Burnell. Burnell added however that the cost which Villanova would have to pay for the fencing would detract from the facilities planned for the athletic complex.

Villanova's planning board is getting an estimate now and Burnell anticipates the cost to be "substantial."

To encourage crossing only at the intersection, the board has suggested extending the fence on the school side along Lancaster Avenue where the sidewalk is now located 50 feet away from the corner.

The lack of sidewalks in the plans was another concern of the Radnor Planning Commission. The existing sidewalks in front of Bartley Hall, should be extended to the corner of Ithan Avenue and Lancaster Avenue, according to the Radnor Planning Commission. The sidewalk ends now short of the corner because it was built in conjunction with the old main entrance located in front of Bartley Hall.

"Depending on whether the Radnor Planning Commission views the crossing light at the intersection of Lancaster Avenue and Ithan Avenue sufficient, the commission may insist on a sidewalk along North Ithan Avenue on the Field House side," according to Burnell.

"The problem," Burnell continued, "is that would mean cutting down the 12 mature trees along the road which would be destroying the appearance and beauty the trees add to the area.

"It is my opinion that the people will walk inside the fence for their own safety," said Burnell. Burnell hopes this will not be pushed, "but if so, we must comply," he added.

A conflict with the septic water run-off has risen with the Lower Merion Township. The 12-inch pipe, either clogged or collapsed, may have to be repaired by Villanova at an approximate cost of $15-20,000 according to a local newspaper report.

"It does not seem we even have the right to work on Municipal property," said Burnell. The

Irish Studies

In the Fall semester, five courses will be available in the field of Irish Studies. The courses are open to all students. The English Department will offer Irish Literature to 1880 (2450-01) and the Irish Renaissance (2500-90). History offerings are Modern Ireland and its Origins (4522-01) and Early Ireland (4521-90). A new course in the History of Irish Art will also be available (102-1119-90). Students interested in fulfilling the Irish Studies concentration should contact Dr. James Murphy in 201 Vasey Hall.

Italian Club

There will be a mandatory meeting of all Italian Club members on March 24 at 12:45 p.m. in 315 Tolentine. We will discuss our upcoming Italian banquet. All new members are urged to attend.

Benefit

A five-hour happy hour will be held on Saturday, March 26 from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. at Kelly's Bar to benefit Izzy Diaz, a V.U. student with a serious disease.

One dollar from the cost of every pitcher of beer purchased and 25¢ from each Kamikaze will be donated to the Villanova Friends for Izzy Diaz campaign. Contributions will be accepted at the door. Make this a happy hour for yourself and a Villanova Friend.

The Big Event

Everyone is invited to share in with the fun and competition. Your talent is desired. Applications will be available as of March 21 in the Union Office, deadline for return is April 6. Don't miss out!

Alley Cat III

Registration forms will be available next week in the dean of students' office for those wishing to enter a team in the third annual Alley Cat Basketball Tournament. Play will begin the first day after the Easter break with the finals scheduled for April 19. Once again the tournament will be double elimination and the proceeds from the entry fee will go to the Balloon Day fund.

Final Four Trip

If the Wildcats make it into the Final Four, the student government will be running a trip to Albuquerque. Preregistration is going on now. See ad in this paper and contact the Student Government Office (204 Dougherty Hall, 645-7203) for further details. Don't wait!

Baseball

Villanova University's varsity baseball team will play Temple and West Chester on their new home baseball field behind St. Mary's Hall.

Game time is Saturday, 2 p.m. and Sunday, 1:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Intramural Softball

Umpires are needed for both men's and women's games. Sign up in Alumni Gym.

Swimming Banquet

The Annual Swimming Banquet will be held March 25 in Larchmont, New York. For more information and tickets, contact the Alumni Office, 645-4580.

Bike Club

The Bike Club will hold a 10-mile ride on March 20, leaving at 2 p.m. from the back of the Connelly Center. All are invited.

Wellness Week

The RSA is sponsoring "Wellness Week," a week-long program of activities designed to increase the students' awareness of their body, mind and spirit. The activities will run from April 9-14 and will include a carnival, speakers and fun run. Any student interested in helping to organize, please see Gail Jakelis at the RSA office, 214 Dougherty Hall.

Frisbee Club

There will be a meeting of the V.U. Ultimate Frisbee Club on March 22 in the Bryn Mawr room of the Connelly Center at 8 p.m. Everyone is welcome!

Political Science

The political science department announces that its guest speaker for this semester will be James V. Schall, S.J. of the department of government, Georgetown University. Schall will address the topic "Religious Materialism: The Drift in Recent Thoughts on War from the Perspective of Political Theory," on March 21 at 4 p.m. in the St. David's and Radnor rooms of the Connelly Center.

The lecture will last about 50 minutes with opportunity for questions to follow. Light refreshments will be served prior to the lecture.

Project Sunshine

S.O.S. — "Poster makers" are needed to make Sunshine Day a success for the many children attending on April 16. If you can help, stop by at the Social Actions Office (121 Tolentine) for materials.

The fast day for Project Sunshine will take place on March 24. Please help by fasting from the campus cafeterias.

We Need Huggers!

We are inviting a group of people (maybe handicapped children, or the elderly) to come enjoy Balloon Day. We need volunteers to spend the day with them and show tham a good time. If you enjoyed being a Special Olympics hugger, then Balloon Day should be really fun! For more info, stop by Campus Ministry or call Gail at 525-2230.

Penance Service

A communal penance service will be held at 5 p.m. in the main chapel on March 23.

Religious Studies Course

A course on religion and revolution in Latin America will be offered by the Peace and Justice Program next fall on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons from 1:30 to 2:45 p.m.

Teaching the course will be Dr. Sue Toton of the religious studies department, who visited Nicaragua last summer, and Dr. Fred Carrier of the history department, who will be studying in Cuba this summer.

Nonviolence

"Beyond Gandhi — Alternatives to Violence." A video presentation exploring the history and effectiveness of nonviolent action and prospects for a nonviolent "Civilian-Based Defense." A discussion will follow.

Rescheduled for March 21 at 7:30 p.m. in 215 Tolentine. Sponsored by the Villanova Peace and Justice Program.

Philosphy Club

Dr. John Immerwahr will discuss "What Philosophers can Learn from Computers" on March 23 at 3:30 p.m. in 208 Vasey. All interested persons are welcome.

Alpha Epsilon Delta

Meeting for all current members: March 22, 12:45 p.m., 151 Mendel. Meeting for all new initiates: March 24, 12:45 p.m., 151 Mendel. Initiation dinner: March 27, 3:30 p.m., Connelly Center.

Gamma Phi Honor Society

There will be a meeting on March 22 in 110 Bartley at 12:45 p.m. Speeches and voting for next year's officers will be held at this meeting. April 5 is the final deadline for dinner dance tickets.

Easter Egg Hunt

The Panhel and I.F.C. will sponsor an Easter Egg Hunt on March 26 at 10:30 a.m., free for everyone to attend. All are welcome. Children 8 and under can enter. Prizes!! Rain date is Sunday, March 27 at 1:30 p.m.

Metamorphosis of Media

The Honors Program will present a Spring Forum on "The Metamorphosis of Media" from March 21 to March 24.

The first topic of discussion will be "What News is Good News?" on March 21 at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theater. Speakers will be Frank Traynor from KYW Channel 3 News and Michael Pakenham, associate editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer with Dr. Teresa Nance of the communication arts department as moderator.

The next event is a discussion of the term "Visual Literacy" through the viewing and analysis of Frank Capra's 1946 comedy "It's a Wonderful Life," by Joan Lynch of the theater department on March 22 at 8 p.m. in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center.

Edwin Newman, prominant NBC commentator and author will present the topic "Preserving a Civil Tongue" on March 23 at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

The final topic "The Future of the Media: Where Do We Go From Here," featuring James Monaco from the New School for Social Research, will be held on March 24 at 8 p.m. in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center.

Admission is free! Everyone is welcome.

Theater Department

The theater department welcomes all students interested in studying theater as a major, minor or concentration to a reception on March 24 at 5 p.m. Refreshments will be served, and staff members will be on-hand to entertain questions.

The performance will take place on March 23 in the Corr Chapel at 4 p.m. A reception will follow. Admission is free.

The program is coordinated by Dr. Rene Mougeon of the French department.

Faculty Debates Football Issue

raising either."

"I don't know where he got that information," Rideout said. "The growth of the Annual Alumni Fund dropped from 40.4 percent in 1980-81 to 20.2 percent the year after the program was dropped."

"I'll have statistics to show the panel to prove my position," Rideout commented. "I'll be able to present some of the feedback from the alumni. I never thought the decision to drop football was adequately explained. We never saw any of the financial figures. I think a lot of the alumni feel that way."

Delano said that it is not expected that the new evidence will be presented at the forum. "The objective is not to go around any other committee work or decision. The faculty has not been presented with a collective form of all previously studied information.

According to Delano, a ballot will be sent to the entire faculty that will present them with two choices — either voting against football or voting for football with the option of choosing at what level of competition it should be returned. The results of the ballot will be published in the Villanovan.

"I don't know why the AAUP is doing this now," commented Aceto. "The faculty was never involved in this before. But I don't think it hurts to hear from all sides."

"Why should the faculty be concerned; if this is to be done, the students have the biggest part in this issue," Tufano claimed. "I don't feel the faculty should have a say. The students' say should be important, if not the most important."

"I would hope that the faculty would decide that it's none of their business," Tufano added. "The students will support it, so the students should have football."

"I think the faculty should have a strong say," Cleary said. "Their future in their positions may be ultimately at stake. The faculty should support any decision of the Board. If the committee investigates and recommends the return, it should only be at the Division III level, no scholarships. To do anything else is moving into a similar situation to what we had."

"I don't see how what the faculty decides will have an effect on what the board will think," Tufano stated. "I will do my best to see that it doesn't."

AAUP Retains Faculty Support

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Three years ago, the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University professors (AAUP) was closer than it had ever been before in its efforts to form a collective bargaining unit through faculty unionization. An eleventh-hour ruling by the National Labor Relations Board, prompted by a petition submitted by the University Board of Trustees citing a recent Supreme Court decision, nixed all but the slimmest hopes for collective bargaining at Villanova.

Monday, the AAUP will focus its attention on another activity that was eliminated by the Board of Trustees — football. A panel presentation sponsored by the association will consider the position the faculty should take on the possible restoration of Villanova football.

Dr. James Bergquist, who served as AAUP Chapter President during the association's efforts to acquire collective bargaining power, still believes that the AAUP is an effective organization, despite its lack of collective status.

"The AAUP has been organized on this campus for over 40 years. It is the only sort of instrument the faculty has organized to discuss things among themselves," explained Bergquist. "The faculty discusses issues important to themselves, not necessarily campus interests but state and national issues."

The first attempt to attain collective bargaining at Villanova was defeated by 40 votes in 1973. In 1979, the drive toward faculty unionization was once again initiated after 73 percent of the faculty voted that they would like to see a collective bargaining election. The chapter distributed petitioning cards to the faculty that required a 30 percent return. A petition then went to the NLRB for approval.

Bergquist recalled that the prospects of having the AAUP elected as the bargaining agent was good at the time. "It probably was going to pass if it went to a vote this time. A faculty poll showed that 58 percent would have voted for it," Bergquist said.

"There is an anomaly in the country today that if you're a faculty member in a private university, you are kind of hampered from collective bargaining, if you want to use that device, where as on a public campus you can use collective bargaining as they are organized under the state laws," explained Bergquist. "At the moment, for the most part, it has been very difficult for a private industry to be organized in that way."

The Yeshiva decision was delivered by the Supreme Court a week before Villanova's collective bargaining election was to be held.

"It was something we were working on that seemed to be going as well as it should and then it was all brought to a halt. There was a certain amount of disappointment. Then we realized the appeal process would be a legal matter dragging on for years and years to clarify some of the points and issues." Villanova subsequently withdrew its petition and decided to sit back and let other universities and colleges with similar questions go on. If the faculty wanted to pursue organization at this point, the process of assigning cards and petitions would have to be repeated.

Bergquist believes that the AAUP will encourage faculty debate on the issue of possible restoration of football and that the discussions will be a major contribution to the decision-making process. The AAUP, according to Bergquist, has always been involved in important issues at Villanova. "In the 1960s, for instance, it did a great deal at the time to promote the involvement of the faculty in developing decision-making in institutions. The faculty had a role in that.

PennDOT Sets Schedule For Schuylkill Repairs

By LINDA BOND

PennDOT planners agreed last week on a four year reconstruction schedule for the Schuylkill Expressway, a project which is expected to have an impact on the University's commuter students.

The shoulders of the road will be repaved in 1984, traffic restrictions will be implemented in 1985, and the system will be reopened for use in 1987, according to Jeffrey L. Greene, project coordinator for PennDOT.

Greene said that the transportation department wanted its three quarter of a million daily users to feel they were being minimally inconvenienced over the next four years. Toward this goal, one lane of traffic will be maintained in each direction during the entire reconstruction process. Truck traffic is to remain on the expressway. All lanes will be reopened to drivers during the winter months to accommodate merchants over the Christmas season.

Greene emphasized that vanpools and carpools would cut down the number of vehicles on the road.

According to Greene, about 21 percent of the expressway's current capacity can be maintained during the reconstruction.

He said that PennDOT will publish a map of alternate routes, make transit changes which could include increasing train service, and work toward coordinating traffic lights, parking spaces, and other traffic-related measures.

"It stands alone and we know it has alot of traffic on it," stated Greene who went on to say that the Schuylkill had very little diversion capacity. Most roads bring traffic to the expressway.

The average daily traffic is estimated to be 41 thousand vehicles by the turnpike, 140 thousand vehicles by the zoo, and 80 thousand vehicles through Montgomery County. The average occupancy of each vehicle is 1.45 persons.

Thirty-nine thousand trucks use the expressway every day.

The highways will not be widened, but pot holes, bumps, and "creeping" cement will be repaired.

"What we are doing," said Greene, "is taking a highway away from the public and giving them back the old traffic jams without the bumps and chuck holes."

According to Greene, the reason the highway is so narrow is partly because it was planned during World War II and the Korean War and there were more potential drivers in the service. Partly because predicting traffic then was an "art" and not a science. And partly because the expressway met with opposition from area residents at the time. He said that the rock cliffs were not owned by PennDOT, but were easements.

The highway was not originally designed for maintenance, Greene was told by a former designer, it was constructed with the idea of "economizing" by using cheap labor and little of the expensive steel.

Many of the bridge decks have to be repaired and this requires special rehabilitation techniques posed by access problems. PennDOT is also concerned it does not break environmental laws in the process.

Greene said PennDOT will finish the reconstruction project in Nov. 1987 and leave drivers "with a highway that will last 20 years without major maintenance."

He commented that "hopefully" technology will change in the next 20 years and a better roadway overlay will be developed.

Township Questions Plans

storm drainage condition would have to be repaired by Villanova if it was apparent that the neighboring township would or could not replace the drainage pipes itself.

The concept of the combination of tennis court and parking uses on the area to be paved near the Field House is a new but acceptable idea so far in planning. "The question is 'What are they,' " said Burnell. Villanova calls the area tennis courts but the township considers the area to be a parking lot.

The problem comes in because of the township's new subdivision code states that after every ten parking spaces a parking barrier is required.

The new athletic facility will be built on the area between the back of the Field House and County Line Road. The space used to be the baseball field, but a new one was constructed behind St. Mary's Hall.

The main area of the building will consist of five multi-purpose courts to be used for tennis, volleyball, basketball or badminton. During intercollegiate basketball games, a portable floor and folding bleachers will occupy this area to provide a minimum 7,000 seat area.

Sketches of Sports Complex.

A 200-meter six lane track will encircle the area.

Other activities the new athletic complex will accommodate are for weight training, exercise, wrestling, band practice and dance.

The new facility will be connected to the existing pool area, which will change to additional locker rooms. The planned swimming area will include a 25-yard-by-25 meter pool.

If the sports complexl plans are approved at the preliminary hearing to be held on March 21, the schedule goes to Final Planning approvals with other Township Commissions.

If approvals are not met along the way, action can be taken by Villanova by either drawing new plans or by making an appeal. Burnell presented the problem with an appeal in the lengthy amount of time the appeal may take in court.

"There is a very serious problem with pedestrian safety," said Burnell, "but if people do not observe the light at the intersection, there is nothing we can do. One must assume responsibility for himself," said Burnell.

Foreign Student Caught in Fraud

By SUZANNE REYNOLDS

A Villanova graduate student was accused by a federal grand jury last week of illegally obtaining student loan grants. Chaheal Agarwal, of India, was one of 18 foreign students attending college in the Philadelphia area charged with mail fraud and making false statements to the government. Agarwal enrolled at Villanova in the fall of 1981 as a Library Science major.

Art Switzer, assistant director of financial aid, said he was "aware that the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) was checking false Visa forms," so he was "not surprised when they cracked down on the foreign students." Switzer noted he "was not aware of this student actually being here."

According to federal prosecutors, a nationwide investigation into foreign students fradulently obtaining federally funded guaranteed loans and grants has led to more than 100 indictments. The eighteen students from the Philadelphia area received more than $100,000 in student loans and grants.

The investigation conducted by the INS, the U.S. Education Department's Office of Inspector General, the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency, and the Postal Service, found more students to be in violation of immigration laws.

Social Security records were checked to see if candidates for student loans might have recently obtained Social Security numbers for the purposes of applying for loans and grants. Students were also accused of mail fraud, the mailing of allegedly falsified statements.

According to U.S. Attorney William B. Carr Jr., the students' loans were used for tuition only. None of the foreign students kept the funds. However, the Registrar's office of Villanova has no record of Agarwal's completed courses or grades. It is possible, according to the Registrar's office, that Agarwal only registered for classes then dropped out.

AAUP: A Necessary Voice On Issues?

Everyone's getting into the act.

When the University Board of Trustees dropped Villanova's football program nearly two years ago, it was the students who provided the initial outrage of the sudden dismissal of the program through the medium of rallies and demonstrations. One year later, the General Alumni Association vented its frustration at its alma mater by calling for the resignation of President John Driscoll, citing the dropping of football as one of the main contributing reasons for the demand. Sandwiched in between were numerous protestations by various interested parties and the revelations of skeletons in the closets in the form of correspondence between the movers and the shakers in the football issue. Now the faculty, at the request of the Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) will air its opinions at a forum designed to firmly establish the faculty's position on the possible restoration of a football program. But is the faculty's consensus really needed? With all the prior presentations of information, does anyone really care?

Three years ago, the AAUP saw its hopes of confirming itself as a viable organization through collective bargaining status eliminated by the Board of Trustees and the National Labor Relations Board. Since then, the AAUP has been contented to limit itself to dealing with minor issues and internal discussions. This scheduled forum may very well be the highlight of the AAUP's recent activities.

The makeup of the panel raises a serious question: will the alumni's numerous contributions to the issue be considered? Obviously the selection of the panelists reflects an effort to form a balanced assembly. However, the speaker who will represent the alumni is an employee of the University and cannot be expected to fully expand on the alumni's vehement demands for football restoration. The alumni's point of view is necessary to any contribution to the issue of football. In addition, the purpose of this forum is to give the faculty "the most available information." Does this mean that facts concerning monies previously allocated for football and attendance figures will finally be released? It's doubtful.

The AAUP admits that the evidence presented at this forum is not likely to be new information. It is simply another University constituency adding its input. If it's a matter of presenting pertinent new information leading to further considerations about restoration of football, this idea should be applauded. But if it's simply a presentation of old facts and common knowledge, this forum will be serving only the AAUP's quest for recognition and will not contribute to the understanding of the issues related to the football riddle.

Letters to the Editor

Alumni Integration Needed

To the Editor:

As a relatively successful son of Villanova (1977), I believe that it is incumbent upon me to relate my post-Villanova career experience in the hope that future Villanova graduates pursue greater career opportunities. Many of the steps taken immediately prior to graduation appear to have a marked impact on future events.

First of all, as I remember well, the Career Placement Center at Villanova was atrocious in 1977. It is an embarrassment that a major, highly regarded university such as Villanova has such an unprofessional, rinky-dink operation. This certainly does no justice to the generally excellent widespread academic reputation of Villanova. If the Career Placement Center is still under the auspices of the mental-midget who directed it in 1977, devoid of any substantial changes, serious questions should be raised as to whether the University has any interests in their graduates aside from the Alumni Fund.

Not only was this office run like an impersonal factory, it has led many of my fellow peers to sell themselves short. The viability of Villanova as a major educational institution will lie in the accomplishments of her sons and daughters. And the better off graduates do, the more the Alumni Fund will prosper. Can one rationally or seriously expect pre-packaged and discarded alumni to be supportive? It has been my distinct impression that those who have undertaken things on their own have found a much wider range of opportunities.

This brings me to my second criticism: From a lateral vantage point, it appears that the few alumni clubs that I have touched base with are more interested in "rah, rah" pep rallies than in advancing each other's mutual interests. The career development of alumni and future graduates should be expanded to the point of mutual growth — there is room for exchange. Villanova graduates have just not been "cultured" to look out for one another.

It is my firm belief that this should be the case, since many other universities benignly encourage this approach of assisting their fellow graduates. A more viable Alumni Association would be career-oriented beyond Villanova, and would encourage alumni guidance of Villanova undergraduates. The experience of "life in the real (post-academic) world" depicts the importance of and strength within such "networks." In this manner, both parties will grow, as well as the coffers of the Alumni Fund.

The Wildcat basketball team is drawing much attention and pride to our alma mater. Take heed and learn from Georgetown's experience — Use this opportunity to aggressively package Villanova to its alumni, and create a more dynamic alumni club which will encourage interaction at all levels.

Villanova has a tremendous wealth of potential ahead — do not blow this opportunity, as it will not repeat itself. Although there may be one signature on this letter, I am confident that I speak for many other disappointed alumni — many of whom I have discussed these matters with. Given the University's attention and premium placed on post-graduate career counselling through the CDC and the organization of the alumni infrastructure, is there any wonder why such a large number of Villanova alumni choose not to participate?

International Interaction

To the Editor:

Have any of you seen time flying like some people have seen UFO's flying? Well I haven't seen it either but I certainly felt it last night when I was thinking about my six month stay in this country.

Prior to my take off to this "Alien Galaxy," I had braced myself for all kinds of unforeseen "forces." Flying in mid air I wished I had taken a tip or two from Luke Skywalker on Intergalactic travel.

To my surprise when I came out of Philadelphia Airport, I saw hardly a soul on the street except me. Here I was, a small human speck on the tarred road stretching far into the distant horizon. It was as if I had arrived in a ghost town in contrast to my expectations.

Now, after six months, when I think back upon my preparation for the final countdown, I cannot help but feel amused.

Finally when I settled down to "Humanoid Existence," the story was quite different. As I started meeting people I learned more about them and at the same time they were curious to learn more about me and my country. I sensed no vibes of hostility whatsoever!

I did not have much of a problem adjusting to the culture because of certain commonalities between the two, as is evident in the movie 'Gandhi'.

I think a good way to learn about each other and about different cultures is to have an international students with an opportunity to interact with the American students and promote free cultural exchange. Unfortunately, this does not exist at Villanova although I feel some thought should be given to this matter.

Despite having to adjust to a new culture I have certainly found this experience to be a unique, challenging and interesting one. I would like to end with the hope that during the remainder of my stay I would be able to dispel some of the myths that my fellow students might have about India and her people.

When it is time for the final touchdown I hope I have some of my own culture to take back!

Jewish Genocide in U.S.S.R.

This past Nov. 20, at the University of Pennsylvania, the Soviet Jewry Council, a wing of the Jewish Community Relations Council, sponsored its annual procondoned and government-propogated anti-Semitic policies in the Soviet Union. The evidence that there is in Russia an officially sanctioned and supported campaign for the suppression of Jews and everything Jewish, strengthened by the state-endorsed publication of violent anti-Semitic books, is so overwhelming that it will fail to be acknowledged only by those who do not want to know.

For those who are not historically innocent, the persecution of Jews is not a new and strange phenomenon which has emerged just recently, either in Russia or anywhere else. They were persecuted by the Christians in the early church, in both the East and West. In the year 387 the Greek, John Chrysostom, expressed his spirituality in unbelievably violent sermons against the Jews. They were persecuted in the Middle Ages. And in 1543 Martin Luther compiled a series of distortions under the title, The Jews and Their Lies. While Luther's treatise is itself a lie, it is nevertheless the continuation and the fateful development of what was long ago initiated by those who have the truth, and no doubt played its historical role in the shaping of later events.

Here, indeed, we come upon what is for man the most essential danger, temptation, and deception: the self-righteous conviction that one is in full possession of absolute truth. There is the logical and mutual exclusion, the argument runs, of the one and the many. Truth is one, and the varieties of error and falsehood are many. We have, and are in, the one truth. All who do not acknowledge our truth are in error and live in falsehood; they betray the truth itself. On the religion level, the conviction that one is in full possession of the truth motivates an intolerance which does not acknowledge that another style of religious life can be equally true, and no longer distinguishes between the more and the less true; it now opposes the true god to the false god — The absolute truth is one; it cannot be many.

In ancient cultures, the variety of ways in which man responded to God and the gods is accompanied by a vivid consciousness that they are all a way to the same truth. This early tolerance reflects the admission that the truth about being can reach into life in more than one way. Every genuine response to God, the gods and the world, is true in so far as it touches truth, but none is the one and only truth because the truth about being is essentially beyond human reach. But now that we have a false god instead of an equally true god, the false — and sometimes its representatives along with it — must be suppressed or stamped out.

The fate of the Jews, whether at the hands of Orthodox or Roman Christians, did not differ much. Is the present persecution of Jews in the Soviet Union. The evidence that there is in Russia an officially sanctioned and supported campaign for the suppression of Jews and everything Jewish, strengthened by the state-endorsed publication of violent anti-Semitic books, is so overwhelming that it will fail to be acknowledged only by those who do not want to know.

The Soviet Union is in possession of another kind of absolute truth, and punishes the errors of Judaism (often the error of simply being a Jew) without mercy. A few examples of how this truth deals with anything Jewish.

The Torah is characterized in a state-endorsed book as the unequaled document in praise of hypocrisy, treachery, and all that is most base. Anyone who wants to live by the Torah must be treacherous, base and dealt with accordingly. Gathering in synagogues is therefore not permitted, and the study and teaching of Hebrew is absolutely forbidden to Jews — although permitted to a small number of non-Jews. There are no Jewish schools, Rabbinical colleges are not allowed and there is a systematic anti-Semitic policy of discrimination in university admissions.

Anyone who commits the error of teaching Hebrew in the Soviet Union can look forward to a possible prison term or a few years in Siberia. The attempt to remind Jews of their cultural roots identifies one as an "ideological deviationist" with disastrous consequences. If a Jew wants to emigrate to Israel, this, too, is forbidden (the small number permitted to do so is insignificant). If one is an artist, intellectual, scientist, or technician, and a Jew, the application for emigration to Israel, or anywhere else, amounts to "unpatriotic conduct." One is not allowed to leave the country, academic privileges are revoked, one loses one's job and gets charged with parasitism. Again the award may be prison or Siberia.

The aim of the Soviet Union is to isolate the Jews in the country, to annihilate everything Jewish, and thereby to bring about a cultural genocide.

How is the desperate situation of the Jew in the Soviet Union to be resolved? Today, the only solution is to break the silence and speak out. We know from other events and occasions in our century the complicity of silence and the way it can contribute to the deathly pallor that hovers over the life of the Jew. And who should speak out if not the institutions where the defense of every great culture and all that is humane has its very home? But today, in America, with the exception of the great colleges and universities known to everyone, the universities themselves are something of a problem.

The Greeks used to say, "the fish begins to rot at the head." If it is so, the responsibility for much that is ungenuine in our culture, including even the dedication to mediocrity (which is not a question of talent, but of being satisfied with less than the best one can do), must be laid at the doors of universities. More and more they are modeled on industry, with the same dreary demands for instantaneous results in education that one finds in the fusion of chemical substances. Of course, we still call them universities, but this is no more than a name. While industry was never a force for responsibility, the university is like it in that it has ceased to be one. In many instances, it is a place where one comes to learn how to do "business," prepare to work for this or that company, and perhaps get just that touch of the humanities to prepare one for cocktail-party conversation.

But it could be the other way around. The university could take seriously its grave responsibilities. Besides preserving a tradition, without which there can be no creativity and originality, one of its gravest responsibilities is to speak out against, oppose and halt, the subversion of personal and intellectual integrity wherever it occurs. The burden of responsibility for preventing the annihilation of Jewish culture and the inhumane treatment of Jews in the Soviet Union lies today with the international academic and scholarly community.

The Soviet Jewry Council, aware of the power of the protest that comes with the voice of academic and scholarly communities, invited the presidents and representatives of local colleges and universities to express, if only by their presence, opposition to anti-Semitic practices in Russia. Many responded. Villanova University, although extended an invitation, did not accept. We are deeply troubled over the failure of this University to be represented on an issue which should be one of its primary concerns.

CHI's Justice Seminars Reviewed

By AMELIA McGOVERN

The purpose of the Villanova Conference on Peace, Justice and International Institutions, held from March 10-12 in the Connelly Center, was to inquire whether an effective peace strategy requires increased attention to justice and the strengthening of international institutions as well as to arms control and disarmament.

This topic was explored in four plenary sessions and 15 workshops in which an estimated 250 people attended.

The West German Ambassador Gunther van Well spoke at the two plenary sessions on Friday. He spoke about understanding the European community and why it is important to the United States for it to be strong.

Van Well stated, "If the present crisis in the world economy could be prevented from escalating into catastrophe, it was partly due to the maintenance of EC-solidarity, its close cooperation with the United States and its substantive relationship with the countries of the developing Third World."

He also made clear his views on the importance of the United Nations, "Working out an active policy in the U.N. should be part of a constructive response . . . for a reactivation of the U.N. as an instrument to promote peace and justice," stated van Well.

Friday night's plenary session was in conjunction with a reception and banquet. At the reception the guests had a chance to converse with the speakers and with other guests.

Friday night's theme was "Three Perspectives on Building a Peaceful World." Other speakers, besides van Well, included Dr. Paul Walker, program director of the Physicians for Social Responsibility and U.S. Senator Joseph R. Biden, D.-Del. Walker spoke strongly about the need for arms control. He opened his speech with an alarming statistic.

Walker said, "75 percent of all high school students do not think they will live out their natural lives."

He also pointed out that the U.S. produces about 3-5 bombs per day. Walker also stressed that what is being built are not war deterrents, but war fighting weapons.

Biden spoke about effective peace strategy, stressing the need for mutually verifiable nuclear arms freeze. He impressed upon the need for new foreign policy.

The closing plenary session was on Saturday. The theme was "Where Do We Go From Here?" In his speech, Frederick Heldring, deputy chairman of the Philadelphia National Bank, called the arms race "a travesty, a disaster, and an insanity."

Other speakers on Saturday included Eric Cox, field director of the World Federalists Association and Campaign for U.N. Reform and John McConnell, president of the Earth Society Foundation.

Dr. John Logue, chairman of the conference and Director of the Common Heritage Institution summed up the conference by emphasizing three main points: a nuclear arms freeze is not enough; there is a need for a stronger, restructured U.N.; and justice must be emphasized when speaking of peace.

Logue called the conference a "mind stretcher." He was pleased with the turnout but felt more students would have attended if it was not held at the same time as the Big East Basketball Tournament.

Lindbacks Noted

Seniors, juniors, and sophomores in all undergraduate day colleges, as well as full-time faculty members of those colleges, will nominate candidates for the twenty-third annual Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation awards for distinguished teaching. Student voting for these nominations will be held on Mon., March 21 and Tues., March 22, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on each day.

C & F students are asked to vote in the Bartley Hall cafeteria; Engineering students will vote in the Dean's office, College of Engineering; Art and Science students and Nursing students will vote in the main lobby of Connelly Center. Any student unable to vote from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on one of these two days may vote in Connelly Center on March 21, from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. Faculty will vote by mail.

Voters will be invited to choose any three full-time faculty members who are not previous winners. The five candidates receiving the highest number of votes will be the official nominees for the Lindback awards. The President of the University will select two names from the list of five and designate them as winners of the 1983 Lindback awards, and present them with checks of $1000 each at commencement exercises in May. About twenty other faculty members receiving the highest number of votes will be designated as honorable mention, and their names will appear in a subsequent issue of the Villanovan.

The Lindback Foundation annually makes grants available to colleges in the Delaware Valley to encourage effective teaching on the undergraduate level. Previous winners of the award, not eligible for re-election by terms of the foundation's regulations, are as follows:

Patrick J. Dougherty (Finance) and John J. Gallen (Civil Engineering), 1961; William C.A. Henry (Business Law) and Henry L. Rofinot (History), 1962; William G. Driscoll (Physics) and James J. Mitchell (English), 1963; Emil Amelotti (Mathematics) and Joseph J. Hicks (Electrical Engineering), 1964; Thomas C. Linahan (Mathematics) and Benedict A. Paparella (Philosophy), 1965; Jose R. Tenants Rights Are Re-evaluated

This is the first of a two part series on tenants rights.

By BARBARA SIMON

Beware, or better yet, be aware. If you are graduating from Villanova this May or just moving from dorm life or home life to an apartment, it is important to be educated on a few basic facts concerning tenant's rights. Moving boxes, beds, tables and clothes is only part of the transition to apartment life. Thoroughly reading and becoming familiar with one's lease is important so one knows the exact deposit and rent amounts required, to understand the content of the document and to help in solving future questions and problems concerning the apartment.

The lease is a legal document and the tenant's legal protection concerning any problems. For instance, if the landlord promises things, such as repairs or a new stove, have the landlord put the promises in writing and sign it. Also, if there are any changes in the lease form the landlord must initial it.

According to Dr. Burke T. Ward, assistant professor of business law at Villanova University, a lease could just be a contract of adhesion which means that there is no real bargaining power on the side of the prospective tenant. It is a take it or leave it type of lease and some of the terms may even be unenforceable.

If you still like to party or watch late night television, read all the small print and see if there is a restriction on noise after a certain hour. If this clause on noise is continuously breached, it could be a valid reason to be evicted.

Dr. Burke T. Ward

Do not wind up accidentally renewing your lease by pleading ignorance of the termination clause. Understand exactly what length of notice is required before leaving or else the lease is automatically renewed. Legally the tenant is bound to the renewed contract, so watch out!

Another precaution that the tenant should take is to take the time before moving in to carefully write a list of all the existing damages in the apartment such as holes in the carpet, broken doors or leaky faucets. Send this list to the landlord requesting a certified mail-return receipt. This is just another way to protect the tenant when he moves from having to pay for pre-existing damages. The proof is in writing.

At the termination of the lease the tenant may have his security deposit returned. The security deposit is the sum of money issued to the landlord before moving in to insure against damage to the leased premises. In Pennsylvania the maximum amount of security is two months rent. Dr. Ward warns that "some apartment complexes demand advanced rent in addition to the security deposit. This may violate the statute if the advanced rent is considered additional security. However tenants would have to challenge this in court." During the following year (and subsequent years) the deposit amount drops to only one month's rent. The tenant can demand the return of a month's rent or apply it to future rent.

In the third year of the lease any security deposit in excess of $100 must be deposited in an interest bearing account. The tenant is entitled to the interest minus one percent.

In New Jersey, where the tenant has greater protection, the landlord must immediately deposit the security in an interest bearing account. If the landlord fails to do this, the tenant can apply the security to future rent and the landlord cannot demand further security.

When a tenant vacates the leased premises and gives the land-lord a forwarding address, the landlord has 30 days in which to return the security deposit. If there was damage done, within 30 days the landlord must send the tenant an itemized list of the damages. If the landlord fails to send the security deposit or the list of damages, the tenant is entitled to two time the amount improperly withheld (minus any actual damages proven by the landlord).

Money can be saved and possibly earned through careful notice of rules of the lease and notes in writing about the pre-existing damages. The landowner is the boss with regulations but the tenant is paying for his rights and has legal protections, only if he is aware of them.

Escaping Lebanon

This is the second of a three part series.

By AMELIA McGOVERN

For most students, June is a month of lying on the beach and working a summer job. Their biggest concerns include maintaining a tan and getting along with the boss. But for Shirine Farah (her name has been changed at her request), June 1982 resembled a nightmare.

Shirine was born in America in 1959. Her father, a Lebanese, was offered a job in Lebanon and shortly after her birth her family moved there. They lived there until about the time the war broke out in 1975, then they returned to the United States.

After two years of high school in Swarthmore, Pa., and a year and a half of studies at Muhlenberg College, Shirine longed to return to Lebanon, so she took a semester off from school. During summer vacation of 1979 she visited Beirut, Lebanon, and once there, made up her mind to stay. She enrolled at American University in Beirut.

As the war escalated, the students' very lives were in danger. Finally, the university administration, having felt responsible for its students, actively attempted to get the foreign students safely out of the country. Shirine, an American citizen, signed up to leave, and on June 10 her journey began.

Approximately 60 students were taken by bus from West to East Beirut. This was the first dangerous leg of Shirine's journey.

When they reached East Beirut they were stopped by Christian Militia and were informed that there was an Israeli naval blockade in the sea. The students were held while all passports were checked. They were sent to wait in the lounge of a hotel and instructed not to leave.

The wait in the lounge was long and tense. It consisted mostly of watching news reports and trying to ignore rumors of when they would depart. As the third night in the cramped claustrophobic quarters approached, news arrived that they would be leaving by boat for Cyprus at 5 p.m. They had spent 50 hours in the lounge.

At 8 p.m. that same night a boat appeared out of the pitch black. A voice from the darkness demanded the students identify themselves. A spokesman for the students answered by saying they had received Israeli clearance. After questioning, the students were on their way once again.

One hour later an Israeli naval ship appeared. The students were instructed by a powerful, authoritative voice, "Everyone up on deck with your hands up, don't move or I'll shoot." Shirine explained that fear had her in a state of delirium. She wanted to laugh, but desperately struggled to prevent this, knowing it could get her in trouble, perhaps killed.

For twenty minutes they shined a spotlight on the students' ship, leaving no corner unexplored. They took five students and the captain with them to their boat. They later returned the students and gave the captain word that they could continue for Cyprus, after a night's rest.

Sleeping was not easy. People were not clean; they had spent the last two nights in a lounge with

Barber Stays A Cut Above

By CAROLYN MILLER

Upon entering, the scent of talcum powder greets the nose. Male customers, ranging from students to maintenance members, are seated in the chairs lining the wall, while awaiting their turn. Sounds are heard of chit-chat, hair dryers and scissors snipping hair. Before a huge mirror, Villanova's barber and hair stylist, Louis D'Angelo is seen, performing his specialty of the past 28 years: cutting hair.

Yes, Villanova, there is a barbershop on campus! The Villanova Barber Shop, located in Dougherty Hall, was opened on Nov. 5, 1955. D'Angelo was one of four barbers to open the shop at that time, but now only he remains. The shop is university owned and D'Angelo pays rent for its use.

The barbershop's customers include male professors, priests, maintenance members and students. One misconception D'Angelo would like to resolve is that he only cuts hair for those students enrolled in the ROTC program. The majority of his student customers are in this program, but D'Angelo wants all males of the Villanova community to know that, "I give all types of haircuts for men: layer cuts, blow dry cuts and any male styles."

For just a little more than "two bits," interested males whose crowning looks are in need of a trim, look no further than the campus. D'Angelo does not perform the surgical practices of blood-letting or toothpulling, which were popular among Renaissance barbers, but for a reasonable $5, and $6 for longer hair, he will cut your tresses in any desired style.

As for female customers, D'Angelo says, "Once in a while, girls will come in to get their hair cut, but they are not regular customers." However, he offers some good news for females, "In the fall I may hire a hair stylist for women."

The shop's hours are 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, during the fall and spring semesters and Monday, Wednesday and Friday during the summer. D'Angelo is the main barber at the shop, but he says, "Occasionally, I get help from another barber during my busy times." These hectic hours are usually on Mondays and Tuesdays because of the ROTC inspection.

Commenting on his student customers D'Angelo replies, "During the 28 years that I have cut hair here, I have found Villanovans to be outstanding students. They have always been very mannerly. They are great!"

The next time you are in Dougherty Hall, before rushing off to a frat meeting or one of the student activities offices, stop in and see "Lou," and check out the Villanova Barber Shop.

The Greek Way

IFC Honored at Conference

Joe Buggy, president of IFC and Robert Gamble, secretary of IFC.

Villanova's Interfraternal Council was awarded the prestigious Lunsford award at the recent Northeast Interfraternal Conference. The award honors the most outstanding IFC with 6 to 12 fraternity chapters. It is in recognition of effective programming and leadership ability that the award is based on.

Villanova's success continued at the conference when two members of its delegation were elected to the executive board of the NEIFC. Joe Buggy, of Sigma Phi Epsilon and Robert Gamble of Alpha Phi Delta were elected President and Secretary respectively.

The four day conference held in Atlantic City, New Jersey was attended by more than 400 students representing colleges and universities in the Northeast. The NEIFC conference is designed as a leadership seminar and provides an opportunity through which IFC's and Panhel councils can join to discuss ideas and problems of the Greek system. It also enables these councils to learn how to effectively institute changes which will bring about both a smooth running and well respected Greek system.

The conference consisted of various lectures and group discussions concerning Greek matters. Among those in attendance giving presentations were two members of Villanova's administration. Joseph Burke, Judicial Affairs Officer, lectured on the constructive aspects of implementing judicial boards among IFC's and Panhels. Gary Bonas, Assistant Director of Student Activities gave a presentation concerning the college student of the '80s. The topic pointed out what type of people fraternities and sororities should look for by explaining today's student attitudes and demographics. These speeches along with the other presentations were well received and beneficial to the attending groups.

Service: A Greek Tradition

Fraternities and Sororities at Villanova have, for too long, been associated only with their social aspects. The Greeks also have another major facet to their existence. This facet is philanthropy. The brothers and sisters are very proud of the services which they provide to both the surrounding community and many national organizations.

Coming up during Greek week '83, the Greeks will once again show how service can also be fun. On Wed., March 23, at 8 p.m. in the Day Hop Cafeteria in Dougherty Hall, the first annual Greek Talent Show will take place. A fee of one dollar per student will be charged at the door for this night of humor and talent. All of the money collected on Wednesday night will be contributed to Campus Ministry to support "Project Sunshine." On Sat., March 26, the I.F.C. and Panhel will sponsor a "Villanova Greek Easter Egg Hunt" for the young children in the area. Each Fraternity and Sorority is contributing funds and a helping hand to make this event become an ongoing thing.

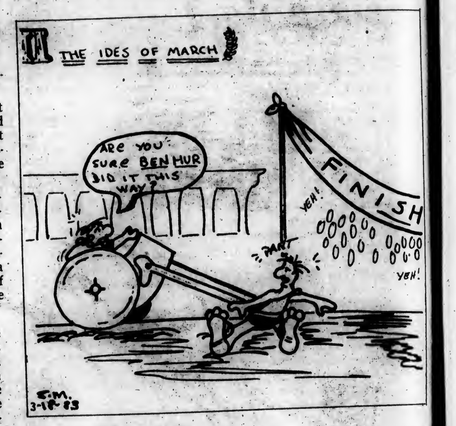
Individual Fraternities and Sororities also do their own service projects. Alpha Phi Omega conducts the campus semesterly blood drive which is always very successful. Pi Kappa Phi supports the national PUSH program, a service to help the handicapped. Many Greek organizations are also affiliated with local organizations such as the support of the Philadelphia Big Brothers and Big Sisters program by both Tri-Delta and Sigma Phi Epsilon.

Philanthropy does not only include a commitment of financial needs but also of personal time. The Greeks give up many hours to help the underprivileged and also simply to show their good intent to the youngsters of our community.

It is unfortunate, however, that so few people know of all the good that Greeks do. The diligent things they do outweigh the aspects of Fraternity/Sorority life which are so widely publicized.

It is not only national Greek organizations that have a major service calendar. Tau Kappa Omega and Lamda Tau Delta both conduct a wide variety of service projects in our area. Tau Kappa Delta has offered a very large amount of help toward the betterment of the upcoming Easter Egg Hunt.

Remember then, the next time you are walking across campus and see a student with a Lamda Chi Alpha hat or a Kappa Kappa Gamma sweatshirt on, that these students give much of their time and help to try to bring "sunshine" into the lives of others.



Greek Week '83 Schedule

With the opening of Greek Week on Sun., March 20, the fraternities and sororities at Villanova will begin a celebration that will strengthen our unity and increase our spirit. This annual event provides an excellent opportunity for a better and enjoyable way to build rivalries as well as friendships. The schedule of events were designed to include as many brothers and sisters as possible, including games from pie-eating to softball.

Greeks have always been very involved in several aspects of service on the Villanova campus. Greek Week continues the tradition by sponsoring a Greek "God and Goddess" Talent Show, to be held in the Dayhop on Wednesday night. Tickets are one dollar and can be bought at the door, all proceeds will be donated to "Project Sunshine."

Fraternal and sorority organizations are becoming a significant part of the Villanova community and their presence is becoming more obvious. Greek Week provides a great chance to witness what fraternal life at Villanova is all about.

Each fraternity and sorority has its own personality, and spirit. Greek Week shows that brotherhood and sisterhood is not limited to those in your own organization, for all Greeks have a common bond, forming an even larger "family." "Greek life at Villanova — Years of Brotherhood and Sisterhood — a Week of Unity." March 20-27, come, cheer us on and see what we're all about.

New Ethnic Course Offered

By JACK McHUGH

A new course, "The Italian Experience in America," will be introduced in the 1983 fall semester by the Honors Program in cooperation with the Ethnic Studies Program as a part of a planned new series of courses on ethnic groups in the United States. The course will be taught by Dr. Richard N. Juliani of the Sociology Department, a specialist in the field of Italian-American studies.

"The course will be interdisciplinary, drawing upon materials from history, the social sciences and literature. Through lectures, readings, slides, films and class discussions, this course will introduce the student to various dimensions of the departure of immigrants from Italy; their resettlement in the U.S.; their transformation into Italian-Americans; and their assimilation into American society.

The course will have a seminar format with an emphasis upon training students to do original research using primary source materials such as oral histories, government records, personal documents, newspapers, and field observations.

Dr. Juliani is nationally known for his extensive research and writing on immigration and ethnicity in general and on Italian-Americans in particular. His doctoral dissertation, a study of Italian immigration to Philadelphia, was published by Arno Press of the New York Times. In addition, he has published numerous articles on these topics and has served as vice president of the American Italian Historical Association.

The course code number is 146-4900-01 and it is on Fridays at 1:30-3:20.

In the spring semester of 1984, a similar course is planned on Irish-Americans; and in 1985, a course on Eastern Europeans in the United States is anticipated.

The St. Lawrence Early Music Ensemble.

Medieval Musicians

By CATHY GROODY

The St. Lawrence Early Music Ensemble will present a program of medieval and Renaissance music on March 23 at 4 p.m. in Corr Chapel. Titled "Music from Northern Europe" (1200-1600), the program will feature both sacred and secular music for Elizabeth I, as well as a demonstration of sixteenth century court dancing.

The Early Music Ensemble is a select group of six versatile musicians who specialize in learning the music and performing techniques of music from the 12th to 17th centuries. They will perform on authentic reproductions of medieval and Renaissance instruments, most of which are part of the Emile Romer Collection at St. Lawrence University in Canton, New York. Included are shawns, sackbut, vielle, racket, bells and hurdy-gurdy, and pipe and tabor.

Founded in 1971, the group has toured widely in the past, giving concerts throughout the U.S. They have played in Boston, Washington D.C., New York City, and Philadelphia, as well as San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland.

The group is under the direction of Gail Berry, a member of the faculty at St. Lawrence University.

WE'LL PAY YOU TO GET INTO SHAPE THIS SUMMER.

If you have at least two years of college left, you can spend six weeks at our Army ROTC Basic Camp this summer and earn approximately $600.

And if you qualify, you can enter the ROTC 2-Year Program this fall and receive up to $1,000 a year.

But the big payoff happens on graduation day. That's when you receive an officer's commission.

So get your body in shape (not to mention your bank account).

Insights on Irish Poetry

By PETER BERKERY

Professor Brian Donnelly is the epitome of the romantic Irish writer. He is rather small and slight, with light brown hair and bright blue eyes. He talks with a soft Irish brogue and his face is often broken by a cheerful smile. Only a few fortunate Villanova students are able to attend his Modern Irish Poetry course because Donnelly is a visiting professor from Rutgers University who teaches only one class a week.

Donnelly is presently the chairman of the English department at Carysfort College, Dublin. He decided to accept a visiting professorship at Rutgers in order to get a change in culture and teaching exposure. This is "always beneficial" because he claims that to teach year after year in the same place can make a teacher "very mechanical."

In comparing American students to Irish students, Donnelly states that most American students are more open and forthcoming, adding humorously, "You can't get Irish students to talk and you can't get American students to shut up." This he attributes to the Irish educational system, which like the British, is more rigorous and standardized. According to Donnelly, students here have more freedom in choosing their courses, whereas in Ireland most students with the same major take the same courses.

Also, in Ireland as in most of Europe, the basic entry requirements at the college level are much tougher than in the United States. Donnelly feels the consequences of this are twofold; not everyone can go on to college, but those who do are usually more competent.

Donnelly admits that as a boy growing up in Cookstown County, Northern Ireland, he wasn't always interested in poetry and writing. "My only passion was for soccer," he says, but he became more interested in poetry as a student at London and Essex universities. He has never published any works of his own as yet, at least not anything he would "admit to," but he remains a foremost authority on Irish poetry.

"The measure of a great poet is the command and resonance of language," says Donnelly, who feels that many Irish poets are in this category. He points out that Ireland's richest expression has been a verbal one, as opposed to a pictoral or musical expression. Maintaining that the reason for this lies in the history of the Irish people, he says, "In a depressed culture, the one thing that can live is words."

A brilliant but extremely complex poet like Yeats can be enjoyed

Before We Put You In Charge Of The World's Most Sophisticated Nuclear Equipment,

We Put You Through The World's Most Sophisticated Nuclear Training.

It takes more than 16 months of intensive training to become a fully qualified officer in the Nuclear Navy. You begin with four months of leadership training. Then as a Navy officer you get a full year of graduate-level training unavailable anywhere else at any price.

Navy training is based on more than 1900 reactor-years of experience. Right now the Navy operates over half the nuclear reactors in America. And the Navy's nuclear equipment is the most sophisticated in the world. That's why your Navy training is and must be the most sophisticated in the world.

As an officer in the Nuclear Navy, you have decision-making authority immediately. You get important management responsibility fast. Because in the Navy, as your knowledge grows, so does your responsibility.

Your training and experience place you among the country's most qualified professionals. (No surprise that most of the men who operate the reactors in private industry started in the Nuclear Navy.)

It takes more time and more effort to become an officer in the Nuclear Navy. But the rewards are greater, too.

The rewards can begin as early as your junior year in college. Qualify, and the Navy will pay you approximately $1000/month while you finish school.

After four years, with regular promotions and salary increases, you can be earning as much as $40,500. That's on top of a benefits package that includes medical and dental care, and 30 days' vacation earned every year. More responsibility, more money, more future. So, if you're majoring in math, engineering or the physical sciences, and you want to know more about a future in nuclear power, fill in the coupon.

Today's Nuclear Navy is an opportunity like no other in the world.

By BILL PEZALLA AND JACK THAWIEY

Last Sunday night, three student volunteers, who have had the opportunity to work at St. Francis' Inn in the Kensington section of Philadelphia, came to the conclusion that there is an inherent difficulty in writing about people with whom they have worked. How does one talk about average individuals, ranging from children to senior citizens, who have fallen between society's cracks and are thus in need of support and help, but no pity?

Do you stress their material needs and thus, for the sake of time and space, ignore their wealth?

Do you write that they are predominantly deinstitutionalized mental patients, drug addicts, alcoholics and ignore the four-year old whose mom cannot afford food, the young Puerto Rican about our age who is simply unemployed - and embarrassed that he has to to to the Kitchen; or the senior citizen whose family has grown up and has forgotten that she even exists? There is an obvious frustration here that often manifests itself in violence.

And what about the violence? Do you minimize the violence of the streets so as to stress the inherent violence our lifestyle perpetuates. My lifestyle of surplus, by reason of birth and habit, may quietly be taking food from one in need. And how do you begin talking about the "work?" The actual work, be it dishwashing, food preparation or waiting on tables is not physically demanding. What does affect one is when a guest (street person) will say "Oh, its so nice you've volunteered your time," said in such a condescending manner and tone as to really be saying: "We'd rather be taking care of ourselves but damn, it's so frustrating . . . and no, I don't want your pity."

They are a proud people, yet it is hard to be proud when you have to get into a line to wait for a bowl of soup and a sandwich. And, repeated stabs at one's dignity has a way of undermining one's motivation.

Each of us who have been to St. Francis' Inn, can in some little way, in the quiet of our imagination, trade places with someone in the food line and feel that lack of initiative and know that if I was in his or her shoes, I don't know what the hell I'd do - the climb would be so far, so long and so hard.

Let us as a community be present, in some greater way over the next few weeks, to these individuals. There are those we meet like George and Ray, who last night had their coats stolen. Through the RSA and other campus organizations, the Villanova Committee for the Homeless hopes to keep people like George and Ray clothed, fed, and in turn, learn of a wealth that lies with the poor. It is said that we here at Villanova have so much to give but likewise, the poor offer us a gift that is priceless. Let us accept each other and grow in the meaning of giving and accepting.

by most intelligent readers, according to Donnelly who believes that one can enjoy the music of Yeat's poetry even if the actual ideas are difficult to comprehend. "Contemporary Irish poets are technically very traditional," he says, adding that American poetry is more self consciously expressive, and perhaps a little easier to understand. Yet he emphasizes that good poetry can be enjoyed on a number of different levels, the most immediate level being the poem's "verbal magic."

Donnelly's passion for poetry is equalled only by his love for music, classical music in particular. When he eventually leaves America, he says he will especially miss the Philadelphia Orchestra. Perhaps a yearly exchange program could be arranged; great American orchestras for great Irish poets.

only one unusable toilet facility. Because of the delay their 24 hour food and water supply was quickly being depleted.

The next morning they were instructed to bring all cameras, film and sound equipment to the soldiers. This caused mass confusion and panic because everyone had to find their belongings in a huge pile of suitcases.

Once again they were forced on deck with their hands in the air as the soldiers made a final search. By this time Shirine said, "I felt totally indifferent. I felt emotionally drained. My body was tense and tired."

The students were thoroughly interrogated for three hours. Shirine explained it, "One soldier would question me, then tell me I'm clear. I'd breathe a sigh of relief. Then another soldier would walk up and say 'no she's not' and start questioning me all over again. This went on for about three hours."

Following the interrogation the mood changed. Someone said "We need water." The students then experienced a wave of hospitality. They were given fresh food and water.

Shirine got off the boat as soon as she was cleared. She obtained permission to get to an airport where her body and belongings were completely searched. From there she was flown home.

Shirine said she has found America peaceful and quiet. At first she had trouble relaxing. "A door would close and I would jump. It was hard to get used to sounds and act accordingly. Things were passive, people were in the streets."

She will graduate after one more semester with a Bachelor of Arts in Sociology. Right now she wants to return to Lebanon to pursue a career in Arab Sociology.

Shirine commented: "One of the hardest things was coming back to a peaceful country, where people's main concern is catching the bus." It seems unsettling in her time of readjustment, when she is still re-evaluating her cross-cultural perspective.

'Godspell' Is Resurrected at Vasey

By GREG ANTON

Though the Pepsi-generation movement has long since fizzled out and the pilloried idealism of the '60s which sparked John-Michael Tebelak to write "Godspell" has been replaced with rampant complacency, the show has not lost its ability to communicate its message to contemporary audiences in an equally contemporary manner. Vasey Theatre's production of "Godspell" is thoroughly entertaining and adds a refreshing quality with its unique interpretation and adaptation.

The success of any "Godspell" production lies in the director's ability to overcome the inherent insipidity of the text, which, isolated, has virtually no entertainment value. Religious dogma has never been much fun; hence, the show must rely upon vaudeville, decorating moments with slapstick comedy to keep the banal script moving along. What results, of course, is the well-known Christian tribal phenomenon, replete with starry-eyed idolatry and relentless buoyancy. The extent to which the production utilizes a modern-day application measures the show's success. Director of the Vasey production, Terry Fimiano Guerin has successfully adapted the play to reflect the current times. In so doing, the talented ensemble of actors creatively tells the story, in a manner distinctly its own.

The preachy, parable-ridden lyrics demand the story to unfold as related improvisations. Because of the independent nature of each "scene," many diverse techniques can be used. This increases the opportunities for Guerin to impose her artistic interpretations. She takes full advantage of the situation and runs the gamut of styles, creating varying effects. Guerin is quick to give credit to the actors, designers, and directing staff who collaborated on the production and worked together to shape the material. Reggae, jazz, and country renditions of the songs help liven the rather flat, imitation rock score. The constantly changing moods are always immediately defined and are properly carried through for the duration, avoiding any confusion.

Paul Guerin is Jesus in Villanova Theatre's production of Godspell.

Despite the many lively and imaginative sketches, the show seemed more disjointed and unrelated than other productions. What was lacking was a synergistic force which was needed to tie all the pieces together to form a cohesive whole. Rather, it often seemed one was watching a recital where individual performers temporarily upstaged the ensemble, then later rejoined the group for convoluted, even reckless, finales.

It should be stressed that the lack of some fusing element did not detract from the individual performances. Yet, it created an awkwardness which was often manifested in the relationship between the audience and the ensemble. Employing the 3/4-round stage to its fullest extent, and then some, the ensemble freely moved about and within the audience. But, an intimate feeling of interaction was not always present. Often one felt cramped and claustrophobic as the actors came crashing down, on, and around the audience.

The ensemble was a well-rounded group of very talented individuals. There was no weak link; each slipped in and out of various roles with a great deal of ease. Additionally, they all had very good voices and projected well throughout the theatre. Paul Guerin gave a commanding performance as Jesus. His strong and powerful presence was consistently felt as he weaved his way in and out of the various segments. A highlight of the evening was Ricardo Martin's rendition of "All Good Gifts." Martin was accompanied by Margy McHugh. Though none of the "apostles" stole the show, Martin and Dana Amendola seemed to stand out.

The choreography, though simplistic, was appropriate and functional, yet could have served its purpose more precisely if it was toned down and refined. Poorly performed cartwheels and elementary acrobatics do not make for appealing choreography.

Throughout the first act, the ensemble itself seemed to need some toning down. Their self-indulgence required every line to be delivered with either a funny face or a kind of diabetic enthusiasm. These antics did not bring any passion to the Passion, but rather was a way to elicit guffaws from the audience as they observed this vagabond group of clowns.

Act One is proof that piety does get greatly reduced without solemnity. The kaleidoscopic, festive atmosphere did not carry over into Act Two. Act Two was the much more polished, coherent, and engaging act of the two for it abandoned its reckless, haphazard approach and the ensemble was forced to concentrate its efforts. The result is a very powerful act which demands much more from the actors. There is less peripheral action to serve as distractions. Unfortunately, there is no balance struck between Acts One and Two. Recognizing the vast difference in the material, one is hard pressed to blame Guerin or any one involved in the production. Idiosyncrasies of the script cannot be avoided, but they can be reduced. A calmer Act One would have allowed for a more natural transition into Act Two.

Debra Tobin and Charlie Ginn, dance for joy in Godspell.

The production, when at fault, only suffers from frayed edges and as a whole is extremely well directed. It is imaginative, aggressive, and experimental. It takes ope into a sort of Neo-Realism where roller skates, female impersonators, and the Godfather help relate the teachings of Christ.

The ending of the show is the most fascinating aspect of the production. It avoids all the tired and typical crucifixion and resurrection scenes. It is rather impressive. So as not to ruin the ending, I shall only reveal that the guy who dies reportedly rises again.

These 'Bunnymen' Don't Hop

By MIKE NOONE

Echo and the Bunnymen emerged several years ago, amidst a "psychedelic revival" in England. It cannot be said that they burst upon the scene here in the States, for they were not received with wide enthusiasm. However, they have attracted a loyal following and have managed to survive to record a third album: "Porcupine."

While their style is not entirely "psychedelic" as say, the sixties was, the music is filled with straining, off-key, background sounds and complicated mixing techniques, which produce an eerie effect. Perhaps the only comparison that can be drawn with another band is that of David Bowie's lesser known and more outlandish works. Their sound is intriguing, for, while the drummer maintains a fast dance beat, the other instruments sharply contrast it. This mixture, along with moaning vocals, make for music to which one certainly can not dance to.

Unlike many of the songs on their first album, which were quite catchy, "Porcupine" is filled with melancholy, drawn out songs composed of dry cynicism. Lead vocalist and songwriter Ian McCullough strains throughout each well meaning song, with repeated questions about the value of life and what the future has in store.

"The Cutter" is the most likable song on the album, and consequently it is receiving the most airplay. The song resembles, I hesitate to say, some of Led Zepplin's more "spaced out" songs with its use of droning strings. McCullough adequately sums up the thoughts of many people who are struggling with relationships and survival in a seemingly unforgiving world. In "The Cutter" he states Conquering myself until I see another hurdle approaching/ Say we can. Say we will, not just another drop in the ocean.

In small doses, the message of Echo and the Bunnymen is effective and clear. But, a whole album of this becomes tedious. This is an album for those who enjoy questioning the "ills" of society, but, the constant hammering of profound statements become tiring.

Echo and the Bunnymen have a unique style which is difficult to comprehend as well as to enjoy at first listen. This album will take several listenings before any message hits home. One must respect this band for not going the way of many, who, in the midst of this pop revival, altered their style in order to achieve commercial success. However, perhaps a more melodic approach, similar to that of their early songs, would prevent the Bunnymens' message from becoming tedious. The Bunnymen clearly have a great deal of talent and insight, however, on "Porcupine" they have not channeled it to produce anything outstanding.

Keith is Living Up to His Potential

By JOHN F. LYNCH

"The Lords of Discipline" is a film which stars David Keith, the fine actor who performed so well in "An Officer and a Gentleman." The film centers around the cruel goings-on that occur at an outwardly progressive and fictional South Carolina military institute.

The military establishment is set in the gracious elegance of Old Charleston and the time is 1964. The inevitable, which faces the graduates is their one-way ticket to Vietnam.

Keith is quite convincing in his role as the respected senior cadet, who is drawn into a situation in which he must deal with the elite group known as "The Ten." The ordeal is that Keith must make sure that the first black cadet (played by Mark Breland) is treated fairly by "The Ten," who are dedicated to purging the school of excess students who don't fit in.

The Institute is run by a high strung, Adolf Hitler-type character (played by G.D. Spradlin). His code is very strict, which makes the cadets shudder when the school code is at stake.

Keith, however, discovers there is something rotten in the state of Carolina, which could hurt not only the school but himself as well. This part of the film resembles that of "Taps," another military movie starring Timothy Hutton.

"Director Franc Roddam has somebow made the theme of military corruption fresh and vital, a task which is much more difficult than it may seem."

The strength of "The Lords of Discipline" can be found in its fine but predictable script. There is little doubt as the film progresses that the guilty will get what's coming to them, before film's end, and everyone will exit the theatre happily.

The film is both enjoyable and entertaining. One may think of "The Lords of Discipline" as just another of the many military films that have become popular in recent times, but this film relies on its own identity and a fine production. Director Franc Roddam has somehow made the theme of military corruption fresh and vital, a task which is much more difficult than it may seem.

"The Lords of Discipline" is a turbulent look within the world of military life. It is sometimes shocking in its detail but excellent in its acting and storyline. Keith is a good actor who seems to be getting better with time. It is apparent that his acting has reached a level at which he is confident in playing a lead role. It is obvious that he is an actor whom we will be hearing more and more of. "Lords of Discipline" is an interesting and provocative movie which suggests that behind the walls of military institutions, not everyone keeps in step.

Hey! Be There or Be Square

By BILL SANTOS

"Hipsters! Flipsters! Lend a robe and sing this gig." Here's the book you've been waiting for. The Catalog of Cool, a Warner Bros., book, edited by Gene Sculatti contains everything you ever wanted to know about this phenomenon known as cool. The catalog contains everything from sounds to screens, threads (that's clothes) to the tube.

Of the top cool groups, some well known groups and some not so popular to this writer, are the Beatles, the Doors, Bob Dylan, Henry Mancini, the Lounge Lizards, the B-52s, Roger Miller, and Elvis (Costello as well as Presley). What an array of talent to be labeled as cool.

This book also lists the fifty coolest movies ever made. Of the fifty, the ones rating at the top of the list are: "Dirty Harry," "Dr. Strangelove," Robert DeNiro's "Mean Streets," "Motel Hell" and "The Man With the X-Ray Eyes."

This expose has special sections throughout the pages that give tribute to Hipstersaints, people who give true meaning and substance to the word cool. Varying in modes of lifestyle, these "gods" have earned their way into the record book. Who is cool? How about George Hunter? Who? Lord Buckley is also cool. The others: Robert Prima, and Lenny Bruce. Hey, these guys are "frosty."

Under the Rest 'N' Rec section, Monopoly, Viewmaster3-D Pix, potato chips, and rum and coke parties portray cool in our everyday life.

You say you want to look cool, eat cool and talk cool . . . well this book can help you on your way. Not only does this catalog give you past examples of haircuts, such as the Blockhead, Flat Top and the Woodpecker, but also clothes like the sack, toreadors, ties, zoots, and Nehrus. Plus there is the listings of stores around the country so you can be cool too.

What's the coolest city in the U.S.A.? You'll be happy to know it's good old Philadelphia. Philly, with its hoagies, soft pretzels, Kensington, Allegheny (the city's white ghetto), and Bunny Siegler round out this city of cool. so, who is cool, what's cool and how can I be cool? The answers are only a finger snap away. Where else can the Bullwinkle Show rank up with Dallas? — only in the world of cool.

Just Like Mom Used to Make

By JAYNE M. STUART

Mister Sandwich is a delightful little shop to enjoy some real homecooked items in a relaxing atmosphere. It offers a wide assortment of sandwiches prepared in the deli-style: a lot of meat, fancy mustard and cheese on a kaiser roll (or bread if that is your preference). They have roast beef, corned beef, pastrami and ham to name just a few. The meats are both fresh and tasty.

If a deli sandwich is not what you have in mind, Mister Sandwich has hamburgers ranging from your standard burger with onions and cheese to the "Goliath" burger, which is so big (three patties), that you have to slay it rather than eat it. Also offered is a variety of toppings for the hamburger, which include bacon and Russian dressing.

To make your lunch complete, Mister Sandwich has an interesting collection of soups. They have both Manhattan and New England Clam Chowder, cream of cauliflower and vegetable beef. The soups are homemade so the choices vary daily. These soups are packed with vegetables (that are crunchy!) Zucchini, cauliflower and peas can be found in the vegetable beef which makes one yearn for mom's homemade soup. The servings are very generous, so unless you have a big appetite, BEWARE THE LARGE BOWL.

Mister Sandwiches' potato salad has a lot of celery, potatoes, eggs and is seasoned perfectly. They also have all cucumber and garden salad, which has olives and green peppers. And at this point, if you have any room left in your contented stomach, Mister Sandwich can boast of candy ranging from M&M's and Tootsie rolls to the delicacy known as Lindt chocolate. Straw berries dipped in chocolate com plete this fine potpourri.

Mister Sandwich is decorated informally yet it is both interesting and quaint. The decor is very homey and equestrian pictures don the walls. There are lots of potted plants in the window which is reminiscent of a sidewalk cafe.

The next time you are yearning for a satisfying lunch or early dinner, check out Mister Sandwich. Bring a friend, but more importantly — bring a hearty appetite. Mister Sandwich is located on 118 W. Lancaster Avenue in Wayne, and is open everyday except Sunday.

Helpful Hints for Planning Your Party

Having a party? As the host or hostesss, you will want to make sure that your guests enjoy themselves — but you also have a responsibility to assure that they arrive home safely. Here are a few helpful tips to insure that your party is a complete success:

ALWAYS SERVE FOOD WITH ALCOHOL.

Tasty snacks are not only a delicious addition to any party but can also slow the rate at which the body absorbs alcohol.

High-protein foods such as cheese and meats are especially good because they stay in the stomach longer.

Party cheese suggestions include an assortment of fresh cheeses with crackers, cheeseballs, cheese dips, cheese fondue and cheese pizza.

HAVE SEVERAL JIGGERS AT THE BAR

At an informal party, guests will probably mix their own drinks. If a jigger is handy, they very well may use it rather than pouring what seems to be the "right amount." Also inexpensive self-measuring one-ounce spouts can be purchased and placed on bottles. Guests will be less likely to drink to excess if standard measures for drinks are used.

HAVE NON-ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES AVAILABLE

It's very likely that some of your guests will not wish to drink an alcoholic beverage. Also persons taking certain medicines should not consume alcohol. Have soft drinks, coffee or maybe a non-alcoholic punch available for them.

IF YOU OBSERVE A GUEST DRINKING TOO MUCH . . .

Try to engage him in conversation to slow down his drinking.
Offer him food which will also slow down the rate at which his body is absorbing alcohol.
Offer to mix his next drink and make it a light one. Mix it with water rather than a carbonate

STOP SERVING ALCOHOL AN HOUR BEFORE THE PARTY IS TO END.

During the last hour of your party have coffee or some other non-alcoholic beverage available and top off the evening with a special food feature such as pizza or quiche Lorraine.

Neither coffee nor any other drink will help sober anybody up. Only TIME can do that. But by emphasizing non-alcoholic drinks toward the end of the party, you give your guests extra time for their bodies to absorb the alcohol they have consumed. With a low alcohol content in their blood, it will be safer for them to drive home.

AFTER THE PARTY

Of course, even under the best circumsfances, there's always the chance that some people will drink too much. When that happens, they become potential dangers to themselves and others. If one of your guests has been drinking excessively, you should see to it that he or she does not drive. Here are some suggestions:

— Suggest that a non-drinking guest drive him home.
— Allow him to stay overnight at your home.
— Try to take his car keys away. He may resist at first, but you must insist.
— Call a taxi to drive him home and pay for it if necessary.
— Physically restrain him — it sounds drastic, but you could be saving your friends life, or someone else's.

A RESPONSIBLE DRINKER IS . . .

Answer "True" or "False"

1. —— A person who has a defined and clear-cut standard of positive behavior he/she wants to maintain while drinking.
2. —— A person who will not allow him/herself to be persuaded or pressured into drinking in order to be accepted by friends.
3. —— A person who is able to have fun and relax in any social situation without a drink if he/she so chooses.
4. —— A person who is aware of his/her drinking limitations and will stay within these limits.
5. —— A person who, when entertaining others, serves food and alternate beverages when alcoholic beverages are served.
6. —— A person who supports and respects the rights of others who choose not to drink.
7. —— A person who does not drink and use any other drug simultaneously.
8. —— A person who is willing to risk to tell a friend that his/her behavior when drinking is abusive, offensive, etc.
9. —— A person who does not drink and drive.

If you answered "True" to every question, congratulations! Those which you answered "False" are suggested areas for self-evaluation and change.

Social drinking is:

Social drinking is not:

three fast martinis before lunch
having to drink to have fun gulping drinks on an empty stomach forgetting what you did while drinking drinking and worrying alone showing off how much you can hold using alcohol as a problem-solver

Where does social drinking end and problem drinking begin? There's no simple answer. But here's a pretty good definition:

If you need a drink to be social, that's not social drinking.

Cats Grab 2nd at NCAA Championships

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova Wildcats placed second in the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships last Friday and Saturday at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich.

The Wildcats scored 32 points behind Southern Methodist University's 43. The majority of SMU's points came in the field events as they won the shot-put and the 35 lb. weight throw which was good for a total of 20 points. SMU also placed second in the triple-jump to gain an additional eight points.

The Wildcats were victorious in three events: The 440-yard dash, 880-yard dash and the two-mile relay.

Senior Carlton Young picked up his third title in as many weeks in the 440-yard dash. Young won the trials and heats and in the six-man final, he took the lead from the gun and never yielded the front position. Young was electronically timed in 47.17 seconds to set an NCAA indoor meet intrinsically superior to Villanova's Larry James' 1968 meet record clocking of 47.0 seconds hand timed.

What was even more remarkable was the fact that Young was seeded 19th out of the 20 qualifiers. He was not even considered by experts to be in the finals, let alone win it.

Sophomore John Marshall had a spectacular day as he scored eleven points to pace the Cats. Marshall won the 880-yard dash with a time of 1:51.23 to beat Arkansas' tough quarter-miler Stanley Redwine (1:51.38.)

On his victory, Marshall remarked, "I was lucky to be there. Last year at this time I was injured." I'm glad I had an injury-free season, which was one of my goals. As far as the (880-yard) title goes, an NCAA title is hard to come by and it is one to be cherished as very few people can hold one."

Marshall came back one hour later and ran the 1000-yard run hoping to pick up some more points for the team. Marshall did not disappoint. He placed 5th, which was good for two points.

The two-mile relay team won with a time of 7:21.90, which established a new Villanova indoor record, NCAA Championship meet record and the NCAA indoor record. John Borgese (1:52.99), John Keyworth (1:50.99), Mike England (1:48.96) and Marcus O'Sullivan all performed well as they qualified in the heats and exploded in the final.

Senior Rod Wilson got off to a good start in the 60-yard hurdles, but hit his lead leg on the first hurdle and did not make it to the finals. Marcus O'Sullivan had trouble in the mile as he was injured with a leg problem. O'Sullivan was unable to train one week prior to the meet. He placed sixth in the heats of the mile in 4:07.33.

Coach Charles Jenkins stated, "Two of our favorites, hurdler Rodney Wilson and miler Marcus O'Sullivan didn't qualify due to injuries.

"We had a setback, but I approached the competition in a positive light. When things start off slowly, I try to get the team to work as hard as possible to get things turned around." Jenkins was able to do just that. The experts did not even pick Villanova as one of the top 10 teams this year.

Coach Jack Pyrah stated that he was pleased with the season as the Wildcats took team titles in the Big East and IC4A meets. He was also proud of the way the team performed in several invitationals such as the Vitalis/Olympic and Millrose meets.

Tennis: It's Wait and See

By CATHY GROODY

The Villanova men's tennis team starts off its 1983 spring season on Tuesday against La Salle College.

Of Coach Robert Langran's 12 man team, three starters have returned from last year as well as two reserves. This year Villanova's top-seeded player is sophomore Larry Gallen. Last year Gallen was Nova's number two singles player.

Paul Fitzsimmons, the senior captain, is the team's number two singles player. Fitzsimmons and junior Bill Harahan are the Wildcat's number one doubles team. Jonathan Lee mans the third singles spot for the Cats. Among other top Villanova players are freshman Jim Mattutat, sophomore Scott Miller and sophomore Frank Dunne.

In September, doubles players Fitzsimmons and Harahan were holders of the top ranking in the East Coast Athletic Conference. The team as a whole finished fourth in the Big East, and won the championship of the Rider Tournament.

"We don't expect to match our 18-6 record of last year," said Langran. Although he seems hopeful, Langran expects some difficulties because his intended number two player, Harahan, may be unable to play with the team this year. Langran believes this will put other players in more difficult matches than they're suited for.

"We're just not as deep as last year or the year before," commented Langran, while also mentioning that tough matches will be against teams like Bloomsburg State, St. John's, Franklin and Marshall and Haverford College.

Although Coach Langrah has been more optimistic about former teams, he still hopes to have a winning season this year.

Intramural Hoop Playoffs Underway

By MICHAEL BETZ

Betcha didn't know that there are more women's intramural basketball teams at Villanova than there are teams in the NBA. Or that there are four times as many men's teams as women's. What with all the hoopla that the other Villanova basketball team gets, intramural basketball may well be the best-kept secret on campus.

Let it be known that the secret is out. Under the exceptionally able leadership of student directors John Lavery and Mary Elise Willcox, another regular season of intramural basketball has been completed. All that remains are the playoffs, with the men's championship game scheduled for sometime this week and the women's sometime early next week.

Lavery has devised a playoff scheme comparable only to the NCAA's in size and complexity. Following the ten game season, 32 of the more than 100 men's teams qualified for the playoffs. The playoffs began last Friday, and by the end of the intense weekend, only two teams remained. The two survivors, the Sweet and Saco East squads, met Tuesday night to end the nearly five month struggle for intramural basketball supremacy.

The women's title is still very much up for grabs. The playoffs got under way just this past Wednesday, and Willcox saw no clear-cut favorite. Twelve teams, including last year's champion, Wildkittens, are vying for the championship. The teams each played a nine or ten game schedule. Then, only the top six teams in each of the two conferences, the Missouri Valley and Big Sky Conferences, were admitted into the playoffs.

Those twelve represent the largest playoff field ever for women's intramural basketball. This follows from the fact that the women's league, which expanded to 27 teams this season, has steadily increased in size for a number of years. As a result, Willcox has set aside the better part of a week for the completion of the playoffs.

Nova Flounders in Big East Tourney

Redmen Rally Bombs Cats

By MICHAEL HEALEY

The Redmen of St. John's went on a wild, second half warpath against Villanova, scoring a phenomenal 62 points and tomahawking the Wildcats from the Big East Tournament semi-finals by a score of 91-80. Down by ten at the half, the Redmen put in a 35-15 scoring run on the Cats, enabling them to advance to the finals of the tourney against tenacious Boston College.

"The first half was a nightmare," said St. John's Coach Louie Carnesecca, "but the second half was played in paradise."

For awhile, largely due to some near-flawless play by Villanova, it looked as though the whole game might just be a bad dream for Carnesecca.

Before the Redmen knew what hit them, the Cats had bolted to a 20-0 lead, prompting Carnesecca to call time out to avert a blowout. Following the strategy session, Nova came on relentlessly again, hitting six more points in succession to put St. John's further in the hole at 12-0. Again, Carnesecca was forced to call timeout.

Sophomore center Bill Wennington finally put his squad on the scoreboard with a foul line jumper with 15:56 to play. The Redmen made the game somewhat interesting, pulling within two at 14-12, but Villanova thoroughly controlled first half play by shooting a searing 69 percent from the floor.

Behind Stewart Granger's ten points, Dwayne McClain's eight and John Pinone's seven, the Wildcats took to the locker room sporting a 39-29 lead.

"We were playing the first half on a seven-second clock," said Carnesecca, "and don't ask me why, but everything was rush, rush, rush." When asked of his words of wisdom in readying his troops for second half play, he replied, "I said, 'I think you guys can play a little better than that.' Let's leave it at that."

As well as Villanova played in the first half, St. John's did in the second. With the zany Madison Square Garden sellout crowd of 19,591 coming to life, senior leaper David Russell canned a baseline jumper and shook the cheap seats with two, vengeful thunderslams.

Nova was dealt a serious blow when, with 15:07 to play, sophomore Gary McLain severely injured his ankle. McLain, who had played the point very effectively, was forced to leave the game.

Capitalizing on the Wildcats' misfortunes, the Redmen outscored Villanova 18-7, and took their first lead of the ball game at 47-46. A long range bomb by tournament M.V.P. Chris Mullin put it at 49-46, and Coach Rollie Massimino called his first timeout of the game with 12 and a half minutes to play.

The Redmen, however, were not going to pass up the chance to add to their ever-growing collection of scalps. With Billy Goodwin (two of ten in the first half) finding his range, St. John's continued the aforementioned 35-15 onslaught and upped its lead to 64-54 with 6:43 left in action. With 2:34 left, the St. John's cheerleaders unraveled a "Nova, it's Over" sign at midcourt, and over it was.

Villanova Nips UConn

By STEPHEN FALLON

Last Thursday in the opening round of the Big East Tournament at Madison Square Garden in New York, the Villanova Wildcats edged a tenacious Connecticut Huskie team, 69-68.

The victory enabled the Wildcats to advance to the semi-finals on Friday against St.John's, which had defeated Pittsburgh 64-53 earlier in the day.

Connecticut played, in the words of Villanova coach Rollie Massimino, "inspired basketball," in keeping the outcome in doubt throughout. Huskie coach Dom Perno used a trio of guards to provide the offensive punch; junior Karl Hobbs led the team with 19 points, hitting 8 of 12 from the field before bowing out with five fouls. Freshman sensation Earl Kelley scored 18 and Vern Giscombe added eight points, most on knifing moves through the lane.

In the Big East conference, which prides itself on extreme competitiveness, the Villanova-UConn game was nothing new. Just because the Wildcats were 12-4 in the league while the Huskies were only 5-1 and Villanova had already defeated UConn twice, Connecticut refused to be intimidated.

The Huskies took the initial lead in the game and held an advantage which shifted from one to three points as the teams traded baskets in the early going. But layups by Mike Mulquin and Stewart Granger, followed by six quick points by Dwayne McClain, put the Cats up 24-17 with 8:21 in the half.

The lead climbed to nine and it appeared as if the game would turn into a rout, but UConn refused to wilt and used the 18 combined points from Kelley and Hobbs to cut the lead to 34-29 at intermission.

The opening minutes of the second half saw Villanova nursing a comfortable working margin of 6 to 8 points. But then the UConn guards began their shooting fireworks. Giscombe and Hobbs hit to cut the lead to 44-22, and a Hobbs free throw made it a one point game with 12:05 remaining.

The remainder of the game saw both teams repeatedly answering each other's challenges and the neutral members of the crowd began to cheer for the underdog Huskies as they saw the possibility of a major upset.

With 2:15 showing on the clock, Bruce Kuczenski stole the ball and passed to Hobbs who laid it in to tie the score at 62-62. The Wildcats remained unflustered and calmly came down court where Gary McLain went right to the Wildcats' man-for-the-clutch, John Pinone. Pinone responded, as he has so often, with a short hook, hitting the shot and drawing a foul. The converted free throw gave the Cats some breathing room at 65-62.

Gary McLain explained, "When the game is tight you have to go to your bread and butter, and our inside people, John and Eddie, are very good."

UConn then was forced to send Villanova to the foul line as Massimino spread the floor with the four corners. Pinone and Granger shot just well enough (4 of 7) from the line to preserve the hard fought victory, 69-68.

After the game Pinone dismissed the notion that the Cats had taken the Huskies lightly. "We were not overconfident at all. We knew it wasn't going to be easy . . . they just played very well," said Pinone.

The Wildcats were paced by Pinone and McClain, both of whom scored 18 points, and Granger, who added 15, mostly on long jumpers. Ed Pinckney chipped in 10 points and 14 rebounds while McLain handed out 9 assists.

Shane Sees 'Above Average' Season for Cats

By ROBERT G. KELLY

The 1983 Villanova baseball team will play its home games on a new playing field located beside St. Mary's. Just as this new field, built from scratch over the winter, is a big improvement over the old diamond behind the Field House, the 1983 Villanova Wildcats should be a vastly better ball club than last year.

Optimism abounds in the clubhouse from both players and coaches. Starting second baseman Ray Paparella, a junior from Blakeley Heights, PA, claimed, "We have a solid team defensively and if we can play consistently at the plate, we should do well."

Head Coach Larry Shane, who seemed to echo Paparella's feelings, said, "I am very optimistic about this season. I feel that we have the ability as shown by the speed and versatility at all positions. I expect us to have a .500 or better season in 1983."

Coach Shane stressed the importance of consistency at the plate. He feels that the bulk of offensive production has to come from players such as Jerry Holtz, Jimmy White, Rick Faggioni, Dan Mostardi and John Corbin. Holtz was very impressive last season when he batted .353, slammed 9 home runs and collected a team-leading 27 RBIs. Corbin was also an offensive force last season when he batted .338 with a team-leading 40 hits.

Defensively, the team has no holes. The infield includes Mike Craig at first base, Ray Paparella at second, Gerry Holtz at shortstop and Rick Faggioni at third base.

In addition to his almost flawless play at second base, Paparella batted a sturdy .337 last season. The catching spot will be filled by a freshman from Springfield, PA, James Kane. The defensive unit is completed by the talented trio of Corbin, Mostardi and White in the outfield.

The Wildcats are a very young squad made up of six freshmen, nine sophomores, six juniors and only two seniors — co-captain and pitcher Don Casey and first baseman Mike Craig.

Herein lies the only possible weakness of this club according to Shane who commented, "Inexperience is what might hurt us, but we have a young, talented ball club which proved to me in the fall that they can play good competitive Division I baseball."

Shane noted that the inexperience is mainly found in his pitching staff, which is made up of freshmen Scott Brassington, Russell Gianforcaro and Steve Zollner.

Although the pitching staff is young, sophomores Chris Schurr and Richie Moore seemed to overcome the inexperience factor very well last season. Schurr, a lefty from Cherry Hill, NJ,, was the winningest pitcher on the staff last year with a 3-0 record and one save, while Moore, also a southpaw, threw an impressive seven inning game against the St. Joe's Hawks as he blanked them 7-0.

As a baseball team takes to the diamond, questions invariably arise as to how it will perform in the season. Projections and predictions are usually based on talent and experience.

But another indicator which cannot be overlooked, especially in regard to this team, is moments from the previous season.

At the end of last season Villanova won three out of its last five games, the most impressive of which was a decisive 7-0 whitewashing of the powerful St. Joe's Hawks. If this team can carry over the type of performance displayed at the end of last season, they could fulfill their early feelings of optimism in this 1983 season.

GETTING READY: Members of the Villanova baseball team prepare for a pre-season workout.

Women Take Honors

After the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships last weekend in Pontiac, Michigan, the women's track team returned to Villanova with four 1983 All-Americans.

In Division I competition at the Silverdome, the Wildcat rookies successfully impressed the field of highly competitive runners.

The two mile relay team of Veronica McIntosh, Vickie Brown, Patty Bradley and Joanne Kehs finished runner-up to Wisconsin. With their time of 8:55.34, the Wildcats placed a mere 1.66 seconds behind first place. All four Wildcats gained All-American honors.

The Wildcat team culminated their successful indoor season with a sixteenth place finish in the field of 43 NCAA teams.

Villanova's two-mile relay team.

Collegiate records aren't broken every day, so this week's Bud Athlete award is given to the men's two-mile relay team for their record-shattering performance last weekend in the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

The team of senior Mike England, juniors John Borgese and Marcus O'Sullivan, and freshman John Keyworth set a new national collegiate record under fully automatic timing in the Silverdome in Pontiac, Michigan, with a winning time of 7:21.90. The Wildcats edged out Arizona State, which finished second with a time of 7:23.37. The old record of 7:22.6 belonged to Villanova and was set last year.

It was the first time that this combination of runners competed in this relay. Coach Charlie Jenkins had to shuffle his team due to the scheduling of the other races in the meet.

Coach Jenkins couldn't have been happier with his team's performance. "I was ecstatic," he said. He was also pleased with the individual performances because both Borgese and England have come back from injuries.

"I felt that this 2-mile relay performance was super in relation to the competition and also because of the individual legs that were run," commented Jenkins.

Borgese led off with a time of 1:52.99, Keyworth ran the second leg in 1:50.99 and the third and anchor legs were run in 1:48.96 by England and O'Sullivan, respectively.

Icecats Top Drexel; In Finals

By TOM KOLON

The Villanova Icecats advanced to the finals of the MACHC playoffs for the fifth time in a row by defeating Drexel University 3-2, last Saturday at the Havertown Skatium.

In a match never deficient in fast-paced action, captain Frank Segreto opened the scoring midway through the second period after a scoreless, nip-and-tuck one half of play. Segreto picked up a loose puck, skated through the Dragons' defenders and faked out the goalie to slide the puck past his right side.

The next Cats' line forced a faceoff deep in the Drexel end. Nova won the puck which Jamie Huston passed forward to Mark LaFond in the corner. He then dumped it to John Canuso in the crease who quickly slipped it past the keeper for the second Icecats' goal.

Seconds later, LaFond received a pass from Canuso and drilled it into the nets from his knees to boost Villanova to a 3-0 lead in a matter of 36 seconds.

Nova appeared to have the game well in hand as they entered the final period pumped up with a three-goal lead. However, penalties hurt Nova as they often found themselves down a man. Within 2 minutes of the faceoff, Drexel scored their first goal while working on a power play.

Both teams continued to skate hard and press toward the nets at each end. Goalie Fred Christie came up with some great plays and grabbed 22 saves on the afternoon. Finally, with only 2:16 left to play and three Nova men in the penalty box, Drexel capitalized on the opportunity and was able to pull within a goal. The Cats hung tough though and were able to kill off the disadvantage to take a 3-2 victory into the conference finals.

Coach Skip Probst commended the skating of the Icecats, who outshot Drexel 30-24. Probst also had nothing but high praise for the performance of netminder Christie. "He has played well all year and it's really a disgrace that he placed last in the league's all-star voting. He held the lowest goals against average in the league and also the highest save ratio. This just shows that the other coaches weren't paying attention to his outstanding play."

This weekend the Icecats meet Delaware for the Hannigan Cup.

Ruggers

The Villanova rugby team opened up the 1983 spring season in fine fashion by knocking off top-ranked Lehigh University, 13-10, last weekend.

Early in the match Nova went out on top, 3-0, after Mark West scored a penalty kick. Lehigh fought back and by the end of the first half was in the driver's seat, 10-3.

But Villanova turned that around after halftime. West scored again to make it 10-9 with only seven minutes remaining.

When club president Fred Murphy intercepted a pass and ran forty yards for a goal, Nova took the lead for good.

"Part of the reason for our victory was our practicing early, and our coach, George Betzler," said co-captain Mike Scalzo. "Coach Betzler is one of the top coaches in the country, coaching the national team — U.S.A. Eagles. He has worked with us since last fall and a definite improvement can be seen."

Alabama (20-11)

A season of grueling battles in the rugged Southeastern Conference has prepared the Crimson Tide well for this year's NCAA Tournament. While running up a 20-11 record over the course of the season, the Tide only managed to salvage three wins in 11 conference games. An important statistic which should aid the 'Bama squad in the post-season play is their 6-1 mark on neutral courts.

Leading the Crimson Tide attack are sophomores Ennis Whtely and Bobby Lee Hurt, both with 15.4 points per game. Hurt also led the team in rebounding with an 8.8 average. Helping Hurt out under the boards is six-foot-eight forward Terry Williams who took down 4.8 rebounds per game.

Last season the Tide played well in the NCAA Tournament but fell to eventual champion North Carolina in the East Regional semi-final round. Gone from that team however are Eddie Phillips (now with the N.B.A. New Jersey Nets) and Phillip Lockett. Unfortunately for 'Bama they took their combined 24 points and 16 rebounds with them.

The Tide squeaked into this year's NCAA field mainly on the strength of their impressive SEC Tournament showing.

Rollie Massimino

Villanova (22-7)

When the Villanova Wildcats start off in search of Albuquerque tommorow, they will only be trying to add to what has been a season full of highlights.

Highlight Number One: the Cabrillo Classic in San Diego, where the Cats took the crown after defeating Tulsa and San Diego State.

Highlight Number Two: One month ago, when Nova dug out of a 21-inch blizzard and snowballed then number-one North Carolina, 56-53.

Highlight Number Three: The Cats, Big East Conference co-champions. Villanova lost only four of 16 conference matchups to share top honors with St. John's and Boston College.

Addendum: Villanova, Big 5 champions after a convincing 70-62 victory over St. Joe's at the Spectrum late last month.

Highlight Number Four: John Pinone. In his last year as a Wildcat, the six-foot-eight center averaged 16.7 points per game and had an 83.5 free throw percentage in leading the Cats to a 22-7 mark.

But right now, put all those accomplishments on the back-burner. It's tournament time — the NCAAs, where one loss sends you packing.

Pat Foster

Lamar (22-7)

The Cardinals of Lamar University are no strangers to NCAA Tournament play. In 1979, they bumped off nationally ranked Detroit, 95-87, in the Midwest Regional before bowing to eventual champion Michigan State.

In 1980, Lamar made it all the way to the Final 16, including a big upset over fifth-ranked Oregon State along the way. Finally, in '81, they shocked the Missouri Tigers 71-67, before getting tagged by Final Four participant Louisiana State.

Head Coach Pat Foster has seen little but success in his three years at Lamar, sporting a glittering 69-19 record for a .780 winning percentage.

This year's 22-7 squad is led by 6-5 forward Tom Sewell who averages 18.7 points per game. Kenneth Perkins, a 6-6 forward, and Brian Kellybrew, a 6-5 guard, are the only other starters in double figures at 11.8 and 11.4 p.p.g., respectively.

Key rebounders are Perkins, who takes down a team-high seven a game, and 6-9 center Randy Gray, who pulls in 6.9 a game. The floor general is slick 6-2 Lamont Robinson, an exceptional passer who dishes off four assists per contest.

AAUP Examines 'Family Fighting'

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO and LEONARD J. LaBARTH

"I'm upset with the fighting in the family. It's been torn apart by the April 14, 1981 decision. I see it every day on campus," said Ed Rideout, director of the Alumni Annual Fund, referring to the Board of Trustees controversial decision to drop football.

The Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) sponsored an open forum Monday on what the faculty's position should be concerning the possible restoration of football.

Following three-minute opening statements by the panel of six representing various segments of the Villanova community, questions were raised by the audience and the panel members themselves.

Rideout, a Villanova graduate and staff member, opened the forum by explaining the decline in alumni support following the discontinuation of football.

"Alumni contributions have been drastically affected," Rideout stated. "The General Alumni Association is at odds with the administration. They plan to raise funds on their own. If this happens, the University can expect a loss of revenue." Rideout also cited the decline in the growth of the number of contributors, not in the number of dollars received.

"Actually, more dollars have been received in the Annual Alumni Fund," Rideout explained. "In 1980-81, we experienced a 40.4 percent growth rate, in 1981-82, a 20.2 percent growth rate. My office is aware of a large number of donors who were substantial and consistent givers prior to April 1981 who have not given since."

"I'm a little troubled with the faculty contributing to the divisiveness by seeing it as an issue taking money out of their pockets."
— Dr. Joseph DesJardins

"We need to place football in its proper perspective... not providing a farm club mentality for professional leagues or a series of athletic mercenaries."
— Dr. Charles Cherry

According to Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant to the vice president for academic affairs, "The Board of Trustees' April 14, 1981 decision was correct, prudent and long overdue. The limited benefits of a major football program in no way compensated for the financial losses which in the last two years amounted to a net cost of more than $600,000.

"At the same time, I believe and have believed that the Board should immediately return football at the Division III level," Cherry stated. "Such a step might alleviate the earlier ill-feeling generated by the earlier decision and diminish some of the bitterness which has harmfully affected all concerned."

Dr. Joseph DesJardins, who chaired the Senate subcommittee on the restoration of football, highlighted several of the subcommittee's findings.

"Football has always lost money at Villanova," said DesJardins. "Realistically, the issue is not whether football might generate profits, but whether it is worth the cost." DesJardins argued the point that football tuition scholarships must be counted as a legitimate expense. He suggested restoration of football at a Division IAA level with scholarships based on need, "like with the Ivy League schools."

"I've really been troubled by the seriousness and the depth of the animosity of all parties involved. It's really troubled me how devisive this has become," DesJardins said. "I'm a little troubled with the faculty contributing to the divisiveness by seeing it as an issue taking money out of their pockets.

I'm pleading to you not to narrow down your interests to a very selfish dollars and cents issue," commented DesJardins.

Warren Richardson, chairman of the communications department and former chairman of the University Senate, who in the past defended the Board's decision to drop football told the audience that he "loved the sport."

"However, we can't afford the luxury," Richardson claimed. "I can't believe the estimates are reliable. We can't afford to relive the past and provide a background setting for tailgate parties."

"We need to practice fiscal restraint," continued Richardson. "The University is staggering under a $25 million debt. We need to keep our priorities. We exist to educate students. Let's do it as well as we can."

Student Body President Paul Tufano stated that the students want football back at Villanova because it has benefits to offer to everyone and "because it can work."

"Football is a great opportunity for publicity," Tufano claimed. "In the past, football has meant Villanova being mentioned in tens of thousands of lines of print, on television, and in Sports Illustrated. Villanova needs to reach more people across the nation to get them to come here.

"No one advocates a program that in any way affects or jeopardizes the academic mission of the school," said Tufano.

Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics, advocated a program of football scholarships based on individual need, with major financial support coming from student, alumni and friends.

"Such a program at the Division IAA level could compete with the schools already at that level, and be compatible with the school's standards and answer the Board's December 1982 resolution," said Aceto. "In order to verify the acceptability of this type program, inquiries were made, and we received positive reactions from other schools."

Cherry responded that Villanova needs to place football "in its proper perspective — as an extra curricular activity — not providing a farm club mentality for professional leagues or a series of athletic mercenaries."

"I'm very upset about Dr. Cherry's remarks," stated Bob Capone,

Senate Approves '83 Budget

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

A composition of opinions from administrative and Senate committee members covered the proposed budget at the March 18 Senate meeting. The Senate approved the administrative committee budget for 1983 after it was discussed at the past two meetings.

"Because of a cross nature," Tom Janisch, engineering Senator, saw "inadequacies" in the budget allocation. "Off campus students are paying a portion for the bond issue, but the people living on campus are not only paying tuition but also paying the room and board fee, also financed in the bond issue. To an extent they are paying twice for the same thing," said Janisch.

Sentor Alvin Clay clarified the administration's budget claiming that tuition, room and board, contributions and such all go into the whole budget to be distributed as needed, associating the cost with specific sources.

The bond issue has increased all areas in the budget three percent, according to the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of academic affairs.

Senator Thomas Greene proposed an amendment to make up for the 15 percent loss the faculty pay took back in 1970. Greene suggested that the tuition from the excess number of target freshman, set at 1,700, which in the past was left as a cushion in the University Budget to apply anywhere, be dedicated to faculty salaries and then to other areas in need.

The amendment was defeated after Clay pointed out that faculty salary is already included in the budget and with additional freshmen, the extra tuition money needs to be directed for the additional staff needed to be hired to provide adequate instructional staff to give proper education

Unexpected maintenance repair is also taken from the excess dollars "and the University is already far behind in maintenance and clearing for office space and classrooms," according to Gallen.

Dr. Richard Neville, chairman of Rules and Review Committee, presented the motion to replace the chairman of the Faculty Assembly title with the chairman of the Council. The resolution passed with the chairman to be elected by the council, who are elected by the faculty.

Tufano announced Student Government Elections will be postponed until April 14, after Easter break.

If the Wildcats should get into the Final Four this weekend, the Student Government will have a trip set up to go to Albuquerque. There are two packages, a "Budget" and a "Luxury." The spaces in both are limited. A $25 deposit should be in by today in order to be assured a spot. If the Cats win both games, the Student Government Office will be open early Monday morning to receive full payments for the trip. They must be in by 3 p.m. For additional info., stop in the Student Government Office, 204 Dougherty Hall or call 645-7203.

Alley Cat Hoops

For those wishing to enter a team in the third annual Alley Cat Basketball Tournament, registration forms will be available in the dean of students' office. The deadline for sign-up will be Monday, March 28, at 5:00 p.m. Play will begin the first day after the Easter break with the finals scheduled for April 19.

Snow Make-Up Day

April 28 — currently scheduled as a reading day — will be a make-up snow day for MWF classes since the two days cancelled because of snow were a Monday and Friday.

Diva

On March 27 and 28, the Villanova Cultural Film Series will present the award-winning French film "DIVA." This unique romantic thriller will be shown Sunday at 3:30 and 7 p.m. and Monday at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Admission for the series is $1.50 for students and senior citizens and $3 for the general public. For more information please call 645-7262.

"DIVA" is a remarkably fresh and original work that is at the forefront of a new kind of French New Wave. At the heart of "Diva" is a young opera fan whose infatuation with a beautiful singer entangles him in a web of murder, intrigue, and passion. The Philadelphia soprano, Wilhemenia Fernandez, plays the title role. This 1982 film has been critically acclaimed as one of the finest films from France in recent years.

"DIVA' is the seventh film in the Cultural Films Main Series entitled Gender-/Genres. The series continues on Sunday and Monday evenings through April 25.

Senior's Coffeehouse

Any seniors interested in performing in a coffeehouse during Spring Fever Week, April 17, please contact either Chris Walter or Maura Grimes in the Union Office by April 6.

Library Hours

The library hours for the week of Easter Vacation will be as follows: Wednesday, March 30 from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Thursday, March 31 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Friday through Monday, April 1-4: closed.

Regular schedule will resume on Tuesday, April 5.

Easter Egg Hunt

The Panhel and I.F.C. will sponsor an Easter egg hunt on March 26 at 10:30 a.m., free for everyone to attend. All are welcome. Children eight-years-old and under can enter. Prizes! Rain date is March 27 at 1:30 p.m.

Gamma Phi Dinner

There will be a dinner for members of Gamma Phi. Dance tickets will be sold on March 29 at 12:45 p.m. in 110 Bartley.

Communication Arts Course

Do you want to know how John Kennedy created the Cuban missile crisis; how Richard Nixon polarized the nation by identifying the silent majority; why Jimmy Carter failed to appear firm during the Iranian hostage situation; or how Ronald Reagan persuaded Congress to adopt his economic recovery program in 1981?

Get these and answers to other questions in "Presidential Rhetoric," a new course being offered in the fall by the communication arts department. This course will examine how contemporary presidents (Kennedy-Reagan) gain, maintain or lose power through public rhetoric.

Starting Salaries Surveyed

By CAROLYN MILLER

The technical majors, such as science, engineering or business, offer higher starting salaries than the more general majors, such as the arts or humanities. This is one of the findings from a survey conducted by Paul Andrews, Chris Kenney and Mary Robillard in Dr. John Stehle's "Economics Senior Seminar" class.

The survey, titled "An Analysis of Investments in Human Capital," indicates that making an individual's skills and services more valuable by a college education, promote higher starting salaries than if no college education is obtained.

This survey indicates that a person's level of education, and specifically the major area of study, measures his market value and will have a direct effect on the level of future earnings, or the rate of return on the human investment.

As the chart shows, the employment market values those students specializing in engineering over those specializing in English. Stehle, assistant professor of Economics, wanted students to realize that "there are significant differences in starting salaries for different areas of specialization."

Stehle further explained that, "many students stay away from a more difficult major because it can be associated with a low grade point average (GPA). However, employers are more concerned with the academic training received, as opposed to a high GPA."

According to Stehle, a college degree for its own sake is not the main issue. "What is important in determining starting salary is the major area of concentration. In selecting a major, a student must be interested in the particular area chosen, but must also be realistic to the monetary consequences of the decision."

In most cases, the data from the survey indicates that the lower averages GPA's are matched with the higher national average starting salaries. This supports the idea that employers are not solely interested in a high GPA. The survey also finds that it takes a longer period of time for the general majors to find jobs upon graduation, than for the technical majors.

An estimated Villanova average starting salary for each major was also included in the survey. These estimates were based on the opinions of each department, of what their 1982 graduates' starting salaries were. Some of the estimates were higher than the national average and some were lower.

Overall, Villanova was found to be competitive with the national average, but the student surveyors feel that "a more extensive effort on the part of each undergraduate department is needed in charting the salaries of the graduates over several years in order to advise prospective students in terms of future earnings."

Regarding Villanova's general majors, Stehle feels that, "liberal arts majors go to graduate school to raise their standard of living." The results of the survey show that a significant amount of these majors advance to higher levels of education, whereas most of the technical majors do not.

"Villanova students have recognized the fact that a technical degree is a better qualification for employment upon graduation," stated Stehle. Realizing this, Stehle felt that students "are leaving the liberal arts areas and entering into the more technical areas of study."

One other way that liberal arts students are getting a competitive edge is by "acquiring a minor in business or computer science," said Stehle, who felt this is helpful. "Having some training in a technical area is better than none at all," he said

War Issues Discussed

By JACK McHUGH

Villanova's Political Union and Political Science Honor Society jointly sponsored a program last week featuring the U.S. Army War College on national and international security isues.

The meeting was held in seminar form with five current students in the U.S. Army War College and their moderator, Lt. Colonel David Hansen, who was a graduate of last year's class.

"The idea behind these meetings," according to Hansen, "is to share ideas in a candid exchange of information with students and faculty members in an academic environment."

The first speaker introduced was Colonel Roy Alcala, who received most of the questions because he dealt with national security and nuclear weapons issues. Alcala began the discussion by touching on four principles of national security. He felt that our national security policy must be based on "sound moral principles . . . a policy of no first use force."

"Secondly," explained Alcala, "we must always be prepared."

Alcala's third point was that there are no "free lunches. We must not expect either side to unilaterally give up what it considers an advantage."

And finally, Alcala said, "We must remember the U.S. is not the world. We must have friends and allies with alliances for mutual benefit."

The second person introduced, Colonel Dean Owen who dealt in training, deployment and equipment, received many questions mostly concerning equipment and weapons systems. In Owen's view, "The army is relatively small based in its mission."

Next introduced was Colonel Henry Bacas whose issues of specialization were domestic economics, military legalistic mobilization and advanced weapons development. Bacas felt that the U.S. had fallen behind the Soviets in military spending preparedness, that the U.S. had not spent as much as before the 1960's, whereas the Soviets had "quadrupled" these expenditures. For these reasons he feels that the defense increases were justified.

The primary area of focus for Colonel Charles Hood was people. Hood was interested in the people who comprise the army and elaborated on the differences between active and reserve elements. The reserves constitute one-third of the combat power but two-thirds of the support elements. These elements consist of the maintenance people, supply people, and "most importantly" the medical people.

Reviews Approved

By DAVID POMA

The Villanova University Senate Budget Committee voted that no specially allocated University funds were needed for academic review programs.

According to the Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the college of arts and sciences, the only time funds are needed to review programs is in the case of the graduate school, where an outside consultant is occasionally hired to make recommendations. However, only minimal funds are used for this.

O'Malley said, "Actually, academic program evaluation is done automatically and internally, so there really is no need for additional money. The University's academic departments do this in their own process. In fact, just in publishing the course bulletin, faculty members go over courses." He added that unsuccessful courses are purged and that the faculty might add courses that they feel are advantageous to students.

O'Malley believes that in Villanova's case, the course evaluations that are given occasionally are also helpful in determining the success or failure of a course or professor. He said, "These evaluations are taken very seriously." Generally, they are done every third semester, so that information is current. He added that "not much can be done about inherently boring courses. Courses which by nature are unexciting are as much burden for professors as they are for students." He thinks that students should look upon possibly unattractive required courses as relevant to today's world.

In addition to academic review of courses and curriculum at Villanova, O'Malley explained the general procedure for reviewing faculty. Once a full-time faculty member is hired, he begins a six-year attempt to earn tenure, which O'Malley defines as "a status which assures a faculty member of permanence in his position and ensures academic freedom."

Each year for the first six years of employment, there is a cumulative review of the instructor by his department chairman. "Over that period of six years," O'Malley said, "community service, publications, and student response is constantly reviewed. In the sixth year, tenure is considered, but not necessarily awarded. It might sound simple, but for the non-tenured faculty member, it is a very long and rigorous process."

O'Malley believes that Villanova's academic programs have always been solid. He cited the example that during the early 1970's, Harvard University liberalized its curriculum and its policies regarding electives to reflect a generally more liberal society. He commented, "Back then, almost every course you could take at Harvard was an elective. There were practically no requirements. During the last few years, students and teachers became very dissatisfied."

As a result, Harvard conducted an exhaustive study of its academic policies and programs. O'Malley added that they have gone away from an elective oriented program to one that includes more required courses. He said that Villanova had maintained a liberal arts program with required courses through those years.

Tufano Reviews His Term's Image

By JAMES H. DELORENZO

"The student government has a much better image — the role of the resident is taken more seriously and has greater credibility," stated Student Body President Paul Tufano. "Students are more aware of who we are and what the issues are."

Tufano was elected student body president in April, 1982. At the time of his election, Tufano said he hoped to make Villanova's student government "a hard-working, representative body."

"I feel we (the student government) have been working for more realistic goals. We've been sensitive to current student issues, not pie-in-the-sky ideals," Tufano said. "Why waste time on issues that won't be accomplished, when we can see benefits now and in the future fairly well?

"The main problem, I felt at the time of my election, was the image and role of the student government," claimed Tufano. "The student government has a responsibility to keep the students informed of their actions. Last year's (1981-82) student government was a failure. They were isolated from the students, not part of the flow.

"I feel we've achieved an image, but more needs to be done in the same spirit by the next student government. The high priority for the future is to establish credibility."

As to why he was elected, Tufano feels that it was his previous experience as a member of the University Senate. "I took advantage of that expereiance. Behind the scenes, I know how the government system worked from being on the Senate. Also the members of the Senate knew what to expect of me," Tufano added, "and I knew what to expect of them.

"A lot of people in this year's government dedicated a lot of time to the Senate committees, working assigned office hours. In the past," continued Tufano, "people in the student government were inaccessible, but this year, everyone has fulfilled their commitments by getting involved."

Tufano cited vice presidents Andy Guarino and Mike Ryan, along with executive vice president Jerry Dempsey for their past year's work. Guarino "was in charge of publicity, and got us supplements in the Villanovan, while Mike (Ryan) was in charge of special problems like the drainage problem on Ithan Avenue. Jerry Dempsey coordinated all of our activities," said Tufano, "and helped me in basic day-to-day operations."

"Basically, they've done a lot," Tufano added. "We changed our constitution to give the vice presidents more responsibility. I think future presidents will be more careful in who they choose as vice presidents."

One of the major issues of his term, Tufano feels, was the Board of Trustees 1981 decision to discontinue Villanova's football program. In November, the student government surveyed the student body on the question, "Would you support a $35 mandatory fee which would reinstate football . . . and provide home game tickets to all students?"

Of the 4,309 students polled, 96 percent voted to support the proposal. "With the results of the survey, I was able to directly address the Board on a controversial issue," Tufano said. "They (the Board) responded based on our work. The board listened and acted, which did a lot for the students and the student government.

"It was quite a controversial issue, but it was managed responsibly and effectively," Tufano stated. "It had the best possible resolution, and established greater communication between the students and administration. I feel the football survey was a major success in the way it was handled."

However, Tufano was "disappointed" with the Senate debate on football later that month. "The athletic advisory committee did a good job in presenting the facts, but the Senate got off the track. The Board said it would look at football not at all the athletic programs. The Board's committee is a good idea," commented Tufano. "The Board handled it quite well, in forming a committee to look at just football.

"But we shouldn't drag our feet," Tufano added. "The students, alumni, and a proposed conference want us to have football. I feel the football issue will be re-

Faculty Divided On Football Issue

A sparse crowd of students, faculty, administrators and alumni attended Monday's meeting of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) that was designed to educate the faculty on the issue of the possible restoration of football at Villanova and provide information that will allow the faculty to vote intelligently on the issue.

New information was not expected to be presented at this gathering; only previously acknowledged facts were to be shared. However, some panel members revealed interesting information that deserves mention: the growth rate for the Alumni Annual Fund dropped fifty percent the year after football was dropped, and the Board of Trustees is seriously considering restoration at the Division IAA level with no awarding of athletic scholarships. In addition, the panelists publicly aired their own personal feelings about Villanova football which invited criticism from the audience. It is apparent that the faculty have chosen sides in the issue: Those who pledge their continual support for the original decision to drop the sport and those who are adamant in securing the restoration at some level.

Villanova Alumni Director Robert Capone delivered the most passionate and eloquent speech to date on the football issue. He told the faculty that "he was tired of being demeaned" and that he and other former football players were tired of being referred to as being anything less than students at Villanova.

Villanova has demeaned, embarrassed and insulted the former Villanova football players, the alumni of Villanova, as well as other University athletes referred to as "athletic mercenaries."

As the AAUP meeting exemplified, there is a serious division among the University constituency that may grow deeper if the issue isn't solved soon. The AAUP has provided the most important vehicle of communication and information since football was discontinued nearly two years ago. They have provided not only the faculty but the entire Villanova community with necessary facts and personal opinions that must be considered in any decision regarding Villanova football.

Bridge, Tunnel Still Dangers

Members of the Villanova community who require the use of the pedestrian tunnel under the railroad tracks were placed into a dangerous situation earlier this week. Following the heavy rains which caused flash flooding during Monday, the tunnel, which has long had a drainage problem, filled with nearly a foot of water. At the very least, the flooding made the tunnel's passage a major inconvenience.

What was really dangerous about the situation, though, was that students who had morning classes were forced to cross the tracks rather than get drenched in the tunnel. Nobody needs enlightening on the hazards of crossing the tracks.

During the course of the day, a police officer from Radnor Township who was stationed at the tracks, prevented all persons from either crossing the tracks or swimming through the tunnel. Instead, he instructed them to get to their desired destination by crossing the ever-perilous Route 320 bridge, which is akin to taking cyanide if one happens to be a pedestrian. And therein lies the problem.

In order to protect those affected from one danger zone, essentially, they were sent to another, for the Route 320 bridge has little, if any, room for pedestrian crossing. The bridge is hazardous enough when two cars cross over it simultaneously, let alone when two cars and several pedestrians are attempting to pass over it on a rainy, foggy day.

Eventually, the water from the submerged tunnel was pumped out and people could again pass through it. But what is especially frightening and disturbing is the fact that the people in the community were subjected to an extremely dangerous condition for far too long.

License Shouldn't Be Blocked

To the Editor:

It was with deep regret that I read of Villanova's administrations' attempt to block the acquisition by Campus Corner of a retail malt liquor license. As quoted in the article, a take-out store is "not compatible with the moral position of Villanova." Well, Rev. John McKenzie, what exactly is this "moral position" of Villanova University? Does it include the wholesale expulsion of upperclassman through the housing lottery when Villanova is fully aware there is not adequate off-campus housing? Does it include the fact that Villanova had bought and intended to use a liquor license of its own? Does it include the dropping of a varsity sport through the use of Machiavellian actions? Does it include the raising of tuition 10-11 percent when the rate of inflation is less than 4 percent and financial aid is cut? I feel I do not need to go further, but clearly these abovementioned actions do not seem "moral" to me.

An additional thought Fr. McKenzie, it seems to come as a surprise to the administration of Villanova about the lack of this school's endowment. Well, Fr. McKenzie, maybe if the administration treated their students with some maturity and respect and provided an adequate social life, maybe, just maybe, we would be a little more generous in our financial offerings when we are alumni.

War in El Salvador: Another Vietnam

The operation calls for 10,000 or more troops to saturate rebel-occupied areas and exterminate the guerillas — anyone who opposes government policy. After these search and destroy missions have been carried out, the government will rebuild the cities and towns leveled by the fighting through public works programs. Sound familiar? It should. The plan, code name CORDS, was employed during the Vietnam War.

But this is not Vietnam, it is El Salvador, March 1983. The latest Reagan proposal: $298 million in military and economic aid to the Central America region as well as an increase in the number of military advisors in El Salvador. The parallels are frightening.

Where is the Reagan policy leading us? The consensus reached at last week's Central America conference was this: if the Reagan Administration seeks to find a peaceful, democratic solution to the Central America problem, discourage Soviet influence in the region and prevent an Americanized regional war, the present policy fails on all three points. In fact, the policy will cause countless people to suffer unnecessarily, force countries seeking change from repressive governments to look towards the Soviets for aid, and lead inevitably to another Vietnam.

The administration's policy, as articulated by John Hamilton from the State Department, is that the problems in Central America represent an east-west conflict — that is, the Russians are coming and we must stop them at all costs. This view is, of course, absurd. In fact, everytime someone challenges the administration to provide evidence to support its view, it cannot do so. However, as absurd as this position is, it is extremely dangerous. It literally gives a license to kill.

Ken Sharp, associate professor of political science at Swarthmore College, pointed out there arises some political groups that, although not carbon copies of the United States government, are democratic and have popular support. These groups must be recognized as political forces seeking self-determination. The U.S., instead of acknowledging these groups, labels them and all the opposing forces as communist, inspired by the Soviets.

This is a tragedy. The FDR-FMLN, the united opposition; has been termed "the most democratic organization ever assembled in El Salvador" by Philadelphia Daily News columnist Jack McKinney. Since the FDR-FMLN opposes the repressive Salvadorian government(us), our administration places the FDR-FMLN into the "them" category — Soviet inspired communists — thereby legitimizing their extermination. You can see how this east-west view prevents the possibility of a peaceful, negotiated settlement.

The view of Leonel Gomez, former assistant director of the Salvadorian Institute for Agrarian Reform, was representative of the overwhelming majority's view. The Central America problem is primarily an internal affair. The people of El Salvador are fighting against an incredible corrupt and repressive government being kept alive artificially by our U.S. tax dollars. The government refuses to negotiate with the popular opposition, the FDR-FMLN.

The supporters of the FDR-FMLN insist they would rather die fighting than die starving under the hated oligarchy. We are unconditionally supporting an unjust government which has no hope of ever representing the true aspirations of the Salvadorian people. Vietnam all over again.

It is explicitly stated in the Declaration of Independence that when a government becomes so repressive that it violates its citizens' inalienable rights — the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness . . . it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government. In July 1979 the Sandinistas, joined by almost the entire Nicaraguan population, ousted one of the most oppressive Central American dictatorships, that of the Somoza family of Nicaragua. In an effort to salvage the economy and minimize suffering and loss of life, the Sandinista government embarked on a revolutionary program of social reconstruction and a foreign policy independent of both Moscow and Washington. Rather than encourage these developments, which are supported by the vast majority of the Nicaraguans, the Reagan Administration's Central American strategy aims to cripple or overthrow Nicaragua's Revolutionary Government. Why? What is the U.S. government's objective? Is it stated somewhere that the Declaration of Independence does not apply to citizens in Central America? The Sandinistas only rational alternative was to look elsewhere for aid.

Conclusion: Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala are not national security risks, Reagan is.

The Campus Coalition on Central America, initiated in Jan. 1983, recognizes Reagan's policy towards Central America as dangerous and inhumane. The coalition is dedicated to peace with justice in Central America. The deteriorating situation in Central America, marked by the aggressive hardline no-negotiation U.S. policy and increased military intervention now directly effects every American College student. Do we stand by and ignore the gross human rights violations of the Reagan policy while slipping more clearly into another Vietnam in El Salvador?

The Campus Coalition is made up of a network of students from the Delaware Valley colleges and universities. The emphasis is to educate students on Central America issues and participate in direct action showing our support for peace with justice in the region. The Campus Coalition also stresses the connection between Central America and other issues reflecting the militarism of our society, such as the draft and the Jobs for Peace Campaign.

three-hour tour of a review.

I'm sorry, but the Catalog of Cool really got the mohawk. The book was inked with the idea that what is cool is what is different. It is not a "How To" be cool book, for cool "resembles nothing that has come before — an incomparable image of fresh style." The contents of the book simply showed past variations of that "style." Well, it's time to cut the rap, so back to your McDonald's World, you flopsters.

Career Center Changed

To the Editor:

I read with interest the letter from Mr. George J. Kowals in the Villanovan concerning the Career Development Center and the Alumni office. There are several points in the letter that I want to address.

Since the present staff members of the Career Development Center were not working at Villanova in 1977, I can not evaluate the services offered at that time. I can assure him that his view of the services in 1977 is not accurate today. Our staff works with students in a professional and helpful manner. Instead of leading students to "sell themselves short," we strongly encourage them to set challenging goals in their job search. Through a wide variety of career programs and individual counseling, we assist students from all disciplines in both career decision making and job placement activities. Other office services include video taped practice interviews, presentations to clubs and residence halls and Career Days.

Regarding the need for "alumni guidance of Villanova undergraduates," he should be sure to read the April edition of The Spires. The Career Development Center, in conjunction with the Alumni office, will be seeking alumni interested in allowing students to "job shadow." A student would visit the alumni at his/her workplace to gain firsthand career information. We hope that he will become involved in this program.

I hope these comments are useful to Mr. Kowals. I hope he feels free to stop by our office when he visits his alma mater.

AAUP on Football

Villanova's alumni director. "I'm a 1962 graduate, and was a varsity football player. Alluding to the fact that I'm something less than an academician and that I snuck through here or cheated through here — I resent the attitude, it's prevalent. I'm tired of it. The former athletes, particularly the former football players are tired of it, and I think it's demeaning to those who use it as a criteria. I do not want to be demeaned any longer."

The executive vice president of the Varsity Club, Charlie Johnson, a 1963 graduate, directed his remarks at Cherry. "I'm one of those football mentalities," Johnson said. "I address the same things that Bob Capone said. Do you consider basketball a training ground for the NBA? Is it a meat-grinder like football supposedly was?"

"It's cold out here to the alumni," continued Johnson. "Why don't you get out here and walk around and see it?"

Cherry offered to apologize for his remarks. Johnson asked, "How about a letter of apology to 1,300 former football players?"

Each panelmember summarized his presentation in a closing statement.

According to AAUP President Dr. Joe Betz, ballots will be sent to all the fulltime faculty at Villanova along with extensive minutes from the meeting. The faculty will have a choice of voting against the restoration of football or voting for the restoration at different levels: IAA with 95 scholarships; IAA without any scholarships but financial aid for those with need; level II or level III.

'Genocide' Missed the Point; Should Focus on Issues

To the Editor:

Having spent three years working with the Soviet Jewish Community in Boston, I understand the feeling of outrage expressed by Professors Tich and Shuster in their recent op-ed. I am outraged at the Soviet Union's treatment of Jews also, as I am outraged for many of the world's injustices. But too much of the authors' outrage was in reaction to the Villanova University decision not to attend the Soviet Jewry Council program, and the result was that "Jewish Genocide in U.S.S.R." simply missed the point.

The authors seem not to know just where they are taking us. The headline gives us no clue because the article has nothing at all to do with Jewish genocide in the Soviet Union. It begins with the Soviet Jewry Council which is meeting at the University of Pennsylvania and then does not mention it again until the last paragraph. It recites a concise history of Christian persecutions of Jews in the name of "absolute truth." From this it suggests that "Christians sowed the seed that ripened into the present fruit." This present "fruit" is, presumably, the Soviet Union's cultural and religious persecution of Jews. This persecution is outlined briefly and followed (as if by natural progression) by an indictment of American universities in general for not being responsive enough to the plight of Soviet Jews. In all of this juggling the authors seem to lose sight of the real problem.

I cannot agree that the present "fruit" of Jewish repression in the Soviet Union is the fault of Christianity. The Torah is not the only book which is excoriated by the Soviets. The Holy Bible is banned as well. Nor are synagogues the only forbidden temples. After the Revolution most of the Russian Orthodox Churches were turned into museums (one even an atheist museum) and government buildings. The ones that do remain are filled mostly with foreign tourists and old people — the only ones who need not worry about losing their jobs or their freedom for attending service. Long ago, all the truly devout were sent away to detention camps for their impertinence.

The Soviet Union is built on the doctrine of the so-called Marxism-Leninism, an exclusive ideology which ruthlessly suppresses all ideas that are inconsistent with it. Thus it is not limited to Judaism alone. It affects the Muslims in Soviet Central Asia who are discouraged from practicing the customs of Islam. It affects the citizens of the outlining provinces of Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and Georgia who must learn Russian and will advance in society (i.e. in the Communist Party) only if they surrender their religious and cultural heritage. It affects artists and performers and writers who constantly face the danger of being too expressive or different, a sin which at times has cost the person his job and at times his life. Even today the best literature of the Soviet Union is pointed abroad because the government denounces it. Classics like Pasternak's "Doctor Zhivago" and Solzhenitsyn's "In the First Circle" are forbidden in the Soviet Union and are read only at the risk of severe reprimand.

Thus, it is important to realize the repression of the Jews in the U.S.S.R. cannot be viewed solely as a "Jewish problem" nor should it be treated as such. It is part of a larger problem which accompanies every totalitarian state — no institution can remain which is inconsistent with the State, nor can any idea flourish which is different from that espoused by the State. Judaism, like Christianity, is an institution inconsistent with the principles of the Soviet Union. For this reason it is unlikely that the situation for Judaism will ever improve under the present Soviet structure. As injust as this is, it is a fact we must concede. All the protest of the intellectual community won't change the nature of Soviet Communism.

What we should concentrate on, as an intellectual community, is not how to gain religious and cultural freedom for Soviet Jews (and other repressed Soviet groups) while they remain in the U.S.S.R., but rather how we can secure their release from the constraints of totalitarianism. For to leave the Soviet Union now is becoming harder and harder. For Jews, who are considered to be foreign citizens, it entails a wait of three to five years during which the person will lose his job, be ostracized by former friends and collegues and be harrassed by internal police constantly. If he is not out after five years it usually means he will not receive his exit visa. For non-Jews it is practically impossible. Dissidents and performers will sooner be sent to psychiatric wards or labor camps than be released.

The solution to achieving a freer exit policy for Soviet Jews and dissidents, contrary to the authors' opinion, will not likely be found in moving to "break the silence and speak out." No amount of vocal protest will shake the Soviet Union from their absolute restraint on speech and religion, their belief in the "absolute truth." What the Soviet Union will most likely understand is not pleading words but economic realities. Despite their advances and boisterous claims, the Soviet Union is still an ecnomically backward nation. Its wealth in defense and military areas is not representative of the country as a whole. Each year the United States supplies the Soviet Union with tons of wheat, millions of dollars worth of technology, billion of dollars worth of trade. Economic pressure applied by the U.S. government might weigh more heavily than the most persuasive entreaty. But it would have to be more than the mere empty threats which Soviets have long ignored. It would necessitate cooperation between business and government. Another disastrous wheat crop like the ones of the mid-seventies might provide the opportunity to condition American assistance on certain concessions by the Soviets.

Beyond all of this, there remains one question in my mind which the last sentence of the authors' article raised: should this be a "primary concern" of our universities? Personally, I think it is a very important problem. I am concerned with the plight not only of Soviet Jews but of all people who are persecuted for race, religion or personal beliefs. But the primary concern of the university is education not advocacy. The purpose of university education is to create well-balanced, well-informed graduates who can contribute significantly to society. Of course, this education should include special graduates who can see further than a first paycheck. However, just as a university would not designate which courses of study their students must take, neither should it select certain social causes for mandatory action or concern. With so much oppression, poverty and injustice in the world, who can say our primary concern should not be the proliferation of nuclear arms, the armies of El Salvador . . .

Perhaps the most we can hope to accomplish, as a university, is to have students who are informed enough on social issues and causes to decide where they stand and when they are willing to take a stand.

Non-traditional UC Women Unite

By TIM HANLON

A new organization has been established by the University College to help women get to know each other and to discuss situations that effect them as older students attending college.

Denise McGarry, assistant director of admissions and recruitment for the University College, is responsible for its formation. "The purpose of the club," according to McGarry, "is to bring non-traditional female students together to meet with peers of the same age group." McGarry defines a non-traditional women as one who is 21 or over and did not attend college immediately after high school.

Issues which are discussed include stress management, career planning and financial aid. "These topics are very appropriate and beneficial ones for the women," McGarry said.

"They are not a problem solving organization. It is an opportunity for members to get together, socialize, and perhaps address the needs of relevant situations faced by women in this age group," said McGarry.

There have been four sessions so far. They are divided into day and evening sessions to address both day and evening students. Informal sessions take place once a week while guest speakers come every other week.

Denise McGarry

The idea behind this organization is new, explained McGarry.

Since the club is geared to fit the unique situations of non-traditional women, one can say that there is a comparable University organization for students that are already at Villanova.

Tufano's Term Reviewed

solved soon. But the future student government needs to find positive ways to get students involved in the program. We've pledged our support, now we have to follow up on that. It will be the responsibility of the next student government."

More recently, "the Senate unanimously passed a motion to request of the President that the present library hours be extended," Tufano said. "The students feel that need. When the president gives his approval, it will go into effect, possibly in time for final exams. It's a substantial change, a goal we accomplished."

After his election, Tufano proposed to work on a "different than any before" student Bill of Rights. "Previous student governments went to the Senate and said, 'this is what we want,' not 'what you can expect of us,' the rights and responsibilities of the student.

"Students are obligated to certain conduct, as the school is obligated to the students," Tufano claimed. "The student life committee of the Senate (of which Tufano is chairman) is working to define everything that is already available to students. To go to the Senate and start over would be a waste of time.

"There is a policy for things established, which we're trying to have publicized. Past presidents wanted the students in on all financial decisions. I thought," stated Tufano, "that they were outrageous demands. I wanted something more realistic — the proposed documents in the past were unreal. We should look at the areas with need, not work on things that are already done, or the students are not concerned with."

Another issue Tufano's administration has dealt with is the residence hall visitation policy. "It's been abused in the past," Tufano stated. "There needs to be more adherence to the present policy before it can be changed. There is a threat that it could be curtailed unless students begin to conform to it.

"The alcohol issue is more volatile now," claimed Tufano. "The LCB is putting more pressure on the school to adhere to the state law. The drinking and visitation policies will be the big issues the next student government will face."

The Tufano student government is working to put control over all student activities into their responsibilities. "It's only right that these student groups report to their fellow students," Tufano said. "Right now, they have no direct responsibility to the students."

Student Laments Iran's Downfall

By PETER BERKERY

This is the last part of the foreign student series.

For most Americans, the Iranian crisis was an extremely trying time, as the threat of war seemed ever increasing. One Villanova student, who prefers to remain anonymous, (we'll call him Shahin) was particularly anxious, since he feared for the very lives of his family back home in Iran. In addition, he felt that most Americans grew increasingly "hostile" towards him when they discovered he was an Iranian student.

Shahin was a high school student in his hometown (Southwest Iran) when riots first broke out in the summer of 1978. "The country was in a state of turmoil," says Shahin, pointing out that in Septmeber of the same year, martial law was declared in 11 major cities. His only source of information during this period was BBC radio broadcasts and "the Voice of Germany," since no official news was coming out of the capitol of Tehran. A civilian government was eventually set-up and martial law was lifted at the end of the year.

This stability was short-lived, however, for on Jan. 2, 1979, the Shah and his family left Iran and on Feb. 1, the Ayatollah Khomeini returned from exile in Paris, calling for an overthrow of the civilian government. According to Shahin, "mass anarchy" reigned and the revolutionaries started killing people suspected of being pro-Shah. Shahin's father rushed down to his school and drove him home to safety around the roadblocks of the insurgents. "I heard gunshots and saw fires," said Shahin, "but no one knew what was going on."

The Ayatollah's supporters eventually gained control over the government and began to take the law into their own hands. They gained control of radio and television and Shahin remembers hearing on the radio each day the names of people being executed. Finally, after the schools collapsed and the newspapers shut down, Shahin's father, a physician and medical professor, turned to him and said, "This is not a country for a young man." His father decided to get Shahin and his family out of Iran anyway he could.

Shahin's family travelled north to Tehran, where they stayed in an apartment "riddled with bullets." Shahin could sense fear in the streets, and he watched as "stormtroopers" terrorized the neighborhood. They managed to reach the airport, and after an hour of interrogation during which their luggage was opened out on the floor and they were humiliated in every way, they were allowed to board a flight to Paris.

Iran: To the North is Russia and the Caspian Sea. Iraq is to the East and the Strategic Persian Gulf is the southernmost border.

After a few weeks in Paris, Shahin flew to the United States, but his family chose to return to Iran. His father felt that as a physician he was needed, and he hoped the situation would improve. Unfortunately, the situation steadily worsened until on Nov. 4, 1979, the American Embassy in Iran was overrun and the hostages were taken. Shahin's family was in an equally grave situation; his father was being followed, and someone phoned the house and threatened to murder the family and burn the house down unless they left. His family was eventually able to leave Iran in May and they phoned Shahin when they reached Paris. "That was the happiest day of my life," said Shahin. The months of anxious waiting were finally over.

As a student, in America, Shahin feels he receives a very "simplistic and shallow version of what's going on" in Iran today and relies mostly on the foreign press for current information. He keeps a meticulous diary of the events in Iran, with daily entries consisting of newspaper clippings from all over the world and television news quotes. Shahin finds America's efforts to protect the free world commendable, but feels "sad" that most Americans have a limited knowledge of the geography and history of other countries. He maintains that most Americans are unaware of Iran's population of 40 million people, with a capital city of over 4 million and most significantly, its 1200 miles of common border with Russia.

Although Shahin believed that the Shah was trying to liberalize Iran, he was also aware of the abuses of the regime. Yet he points out that one cannot compare the Shah's 3200 political prisoners to the Ayatollah's estimated 15,000 executions in the past four years. Also, according to the French press, the war with Iraq has claimed over 200,000 deaths in 2 years at a cost of 20 billion dollars. Shahin maintains that a change within the system was needed; not the destruction of the system.

In order to further illustrate the daily abuses under the Ayatollah's regime, Shahin related an incident that happened to a man his father met in Paris. One day this man's 13-year-old daughter did not return home from school. He went down to the revolutionary headquarters to ask if they knew her whereabouts. "You should be ashamed to collect her body," he was told by a sneering guard. It seems this poor girl ripped the Ayatollah's picture in class, an act punishable by death. The parents had to pay $200 to get the body back and an extra fee of $50 was charged because under Islamic law, a virgin could not be executed, so someone had to be paid to rape her.

One day Shahin had hoped to return to Iran, but says that, "today that's all vanished." He plans to continue his studies and explore America, learning as much as he can. "Nostalgically, Iran is still in my heart," he says. If one day the Ayatollah is overthrown, courageous, patriotic people like Shahin and his family will be the first to go back and pick up the pieces.

Glee Club Captures Bronze

By CATHY GROODY

Villanova's Woman's Glee Club was awarded a bronze medal on March 13 at the Catholic Intercollegiate Woman's Glee Club Competition held at Georgian Court College in New Jersey.

This year's competition was judged on a new system. It was based on obtaining a maximum number of points rather than the usual first, second and third place winners. Because of this, no gold medal was awarded this year that would have meant a perfect score.

"It was a better system this year," said senior Tina D'Orazio, president of the Glee Club. "Every year it was always a toss-up between Fairfield, Immaculata and Villanova. This way, everyone is competing against themselves to achieve a perfect score instead of just competing among the others." By judging the competition on a letter grading system, it gives more clubs the opportunity to receive medals.

This year the competition was among Villanova, Fairfield, Immaculata, Gorgian Court, Worchester Poly Tech., and Marist College. Of the six clubs participating, one silver medal was awarded to Immaculata college and bronze medals were awarded to Fairfield and Georgian Court along with Villanova.

"It was not as cut throat this year," says sophomore Marie Liebezeit. "This new system gives you more to strive for."

The competition began on Saturday evening with a welcoming reception where each club performed three or four songs. Villanova's selected three Irish folk songs composed by Arthur Frackenplhl and a Bette Midler tune called, "In the Mood" composed by Joe Garland. Other colleges performed "lighter" tunes and Broadway songs like "West Side Story."

The competition itself was evaluated by five judges all of whom were experts in the musical field. Each club was judged in such categories as tone quality, balance, stage presence and dress code. If the gold medal had been awarded this year, it would mean that the club had achieved first place votes in every category.

On Sunday, each club was asked to perform three songs. Villanova began their performance with a French song called "Il est bel et bon," composed by Gregor Aichinger and was one that each club had to perform. Their final song was selected by the Glee Club's director, Barry Prager called "How Excellent Thy Name," by Howard Hanson.

This year, thirty-five girls from Villanova attended the competition under director, Dr. Bernice Lagus Capaci. They will be performing their Spring Concert on April 23 along with the Villanova Singers in the main chapel on campus.

"The competition was an opportunity to meet a lot of people who were all interested in the same thing, mainly the love of music," said Tina. "We did the best we could and I'm very proud!"

When asked to comment on Villanova's performance, one judge wrote, "Villanova can justifiably be proud of this very fine chorus."

Poetry Reading

By BARBARA SIMON

St. Patrick's Day was heightened at Villanova with a poetry reading by an Irish poet on Tuesday in the Wayne room of the Connelly Center. On tour in the United States for 10 days, Paul Muldoon has given poetry readings at Swarthmore, Harvard and Rutgers University.

At 31, Muldoon is a producer for the BBC in Belfast and his appearance is that of a serious scholar, clad in a neat grey suit and tie and large framed glasses. However, his conservative image transcends into interest and charm when Muldoon speaks with his Irish brogue, incorporating a gentle wit that easily captivates his audience. His humorous view on common life is heartwarming and humanistic. Muldoon's unique style incorporates contemporary concerns and problems with that of the Irish tradition. His poems are generally short and his themes are deceptively subtle in the midst of contrasting or mundane affairs. In "Holy Thursday" a relationship is examined in the confines of a restaurant. It is the waiter who is colorfully characterized as he "glides from the kitchen with a plate/ of stew, or some thick soup," while the couple at the restaurant realizes "that something or other has come between/ us, whatever we are, or were."

Muldoon successfully expresses the theme of deceiving appearances in his paradoxical poem, "Why Brownlee Left." Its theme is reminiscent of Robinson's "Richard Corey" and the questions remain unanswerable. What vividly remains in "Why

Tenants: You Have Rights

By BARBARA SIMON

This is the second of a two-part series.

Tenants have rights. Last week's (part I) article covered the legal aspects of a lease on which tenants should be informed. The lease may contain restrictions on noise, a specific security deposit and a termination clause. Being aware of these clauses can save the tenant time, aggravation and money.

There are also other important areas of the contract to consider. The landlord has obligations to repair any defects. What are the tenant's recourses in getting something fixed? Eviction is another area of the lease to be familiar with. What are the tenant's legal rights against an eviction notice? These are imperative concerns for a prospective tenant.

In Pugh vs Holmes (July 6, 1979) the Pennsylvania Supreme Court held that the Implied Warranty of Habitability and Tenant Enforcement applied to all residential leases. This warranty means that the landlord has a legal obligation to repair defects which make residential premises unsafe or unsanitary, (eg. leaking sink or loose stairs). Prior to this there was no implied warranty. According to Burke T. Ward, assistant professor of business law at Villanova University, "The importance of this ruling is that a breach by the landlord temporarily suspends the tenant's duty." The landlord is entitled to notice of the defects and a certain time to repair. If the landlord fails to repair in a reasonable time, the tenant has alternatives to appeal for action. The best procedure is to first give the landlord written notice of intention to have repairs made and to deduct the cost from future rent. A copy of the paid bill should be sent to the landlord with the reduced rent check. Another alternative is called rent allotment which means the tenant would reduce their rent in an amount equivalent to the proportion of the loss of the unit because of the defects. Ward suggests that this is "more risky than the first alternative and should not be attempted without legal council."

It is important to understand that if one of these remedies is used the landlord could bring an eviction action in court for nonpayment of rent. Therefore, "The tenant should have a well-documented case before they take action," said Ward.

A tenant can be evicted for nonpayment of rent, for breaking any other clause in the lease, or upon expiration of the lease term. The eviction procedure starts with a "notice to vacate" to the tenant. The tenant has from 30-to-90 days to vacate depending on the length of the lease. If the tenant fails to vacate, the landlord must file a complaint with the local district justice. The hearing will be set no sooner than seven days and nor more than 20 days from the date of filing. If a judgement is entered against the tenant, the tenant has 30 days in which to file a notice of appeal in the Court of Common Pleas. To stop eviction, the tenant must file a bond or post security with the Prothonotary. Fifteen days after the judgement becomes final the landlord can file a Request for Order for Possession. Thereafter, the tenant has 15 days to vacate. After this date a tenant may be physically removed by the constable or the sheriff (not the landlord).

Tenants Have Rights

An eviction notice usually means the tenant must move out. However, the landlord must have just cause in order to legally evict a tenant. Being aware of the causes that consitute eviction gives the tenant an equal stance, enabling him to guard against illegal actions leading to an eviction. Being aware of the correct procedure to effect repair changes is imperative for the tenant. The tenant must be prepared to defend himself in a legal and appropriate manner if the occasion arises. First the tenant must be aware of his rights and then he must stand up for them.

Languages Studied Abroad

By CATHY GROODY

This summer, many Villanova students are adding spice to their ho-hum modern language home work.

By having completed the equivalent of Spanish or French 1111 and 1112, students are now able to continue their language education in a three or four week program offered by Villanova University in Madrid or Paris.

Father Antonio Roman, a Spanish professor began this summer program in Madrid twelve years ago. "It has created a lot of interest in both the language and culture," said Dr. Rene Mongeau, a French professor. As a result of this enormous enthusiasm for language study, Mongeau has designed a program in Paris this year to help students study French as well as broaden their knowledge of all aspects of the French culture.

"Over 50 percent are either majoring or minoring in the language," said Roman. This however, does not prohibit anyone from the overseas program. As long as someone has the interest and enthusiasm to learn a language in its own culture and has a basic knowledge of the language, they are encouraged to apply. It is a unique opportunity where students are able to learn a language while experiencing its cultural environment, and most of all enjoy doing it."

"Students are expected to take one or two of the courses offered in the morning," said Roman. "Then, they are free in the afternoon." The Summer program also offers various cultural activities where the students are free to sightsee and explore the area.

They will be living at the university residence Colegio Mayor Marques de la Ensenada. In Paris their room and board is provided by the association des Foyers Internationaux of Massey. Students are taught three or six credit courses by either Villanova Professors or language experts of the country. The cost is $1,500 which includes round trip for air fair, room and board, tuition and bus excursions.

Brownlee Left" are the "Horses, like man and wife, shifting their weight from foot to/ Foot, and gazing into the future."

In conjunction with Chestnut Hill College in Philadelphia, the Irish Studies Program at Villanova organized the Muldoon poetry reading. Both Dr. Lester Conner, an English professor at Chestnut Hill who has known Muldoon for years and Dr. James Murphy, coordinator of the Irish Studies at Villanova, think that Muldoon is a good contemporary poet. "I like Muldoon's poetry and I think he's a polished poet. His poetry has a nice honesty about it along with an understated humor," said Murphy.

At 21, Muldoon won the Gregory Award with his first book of poetry called "New Weather" (1973). Alan Brownjohn of the "New Statesman" magazine called Muldoon "a remarkable mature and accomplished talent." His second volume is called "Mules" (1977) and in 1979 Frank Ormsby wrote of Muldoon in his preface to "Poets from the North of Ireland" that "Paul Muldoon is the most ambitious and technically assured of the younger Northern poets." In 1980, his third volume was published, "Why Brownlee Left" and in 1982 he won the Fabor Memorial prize for his poetry. This summer Muldoon's fourth volume of poetry will be published entitled "Quoof" (a family term meaning a hot waterbottle).

SEMESTER BEGINS JUNE 27, 1983

By REV. SHAWN TRACY

There is true acceptance and there is false acceptance. One affirms, but the other destroys!

At Villanova there are growing indications that an infection from poisonous pseudo acceptance is present. Call it passivity!

Take the practice which occurs when a Villanova student is turned out of his or her room for the night. A sexual relationship is pursued at the expense of another's right. Usually little is said to the cheated resident, who after all has paid for the room, and could at least expect honesty and respect for the price, but instead gets coldly "thrown out."

But why would one person let another person get away with it! Why the widespread and clearly passive response?

Take the example of class atmosphere where cheating occurs, whole classes seem to accept and even condone what happens — an obvious destruction of the purpose of education for which each student, after all, pays quite a large sum of family or personal income. It is a simple case of injustice. Each cheater clearly and unconscionably reveals a disdain for every other student in the class, destroying the system of markings, and creating an environment of alienation and anger. Yet each student cheated in this way "accepts" the offense and the offending person with strange silence and almost eerie voicelessness.

But why the passivity? Injustice right in our midst, but no voice is heard, why?

I wonder about myself. Week after week in the comfort of this university, with its prize winning athletic tradition, its good looking and well-dressed clientele every where, complacent professors not known for "professing" faith, and liturgies which excel in popular music, but are often "critiqued" for their dangerous showmanship, I wonder about it all. I question this acceptance of life as it is — versus life as it can be. I often question whether the gospel is heard at all, or whether we have gotten so deeply entrenched in our own image that we cannot see beyond these eyelid buildings to the infinite sky above us with its beauty and wonder and truth.

When do the people abandon the master? Jesus was led to His death in the face of apparently bizarre decisions. Why didn't He raise His nuclear sword? Pilate sneers and screams at Him to turn the other cheek, and instead Pilate is challenged to explain himself. Life seems to laugh at those who are most sensitive to it, but then Jesus turns around and takes a strong hold on death and says, "This is the cup of my blood. Take it all of you and drink, this is a death I drink of freely."

What is authentic acceptance if not to recognize injustices in the world, and then to stand up in the face of firing squads in order to say no forever? True acceptance, it seems to me, is to ask questions of ourselves and those around us about behavior, and questions which are not only sincere, but directly given "face to face" to those offending. Questions like, "Why do you cheat us?", and "Why do you cheat yourself?"

In a moment of anguish and passion, I recently got up in the early morning to let out my primal scream of anger and fear. I said this: "Villanova, Wake Up! You are standing on dangerous moral ground. You destroy every true need you ever had. You stand for righteousness, community and integrity. If you are not careful, you will be riddled throughout with the cancer of dishonesty. You will stink of mediocrity. You will be one well-dressed whore with plenty of red Monty Python lipstick, but you will be one big put-on, and Thomas of Villanova will turn over in his 16th century grave from sheer disgust."

There are two kinds of acceptance. One leads to love; the other leads to passivity. One will affirm; the other, destroy. Decisions and change; decisions and change! First decisions, and then change!

Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A. is the Director of Campus Ministry.

Spring Offers Bright New Releases

By MICHAEL MORAN

Spring has already yielded much for those avid music fans who spend half of their lives in record stores. Usually these people have to choose between two or three good albums. Recently, however, these people are fortunate enough (or, depending on their bank accounts, unfortunate enough) to have a wealth of good new music to choose from. Here is just a sampling of the quality of current album releases.

U2: "WAR" — Starting with the best release of the year so far, U2 takes a very political approach to music with "WAR." The Irish foursome have produced an album devoted to questioning the purpose and validity of war and revolution. The wailing vocals of lead singer Bono give the pleading lyrics genuine conviction. But perhaps the most compelling thing about "WAR" is that U2 has combined negative subject matter with their usual uplifting melodies. Without a doubt, "WAR" is one of the best anti-war messages through a rock-n-roll medium in the past fifteen years.

Modern English: "After The Show" — It is amazing that this five member band from Colchester, England can write and play the music they do with only five or six years of musical experience. "After The Show" was released in England last year and now in the United States the album is moving up the charts on the strength of its single, "I Melt With You." With its danceable pop sound, "I Melt With You" has the makings of a top ten hit. The rest of the album consists of material just as good as "I Melt With You," which should encourage airplay on many radio stations.

Doug And The Slugs: "Music For The Hard Of Thinking" — For someone experiencing Doug And The Slugs for the first time, it usually takes about three listenings before a fair opinion can be reached. People tend not to take a band with a name like "Doug And The Slugs" seriously. Actually, leader Doug Bennet does not seem as if he wishes to be taken very seriously. The Slugs were always basically a party band, and have not changed for their third album, "Music For The Hard Of Thinking." The album has several strong cuts, all with interesting vocal stylings and infectious beats. Invariably, the listener starts out laughing at Doug And The Slugs and ends up laughing with them. The sense of humor pervading "Music For The Hard

Of Thinking" can only be described as contagious.

King Sunny Ade: "JU JU MUSIC" — While many Americans are not familiar with Ju Ju Music, it is very popular among the Yoruba people in Nigeria. King Sunny Ade is affectionately called the "Chairman" in Nigeria because of his major influence in Ju Ju Music. His latest release, simply entitled "JU JU MUSIC," consists of established favorites of the Yoruba people. The music has incorporated a modern sound in recent years to compliment the traditional sound of the "talking drums." It will appeal to western audiences mainly because of the electric guitar stylings and over all good-natured sound. The tunes on "JU JU MUSIC" are melodic and will appeal to jazz, dance, and reggae enthusiasts. All in all, "JU JU MUSIC" is a pleasant experience for any one wanting to broaden his musical horizons.

Bow Wow Wow: "When The Going Gets Tough The Tough Get Going" — Malcolm McLaren is no longer there, but the Burundi beat is as Bow Wow Wow puts out their finest release to date, "When The Going Gets Tough The Tough Get Going." With the departure of McLaren's influence as producer, co-songwriter and overseer, the Bow Wow's have written all their own songs and done a good job to boot. The most refined, pop-sounding tune on the album is "Do You Want To Hold Me" a song reminiscent of last year's hit, "I Want Candy." Once again, the semi-wild Burundi drum beat and quick bass riffs are complimented by the very strong vocals of sixteen-year-old lead singer Annabella Lwin.

Just Call Yune Very Funny

By SCOTT MEYER

"They Call Me Bruce," written by and starring Oriental comedian Johnny Yune, is a satirical look at the martial arts genre. It is the story of an Oriental cook and his escapades when he unwittingly delivers narcotics for his mobster boss.

Bruce is named by his employer because he has Bruce Lee posters decorating his room. Bruce's fighting skills hardly equal his namesake's. In a barroom confrontation, Bruce tells his overgrown assailants how he will beat them up to impress a woman. Threatening them with the karate that he knows ("look at this Oriental face," Bruce snarls), he must sneak away when they do not back down.

Dejected, Bruce has a flashback while walking the street. In the dream, Bruce's grandfather appears as a blind, old man and Bruce is a young boy. Calling him "Grasshopper," the grandfather imparts monumental wisdom to Bruce. This spoof of the Kung Fu television series contained some of the film's funniest moments. Yune's portrayal of the curious young boy stayed so true to character, that his outrageous questions were even more ludicrous. The obvious sight gags suggested by the satire were uninspired next to the characterizations.

Bruce's feelings of inadequacy are dissipated when he accidently knocks out a thief during a robbery. After seeing Bruce's heroism, the mobster charges his chauffeur and Bruce with the delivery of the cocaine. Bruce thinks he's handling his special pasta flour, reminding everyone that the Chinese invented spaghetti. The chauffeur is mortified when Bruce offers some to a police officer.

The balance of the movie chronicles the travels of the driver and Bruce in big cities across the United States. They encounter two beautiful female karate experts, one played interestingly by Margaux Hemingway. In pursuit of the cocaine, Hemingway and the other woman engage in an absurd fight scene that Bruce enjoys watching from the floor.

Finally, Bruce arrives in New York. The film ends as Bruce, and the audience, receive the punchline to a joke told by the grandfather. This punch-line expresses a simple theme of the movie. Because he is not the typical, superhuman character, the audience can identify with him. This is why "They Call Me Bruce" ultimately is a success.

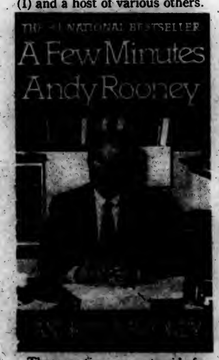
A True American Humorist

By BILL SANTOS

Did you ever wonder who Andy Rooney really is? He's the man who gets "a few minutes" every week on the television show "60 Minutes." But, is that all Rooney does? No, he has written a number one national best-seller titled "A Few Minutes with Andy Rooney." It contains many of the same anecdotes frequently heard on his popular TV segment.

Rooney covers a vast array of subjects categorized in three groups: belongings, surroundings and ourselves. Each classification contains approximately fifteen to twenty sub sections about anything and everything Rooney could fit in the 322 pages. Based on observations of himself as well as others, Rooney's wry humor comes forth in a publication that show us that we are all the same: victims of the Establishment.

Rooney discusses topics such as mail, bank names, the draft, dirty words, vacations and for you sports fans, how to watch football on television. He even has his own rating system in which he ridicules the school grading system (A, B, C, D, . . . F) and presents the one to ten system as a possibility. Rooney rates Kleenex (8), Mona's book (3), Scotch tape (7), Schmasstady, NY (5), and Howard Cosell (1) and a host of various others.



Three sections are set aside for a first hand account of Rooney's experiences at dinner, in Washington and at work. Dialogue with intermittent explanations of the action forms a thorough investigation of these phenomena.

The book contains unnecessary photographs of toothpaste tubes, license plates, combs and Rooney himself. They are of poor quality and do not add to the success of this work.

Rooney writes in a style that is universal. He tends to be repetitious with words rather than ideas, but this does not take away from what is being said. Rooney wants us to take a long, hard look at ourselves, sit back, and laugh. As co-worker and cohort Mike Wallace said, "Andy Rooney has been watching us all, you and me, for years and years, and finally he decided to tell us what he's found out. He's perceptive and wise, but most of all he's funny."

Rooney has been called "a unique and original American humorist in the hilarious tradition of Twain, Ade, Dunne, Rogers, Benchley, Thurber, and Perelman." (Garson Kanin). His sardonic wit will live on forever, as long as there are people who enjoy their greatest resource, themselves.

Rooney has written another book titled A Few More Minutes With Andy Rooney that continues his research on the human way of thinking and how the world's unwritten laws affect each and every one of us.

I'll Meet You In the Alley

By DILIP JAIN

The first thing you notice upon entering Saladalley is its decor, simple yet attractive. It is set in such a manner that you don't feel crowded without being in a cubicle. You can enjoy the view of the posh Suburban Square market, yet you do not have to see much of the eating habits of others. The salad bar itself is set at an easily accessible and roomy location.

A second point of interest is the hostesses. For a change, there aren't any fancy hats or colorful, look-alike dresses; just young girls who are both genuinely sweet and helpful.

However, the standing of a restaurant is founded on its food. The primary meal, as the name indicates, is salad. They also serve soups, beverages, desserts and various vegetables as provencal entrees. The menu varies daily and features items such as fresh broccoli, chick peas, sunflower seeds, cottage cheese, cauliflower and homemade dressings. If you are bored with regular Italian and French dressings, you might try Russian dressing or a mix called "yogurt del." Unfortunately, it doesn't depend on the mastery of the chef when it comes to salads. Still, freshness of vegetables and fruits, style and cleanliness with which they are cut and the dressings do make a difference at Saladalley. I found their soups and desserts to be a better choice. My personal recommendation is Chinese mushroom soup and carrot cake. I wouldn't recommend the Mocha Fudge Torte. You won't find too many meats or nonvegetarian servings in the regular salad bar. Seafood lovers may enjoy cooked shrimp and herring salad along with regular salad, Friday through Sunday. Sunday morning features the special "Brunch," which consists of salad, cereal, yogurt, smoked whiting and the custom-made omelette. Service is quick and efficient but you have to help yourselves at the salad bar.

Everything has its price. On an average you will spend $8-10 per person if you really want to eat in style. The nearest Saladalley for Villanovans is Suburban Square, Ardmore.

It seems that people who visit Saladalley know it well and enjoy themselves. They are mostly young couples and families with small kids. Overall, the word to describe Saladalley is fresh, so try it. It's open Monday through Saturday, 11:00 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. and 11:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Sunday.

McAnally LP Taylor-Made

By MIKE NOONE

Those people who enjoy James Taylor imitations and bland soft rock, will enjoy Mac McAnally's debut album, "Nothing but the Truth." The first thing that strikes the listener is the striking resemblance of McAnally's voice to that of Taylor. As the album progresses one realizes that not only does McAnally copy Taylor's vocal style, but his musical and lyrical style as well. For example, "On the Line" is particularly difficult to distinguish from earlier Taylor songs. However, the pleasant formula of much of Taylor's music is missing in McAnally's.

McAnally is preoccupied with love, but offers no unique insight or thoughts about it. In fact, after the first few songs, McAnally begins to repeat himself and never tells us anything which we have not heard before. In "Like your Mother," he states: "Girl you are my closest friend/ You ask me for advise, but you don't listen/ The old home town is closing in/ If you don't leave now . . ." This song, like many others, drags on with redundant ideas and endless statements of the obvious.

Musically, McAnally and his ensemble are quite talented.

Mac McAnally

However, with the exception of a few songs, he refuses to change the tempo of the songs. This unwavering tempo makes an entire album extremely tiring. He does a fine job of imitating Taylor, but perhaps he is too convincing.

After an initial freshness, the album rapidly becomes stale; McAnally's sound proves to be no more than another uncharacteristic, too well polished soft rock sound.

Some of McAnally's acoustic work has a more appealing sound. "Middle Man" begins with a simple but eloquent acoustic solo. After one verse it slips back into the bland void. One listens to this album hoping that the band will click into a song with a sharper bite, but it never happens.

The one highlight to the album is a song "Lookin' for the Good Life." This song is the only one which does not drag or become boring. In it he states: "As a child a dream is all it takes/ to get you through the night/ Now it costs every dime I make/ just to say I feel all right." In this song he is able to convince one of the emptiness of a world of "V.C.R.'s and jacuzzis."

At the end of the album, one can't help feeling that all musicians are on "downers." McAnnally's halfhearted "yeahs" and attempts to put meaning into his songs are laughable when compared with artists such as Aretha Franklin and Robert Flack. Basically Mac McAnally is yet another artist with that bland, no guts California soft rock sound.

"Trenchcoat" is a romantic comedy starring Margot Kidder and Robert Hays. Produced by Jerry Leider and directed by Michael Tuchner, the film traces the exploits of an aspiring novelist who searches for fame and adventure in a distant land.

Mickey Raymond, a San Francisco court stenographer, wants to write a novel. She believes that "to write a great novel, you have to live a great novel." So she sets out for Malta in search of a thrilling story. What she finds is a map that leads to ten kilos of missing plutonium, and a lot of trouble. Suddenly, people are trying to kill her in her hotel room and kidnap her as she drives through picturesque Malta.

She also finds Terry Leonard, who she bumps into on the flight to Malta, where he poses as a doctor. In Malta, he appears as a jewelry salesman and even as her lawyer when she is falsely accused of a crime. Every meeting brings about a new occupation, until Leonard himself doesn't know exactly what's going on.

Mickey Raymond, played by Kidder, is a somewhat familiar role to her, since she played Lois Lane in the "Superman" films. But she doesn't seem to capture the spirit of the character. She seems disinterested in many of the high action sequences, even to the point of appearing bored while Raymond is supposed to be a tough and adventurous young writer, she comes off as a bewildered tourist.

Kidder is not without her moments, however. After being attacked in her hotel room she tries to yell for help, but nothing comes out. Eventually, she rushes down into the tranquil dining room (wearing only a towel) and lets off a blood-curdling scream.

The movie's real power comes from the performance of Robert Hays as Terry Leonard. He moves easily from scene to scene, and occupation to occupation. He can be a Peace Corp worker in Malaysia or a secret agent from the Nuclear Regulatory Committee one minute, a jewelry salesman the next. He convinces the viewer almost totally, leaving just enough doubt about his true identity to keep the audience guessing.

• The movie's real power comes from the performance of Robert Hays as Terry Leonard. He moves easily from scene to scene, and occupation to occupation.

Kidder and Hays are backed up by a fine supporting cast. David Suchet plays Inspector Stagnos, a Maltese Investigator called on by Raymond to save her from her mysterious attackers. Gila Vaon Weitershausen and Ronald Lacey also turn in fine performances. The muscial score, created by Charles Fox, is appropriate in every scene — driving and ominous during a death struggle, light and merry for a picnic by the ocean. And the photography of the Maltese countryside is exquisite.

The weakest part of the film is the writing of Jeffrey Price and Peter Seaman. In attempting to combine comedy, mystery and romance, not one of these elements is properly developed. The development of several characters is also weak, and parts of the action necessary to understand the plot are quickly brushed over. Also, the film relies on so many stock elements of a mystery (the detective clad in raincoat and hat, the menacing looking villain, etc.) that the film's originality begins to suffer.

It is doubtful that this film will win Oscars. The script is weak and Margot Kidder's performance is far from outstanding. But the film is still enjoyable, mainly because of the performance of Hays. So, if you're looking for an enjoyable evening, "Trenchcoat" is a possibility.

NURSING STUDENTS & NEW GRADUATES:

The right move now can change your whole life for the better.

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION

As a nursing student or recent graduate, you have probably already been exposed to job opportunities in a profession where your education and skills will be in demand wherever you choose to become employed. The decision on where to begin your nursing career is a difficult one . . . but The VA makes the choice easy.

THE NURSE PRECEPTORSHIP PROGRAM

Our 16-week nurse preceptorship program provides a comfortable transition from student to staff nurse. The Program consists of weekly seminars, daily conferences, a 2-week introduction to administrative responsibilities, and rotations through medical, surgical and specialty units.

Starting salary for BSN new graduates — $22,079 plus many benefits. Starting dates: June 5 July 5 Sept. 11

THE NURSE EXTERNSHIP PROGRAM

This summer program is for third-year nursing students (or equivalent) only. It is designed to introduce the student to hospital routine and procedures. You'll participate in basic nursing care and attend weekly seminars. We now have 15 critical care and 15 med/surg positions available. You can begin either May 23rd or June 13th and work through the summer.

Cats Survive Late Lamar Rally

Pinone and Pinckney Key 60-58 Victory

By LARRY GOANOS

The Wildcats most valuable rally-killer ran out on them last Saturday in Houston. Thank goodness. No, none of the Villanova players succumbed to the great pressure and fled from the court, but rather it was the fleeting seconds of the time clock which preserved the Cats' 60-58 victory over the Lamar University Cardinals.

"Whenever you get into a tournament like this you're very happy to win regardless of the situation," said a relieved coach Rollie Massimino shortly after the Cats had cleared their first hurdle in the post-season scramble for the top.

The win had an especially sweet taste for Villanova after they had lost three of their previous four match-ups.

"When you lose the last two games of the season and the Big East Tournament, you lose a little confidence," admitted Massimino.

The Lamar Cardinals on the other hand, had entered the contest riding the crest of a seven game winning streak.

"We knew it was going to be a tough game," said senior center John Pinone. "Anyone who beats Alabama by 23 is a good team."

The Cardinals looked like anything but a good team in the beginning as Nova raced out to leads of 8-0 and 14-4 in the first five minutes. The Cats exploited Lamar's man-to-man defense adeptly with Pinone, Ed Pinckney and Dwayne McClain hitting from in close, seemingly at will.

"I think their man-to-man is their bread and butter defense. We took what was there and played patiently," explained Pinone.

The Cats quickly taught Lamar that man cannot live by bread and butter alone however, prompting the Cards to resort to a tactic seen by the Cats all year, the packed-in zone.

Villanova's John Pinone gets inside position on Lamar's Randy Gray.

The new strategy, designed to shut down the Villanova inside attack, worked better than the man defense. Meanwhile, at the other end, Cardinal guard Tommy Sewell was launching jumpers that appeared as if they were being guided by Houston's Mission Control Center. Forward Kenneth Perkins was toiling under the boards for Lamar on offense as well, enabling Lamar to close the gap to 32-26 at the half.

Early in the second half Villanova's tournament veterans decided it was time to take control. Pinone, Pinckney and Granger showed the way while the Cats ripped off an 18-10 scoring spurt in the first ten minutes. While Granger and Pinckney were making themselves soar for the Cats, Pinone was making the Cards sore with his physical play around the hoop.

The Wildcats frustrated the Lamar offense during this stretch as well, employing defenses which used more patterns than Paul Cormier's tailor.

"I thought our defense was outstanding," said Massimino. "Once we got ahead we mixed up defenses very well."

The Wildcat tear continued until their lead reached its apex at 15 points (56-41) with 7:20 left in the contest. Everything was looking up for Villanova, but then a funny thing happened to the Cats on the way to Kansas City — they folded.

BOXED IN by Cardinal defenders is Wildcat Ed Pinckney. EZ Ed contributed 10 points and 10 rebounds in Villanova's 60-58 victory.

Lamar's Lamont Robinson and Kenneth Perkins suddenly caught fire, determined to prove that Sewell was not the lone star on the Texas team. The duo connected on a series of mid-range jumpers to close the gap while Villanova was coming up empty on offense.

Perkins cashed in on an 18-foot jumper at the 1:17 mark to narrow the margin to 60-54, after which Lamar called time. Fifteen seconds later, Pinone bounced a pass to a UPI reporter and it was Lamar's ball. Sewell nailed a ten-footer for the Cards 17 ticks later to pull the Texans within four at the :45 mark.

The Cats failed to score on the ensuing possession but Lamar's final basket came with only four seconds remaining in the game. Nova inbounded the ball and time expired to give the Cats their fourth consecutive opening game victory in the NCAA Tournament.

"I'm awfully proud of this particular win," beamed Massimino.

In the other corner, Lamar Coach Pat Foster felt a letdown.

"You have to be disappointed a little bit. We weren't sharp. Alabama allowed us to to do some things that Villanova didn't allow us to do," said Foster, who then attempted to pinpoint the problem. "They played an excellent schedule. Maybe we wore down from playing so hard defensively."

And so it went, the Cats held on to earn the victory and pull themselves over the first game hump in the great NCAA Shootout. As unspectacular as it was, Stewart Granger expressed the team's sentiments succinctly," We're on our way to Kansas City, you have to be happy about that."

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Lisa McFadden

The NCAA Division I women's swimming and diving championships were held in Lincoln, Neb., last week, and for the first time, a Villanova swimmer qualified. Lisa McFadden, the Budweiser Athlete of the Week, finished 16th in a field of 35 and set a Villanova record in the 1650 freestyle.

McFadden, who was the 30th seed in the meet, finished 14 places higher with her record-breaking time of 16:49.70.

"I think," said women's swimming Head Coach Chris McKee, "that the meet motivated her and that she can swim with the best people in the country."

Unlike many great swimmers, McFadden, a junior nursing major and communications minor, did not arrive at Villanova via scholarship. In fact, she did not even swim her freshman year.

The Philadelphia native won All-Catholic honors at Archbishop Ryan High School, but was not recruited heavily. Instead of being pursued, she wrote letters to Villanova.

"I get about 80 to 100 letters a year," said an initially unimpressed McKee. "When I found out her best times, I wasn't exactly doing any back flips."

After working in the Falvey Library her freshman year, McFadden decided she missed the fun and competition of swimming. Intense training replaced book stacking, and she made the team her sophomore year, earning a scholarship in the second semester.

Since then, she has earned the Most Improved Swimmer Award and All-American honors, besides setting eight Villanova records and four pool records at Navy and Connecticut.

Distance freestyle races are her specialty. During the regular season, she won 29 of 32 freestyle events.

Last summer, McFadden swam five to six hours a day at the USS Camp in West Chester, gaining physical and mental endurance. This training, combined with encouragement from coaches and friends, has made her a winner.

Cats Fail in Hannigan Cup Bid

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Villanova's ice hockey team battled hard this past week, but good fortune was not on their side and the Icecats were forced to give up the MACHC Hannigan Cup.

Even outstanding goaltending by Fred Christie was not enough to help. Friday night in Delaware the Cats succumbed, 7-2. Nova's only two goals were scored by Bill Davis and Tim "Boom-Boom" Curran.

On Monday night, the team hosted Delaware in what turned out to be a non-stop struggle. Unfortunately, Villanova was forced to accept a 4-3 defeat after a sudden death overtime.

The Cats' scoring drive was initiated by sophomore Tim Curran, who was assisted by fellow line members Frank Segreto and Sal Mancuso. Following this goal was a score from Davis assisted by Jim Ragold. The other goal was scored by Segreto with an assist from Mike Bufano and Mancuso.

The game marked the last collegiate performance of seniors Mancuso, Ragold, Ed Devlin, Bob Brown and Ken Downey.

It also culminated a fine season's achievement.

Leading scorers for the Cats were Segreto (13 goals, 14 asst.), Curran (ten goals, 21 asst.), John Canuso (17 goals, 11 asst.), Jamie Huston (seven goals, 15 asst.), Ragold (11 goals, ten asst.), John Padova (six goals, ten asst.) and Mancuso (six goals, nine asst.)

In the nets Fred Christie averaged 3.65 goals against with a save ratio of 87.7 and Bob Brown had 5.07 goals against and an 80.0 percent save ratio.

According to Coach Skip Probst, "We went out in style, we worked hard and definitely had class. It was the first time in five years that we did not have a winning season (13-13-2), but I just can't say enough about Fred Christie — he was marvelous. I'm also proud of this year's showings of Paul Critchley, Huston, Curran and Bufano."

The Villanova hockey season came to an end Monday night with a 4-3 loss to Delaware.

Softball Gears Up

By JUDY ROGERS

The Villanova women's softball team is in training for what it hopes will be a super season. They spent Spring Break working out at the University of South Carolina where they played six exhibition games against the University of South Carolina, Winthrop and Northwest Missouri State.

The Wildcats did not fare too well, but it was only their first time practicing outside because of the weather. The team played extremely well on defense, but its offense was a little weak.

Last season the Cats had a record of nine wins and seven losses under the guidance of Debbie McKee, who has been the coach for five years. The team was Division II last year; now it has jumped to Division I and the NCAAs. The team was formerly in the AIAW.

Junior outfielder Kathy Byrnes feels Villanova has the most talented team in a long time. All the starters are returning. Some players to look for: Kathi Beisel, a senior outfielder; Ann Hannigan, a junior shortstop; Denise Reid, a senior catcher; Shaula DeMarco, a senior pitcher; and Bonnie Bell, a sophomore pitcher.

In their new division, the Cats have tougher teams to play. Ones to watch out for include LaSalle, Delaware, West Chester and Pennsylvania. Nova plays its home games behind the stadium, next to where the new Field House addition will be. The Cats have their first game on March 30, against West Chester.

Lacrosse Hopeful

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Spring is here and that means the start of women's lacrosse. It also marks the first season of coaching for Diane Moyer. And she has been very impressed.

"The team possesses a lot of talent and I hope to get the players to be determined and dedicated to the best they can, no matter what level we play at or who we play."

The team is composed of a lot of young players and a few very experienced upperclassmen which makes for a well-balanced combination.

Some of the more outstanding players are seniors LiAnn Massimino and Anne McGuinness and junior transfer student Robin Lucarini. Nova also possesses a strong sophomore class with Gina Roman and Andrea Martino.

SPRINGING INTO ACTION is the women's lacrosse team during a pre-season workout.

USFL Comes to Town

By LARRY GOANOS

Well folks, there's a new football team in town, but before some alumni fall off their seats, let me explain. It's not Villanova.

The team is called the Philadelphia Stars and it's the local entry in the new United States Football League. Certainly you've heard of the USFL, the league with the best marketing campaign of any new sports league ever, unless of course you live in the St. Mary's train tunnel (in which case you've probably gone out with the tide anyway).

The Stars made their home debut last week at the Vet against the New Jersey Generals and Herschel Walker. Herschel's arrival to town caused quite a stir but his team didn't as they quietly submitted to the Stars, 25-0. The game was a bust, but from most indications the league won't be. Which brings us to the question:

Does America need another pro football league?

Before all the football widows out there begin shaking their heads in disgust, the memories of lonely winter afternoons still burning brightly in their minds, let me remind them of what made this nation great — free enterprise.

Editorial

People point to the hockey, football, basketball and exhibition baseball standings which grace the sports pages of any daily newspaper and say that there are too many sports going on at once.

That may be true but the situation may remedy itself through the old "survival of the fittest" principle.

The NBA is collapsing under its own weight. Multi-million dollar contracts are being thrown around like frisbees in Ft. Lauderdale. And to top it all off, the poor hoopsters who only make a couple of hundred thousand per year are threatening to strike on April 2, a move that could spell the end for the financially troubled league and its shaky franchises.

The NHL has no network television contract nor does it look like one can be expected. Their playoff system is a farce. Fifteen out of the 21 teams are invited to post season action. It's like the Villanova housing lottery — if you don't specifically ask to be excluded they count you in.

And of course baseball owns the summer season where sports are concerned. Except for an occasional Olympics, nothing else can be tolerated to infringe upon baseball's domain.

Question: So where does the USFL fit in?

Answer: Anywhere it can.

What's so awful about the American public getting to see football in the spring and summer? It's a business just like anything else and it deserves a chance to operate whenever it pleases.

Dana Kirk

Memphis St. (23-7)

Dana Kirk's Memphis State Tigers revolve around sophomore All-American Keith Lee (Lee averages 18.9 points and 10.9 rebounds per game). In last week's highly touted matchup with Patrick Ewing, Lee outplayed Ewing, scoring 28 points as Memphis State defeated Georgetown 66-57.

The regular season was disappointing for Memphis State. After jumping out to a 12-0 start and a number-one ranking, the Tigers stumbled down the stretch to finish at 23-7, good for fourth place in Metro Conference and a 17th ranking in the final AP poll.

No one denies that the 6'10 Lee is the key to the Tigers' success. His supporting cast, however, is more than adequate. Second in scoring and rebounding is 6'9" Bobby Parks (15.5 points, 7.1 rebounds), and Philip "Doom" Haynes adds offensive punch at a 13.3 clip. Freshman Andre Turner is the floor leader, averaging just under ten points while handing out 119 assists on the season.

Despite the capabilities of the other players, the NCAA Tournament fortunes of the Memphis State Tigers rest squarely on the shoulders of Keith Lee. And Dana Kirk will be the first to admit it.

Lute Olson

Iowa (21-9)

Despite their allegiance to the Big Ten, the Iowa Hawkeyes believe strongly in the Big Three.

Unlike the Big Ten, the Big Three is not a conference. It's more like an inside force — one that has already sent Hawkeye NCAA opponents Utah State and Missouri packing for home.

Greg Stokes, at 6'11", leads Iowa's Big Three. The sophomore center leads the Hawkeyes in scoring with a 17.5 mark.

Michael Payne, one inch shorter than Stokes, is not far behind. Payne too is a sophomore, and he averages 11 ppg along with 7.7 rebounds per contest.

That's enough to make even Ralph Sampson nervous. But then there's also senior forward Mark Gannon, who at 6'7" provides more timber for the Iowa front line.

So that is the Big Three. But it really doesn't stop there. Bob Hansen, the team's top-scoring guard with 15.2 pp., is no slouch at 6'6".

All of which has to make Head Coach Lute Olson happy. His team was only 10-8 in Big Ten action this season, but thanks to the Big Three & Co., the Hawkeyes are 21-9 overall.

Guy V. Lewis

Houston (28-2)

A Final Four participant just a year ago, the powerful Cougars of the University of Houston have steamrolled to an impressive 28-2 record this year. Head Coach Guy Lewis has assembled a tall, talented and deep squad, but perhaps more importantly, the Coogs are a year older and more seasoned to the pressures of NCAA Tournament play.

Known primarily as a run and gun team, Houston did not disappoint its fans this season while running up some awesome offensive statistics. Leading the way is 6'6" sophomore swingman Michael Young, who averages 17.6 points per game. If that isn't enough, also on hand are 6'7" Clyde Drexler, scoring a 16.6 clip, 6'9" Larry "Mr. Mean" Micheaux at 13.9 and intimidating 7' center Akeem "The Dream" Alajuwon at 13 per contest.

A fearsome rebounding team as well, the Cougars' front line tears down an average of 27 boards a game. Splitting the chores at point guard are speedy Alvin Franklin and 6'6" Reid Gettys, who has dished off 194 assists on the year.

The acclaimed brothers of Phi Slamma Jamma are a "fraternity" whose opponents have found every game to be "hell night."

Police Called to Radiation Party

By LINDA BOND

An outdoor drinking event on the north lawn of Stanford Hall caused a tense situation involving Radnor police and several hundred students on March 28. Certain University residents were commemorating the anniversary of the Three Mile Island accident with a "Radiation Day Party", which by 1 p.m. that day had gotten out of hand.

Students encircled kegs of beer and would not let Villanova security people remove them, prompting campus security to notify the township police of the beer party. Five Radnor police officers arrived and placed the kegs in their patrol cars.

According to the police report, a group of students blocked the only exit the police cars could use and some of the students, who were reportedly very drunk, incited others into forming a mob that then verbally abused the police.

Students inside the dorm lifted their stereo speakers into the windows and turned the volume up, causing local neighbors to phone complaints into Radnor's police station.

Acting Sgt. Michael Oreski commented, "We were getting and going nowhere and I feared for all of our safety." Oreski requested that two or three students approach the police and discuss the possibility of "an acute and explosive situation." Three students stepped up and the Rev. Ralph Shurer, a faculty member, arrived.

No citations were given out and the police report emphasized that there were no injuries and no damages to people or property.

According to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, the radiation party was not an approved party although at some level the University was aware of the possibility of it happening. Neville said it "was not a total surprise. Staff was on hand and they tried to forestall it by just being there, approaching students with kegs and telling them to stop. Students listened to them for awhile and did not open the kegs."

Neville said that when so many people were gathering, the Radnor police had to be called.

Neville went on to say that "students were uncooperative with Radnor police. I am disappointed in the way students responded to the police. The last thing we would have wanted was physical confrontation."

"They (Radnor police) confiscated the obvious kegs and left by 1:30 p.m., but other kegs came later," Neville remarked.

Campus security, people from the office of Residence Life, and the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the University, wanted the party contained at that point, Neville explained, "so nobody would get hurt. It was decided to investigte after the fact and find out who was chiefly responsible."

Neville felt that outsiders to the University, in addition to students, measurably contributed to the disorderliness of the radiation party.

The University is investigating the event and Villanova's Judicial Affairs Officer, Joseph A. Burke, is calling students allegedly chiefly responsible for the party and ensuing incident to his office to present evidence against them. Those people active in planning the party and collecting money for it are implicated. Sanctions have not yet been determined.

Neville said that the extent of resident assistant responsibility is unclear, that it is a "grey area".

"They are certainly responsible in the halls. Security is responsible for outside parties," Neville stated. "It is not our job to police state drinking regulations. An R.A. doesn't have to enforce them (state drinking regulations). Parties are not allowed however, unless they have prior approval."

LCB Reports Alcohol Violations

By DEBORAH SPINA

For the past few months, the Villanova campus has experienced the force of an inhibitor which has put a damper on social life, the Liquor Control Board (LCB).

The LCB has caused the University to restrict the use of alcohol. According to the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, "there have not been and will not be any major night parties scheduled in the Day Hop or in any of the lounges which would sell alcohol."

This prohibition was the result of LCB warnings directed to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for student life, who claimed that they were prompted to take action because incidents have involved non-Villanova students, more specifically high school students, drinking on campus.

In the fall, there was a high school student who told his parents that he had been drinking at Villanova and his parents called the LCB. At this time the board wanted University functions curtailed. All of the resident assistants were called together and told to stop parties.

A more recent incident involved a party planned at Good Counsel, when someone sold a ticket to a high school student. The parents saw the ticket and called the LCB to complain. The LCB contacted the school and the party was cancelled.

The LCB came on campus last semester and called twice this semester to warn Neville of student violations. Neville said that "their (LCB) main focus seems to be on the selling of alcohol. Even though we do not sell at the door, any kind of pre-sale is a violation." Any party on campus is susceptible to being raided by the LCB. Rather than risk this and take the chance of being arrested, programming heads have complied with Neville's directives. Parties selling alcohol are no longer held at the University.

A dry M*A*S*H Celebration held on Feb. 19 was unsuccessful as far as attendence was concerned. No alcohol was served. According to Gail Jakelis, treasurer of the RSA Executive Board, the RSA has "changed its aim to attract more people." The RSA had

Field House Plan Delayed

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Villanova's new Field House plans were turned down by the Radnor Planning Commission at a meeting on April 4. The 4-to-2 denial favored that the Field House parking plans did not comply with the code requirements for parking. University plans did not provide ample space for the potential number of cars which would park for a weekday basketball night game.

Initial estimates showed only 400 parking spaces would be in use in the four parking lots. New estimates show the figure of used spaces to be 1,250. The figure difference is attributed to the additional 1,000 parking permits the University has sold and the additional 33 vehicles now using the lots mainly as a "storage bin."

Villanova has received an extension on the plans, "which means just a little more delay," according to the Rev. George Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president. The University will be back to the Planning Commission before May 27, the compromised extension date.

The extension date set at May 27 brings a total of 60 days of extension for action on the Field House plan, which began the approval process in January.

"We gave the extension to the Township and they set the date," said Burnell.

The University will probably have alternative parking plans within a week to a week-and-a-half and will present the plans sometime in the next few weeks, according to Burnell.

The new parking provisions should comply with the planning commissions expectations. However, the commission is only an advisory committee and its recommendations do not have to be accepted by the Radnor Board of Commissioners.

Burnell commented to a local newspaper that the University went so far as to tell the planning commission that the University would restrict ticket sales at the Field House to 5,400 during weekday nights. The new Field House seating capacity will be 6,400.

The University is seeking several options to expand parking facilities. Among the options are other permanent spaces for overnight parkers, "urging" night students to park somewhere other than the four lots needed for the Field House use and putting together a whole new parking package in which the University would attempt to improve parking conditions throughout the entire campus.

The University did provide a "satisfactory" pedestrian safety plan for the township commission, turned down unacceptable plan two weeks ago. The new pedestrian safety plan includes 1,500 feet of fencing along the East and West Lancaster Avenue lots and controlled pedestrian sidewalks on both sides of Ithar Avenue.

Relocation of the existing sidewalk on Ithan Avenue closer to the crossing signal and fence is also included. One other change was the concrete curbing and sidewalks adjacent to Ithan Avenue going back from the existing drive to be extended to the proposed new entrance to the Field House.

The Film Series will continue through April 25 with screenings of Louis Malle's Atlantic City — 4/17-18, Girl Friends — 4/20, and Fassbinder's Lola — 4/24-25.

Housing Lottery In Phase Three

By TIM GALLAGAN

The deadline for registration for phase three of the housing lottery is today, April 8. Anyone wishing to sign up to participate must be registered by today.

A new addition to the housing lottery, phase three allows for participants to obtain the more desired rooms which are available on campus.

The new computerized method of conducting the lottery caused several problems, the most common being that some current juniors were not assigned numbers.

The problem was blamed on the computer mistakenly classifying these juniors as seniors, and therefore assumed that they would not be returning and failed to assign them numbers. These people, while legitimate juniors by the number of completed academic years, have been classified as seniors because of the number of credits they have earned.

The Office of Residence Life assigned these people their numbers by an equally fair random number table. This method, while taking care of the people who were not assigned numbers, allows for duplicate numbers to be assigned. The computer was supposed to eliminate this problem.

Christopher Janosik, director of residence life.

Cutoff points are the only thing affected by duplicate numbers. When deciding on the cutoff points, Residence Life must lower them by the number of duplicates assigned.

A major problem facing the upperclassmen wishing to live on campus is the number of incoming freshmen housed on campus. The actual number of freshmen has not changed, the percentage who wish to live on campus has gone up.

Freshmen entering Villanova in 1983-84 are guaranteed housing for two years, and this policy remains intact as of now, but the new University bulletin states that this rule may be subject to change.

The new computerized housing lottery also offers some benefits. There are no longer lines during phase one, phase two moves more orderly, and phase three can be offered.

Phase three is a big help to those who are already on campus for the next year, but does nothing for those already lotteried off. Priority during phase three is again given to current juniors with the lowest numbers.

The waiting list for those who were lotteried off was made up on March 15. Priority on this waiting list is given to those who have been on it for a year.

Watt's Resignation Favored By Political Union

By RUTH THOMAS

The Villanova Political Union supported the resolution, "This house favors the resignation of Secretary of the Interior James Watt" at their March 28 meeting. Mr. Ben Sinclair, guest speaker for the evening and a member of both the Executive Committee of the Sierra Club of Pennsylvania and the National Board of Directors for the Defenders of Wildlife, called for Watt's resignation, joining 40 members of Congress and 84 newspapers across the nation.

In addition to the reactions of Congress and newspapers, Sinclair noted that six states have filed suit in response to Watt's favoring of Continental Shelf Drilling.

Watt's concept of making national parks benefit all people, implying the park's necessary use for both asthetic and economic purposes (mining and mineral development), found no support with Sinclair, who considered Watt to be a man of "no redeeming value whatsoever."

Watt has been called before three House Committees to explain his policy initiatives, one of which cited him for contempt on grounds of failure to fully disclose information. Sinclair sees Watt as nothing more than a "party hack" who opens parklands and wildlife preserves to deserving Alaska Republicans who will then feed the coiffers of the Republican Senators from Alaska.

Despite an allotment in the federal budget three times that which Watt requested for the purchase and maintenance of parklands, the Secretary of the Interior feels we should curtail such spending until further notice and that he must turn over some of the existing national parks for mineral development. Sinclair noted that natural gas development produces contaminants which must be removed from the site and the McDonald's restaurants which Watt claims are needed to feed these developers produces litter.

The conservative delegation of the Political Union upheld the businessman's perspective by assuring the audience that strip mining land could be returned to forest when all mineral goals were achieved without threat to the natural order. Both the moderates and the liberals in the Union were curious to know how the conservative speaker supposed such a feat would take place and their fears were not allayed when it was determined that the United States must "intelligently exploit" its national parks.

Due to a lack of time there was no serious discussion of the issue of auto emission standards and their proposed changes.

Students Aided in Job Search

By SUZANNE REYNOLDS

"The Career Development Center appears to be placement oriented, although the center also sees the need to work with underclassmen to plan their academic programs better," according to Dr. Robert Stokes, director of the Career Development Center.

The center will begin the Value Program, Villanova Alumni Learning Experience, in the fall of 1983. This program will enable students to spend a half day with a Villanova alumnus in the alumnus' place of work. The Value Program will allow "underclassmen and other students who have narrowed their career choice to know more about their career," according to Stokes.

The Career Development Center is also "actively seeking ways to aid students for job search," according to Stokes. Special programs, such as workshops for dual career couples and "job-hunting" techniques for the liberal arts student, and on-the-site interviews are provided by the center.

Through "mock interviews" and preparations of resumes, the center helps students to improve their job search. According to Stokes, job placement of students is a result of on-campus interviews or by skills acquired through the career development center."

In 1982, approximately 77 percent of the Villanova graduating class obtained employment. Most jobs were acquired during the spring and summer months, according to Stokes.

This year, Stokes suggests a combination of job search techniques be used to find employment. Job placement in the fields of accounting, marketing and management will be more easily obtained, according to Stokes. Opportunities for employment on the fields of chemical and civic engineering are few.

This summer, Stokes and Dr. Zinner of the Mechanical Engineering Program will initiate a Summer Technical Employment Program, or STEP. This program will attempt to obtain summer employment for engineering students. Stokes became Director of Villanova's Career Development Center in August of 1982. Previously, he was Associate Director of Placement at the University of Maine and also a career counselor at Indiana University in Indiana.

Correction

In the March 25 edition of the Villanovan an error was made in the 'Senate Approves '83 Budget' story. It should have read: "Senator Justin Green proposed an amendment to make up for the 15 percent loss the faculty pay took back in 1970."

The Villanovan regrets the error.

Goode Discusses Democratic Race

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Political analysts are calling it the battle of the century in Philadelphia politics. The May 17 Democratic race will feature a two-candidate campaign that could very well decide who will run the City of Brotherly Love. The opponents in the race: W. Wilson Goode, former city managing director and previous two-term mayor Frank Rizzo.

Goode is the acknowledged front runner in this race that could reflect the future of the city's politics. A Goode victory could result in the seating of Philadelphia's first black mayor. A graduate of Morgan State University and the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, Goode has been a visible figure in Philadelphia, first serving on the Philadelphia Council for Community Advancement as president and chief executive officer, then as chairman of the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission, and from 1979, as Philadelphia's Managing Director in Bill Green's cabinet.

Recently, the Villanovan spoke with Goode at his Broad Street campaign headquarters.

The Villanovan:

"If a potential voter came up to you on the street and asked why he should vote for you for mayor, how would you respond?"

Goode:

"I would tell him that I am the person, based upon experience, based upon integrity, based upon training, and a sense of caring and compassion for people, that can lead this city into a strong future."

The Villanovan:

"You've said previously that neighborhood security is one of your top priorities. What will you do to see that through?"

Goode:

"A strong professional police department is number one: I emphasize professional because I think that we need professional officers on the street who are visible and are able to detect crime, potential crime in an area and to protect citizens; to prevent crime and to put more officers in uniform and move away from the soft jobs that they have now, the civilian jobs. They now perform jobs like typing, answering telephones and being part of the radio system. They should be put out onto the street.

"Secondly, there has to be a strong partnership between the neighborhoods and the police department. I believe very strongly in the town watch concept. It works.

"I don't know about Frank Rizzo in terms of crime. All I know is that he talks a lot about protecting the police department and I talk about protecting the citizens. I'm not sure now we differ but he's never, that I've seen, been a coherent paragraph on what his views are about safety in the city."

The Villanovan:

"You've received much praise for caring very strongly about the homeless, destitute people of the city. As mayor, what additional services would you like to see brought about?"

Goode:

"I would expand that program to make sure it is extensive enough to be able to cover all the people it should reach. The system is an excellent system. I would not add anything to it. There is a walk-in shelter, which houses about 150 people; it has a five-day evaluation — psychiatric, medical evaluation section, it has a psychiatric boarding house and there is a boarding home outlet system."

The Villanovan:

"Is there enough money being made available to keep the system afloat?"

Goode:

"Perhaps a half-million more dollars might be sufficient for the job. We're talking about next year having $1.5 billion dollars. There will be an increase in need when the first group of people are cut off of welfare but there is definitely an increase in the hunger of people in Philadelphia. All the cupboards ran dry the first few weeks in February."

The Villanovan:

"Concerning the Republican race, who do you see as the most qualified and formidable opponent?"

Goode:

"I think the person who would probably be the most formidable would be Tom Gola. Because he's a household word and a hero."

W. Wilson Goode, Democratic mayoral candidate.

The Villanovan:

"What about your arrangements for debates with Rizzo?"

Goode:

"There are differences. Rizzo would like very much to have it before a TV audience, which is staged, and with three TV reporters, which is staged, with the cameras. I want to talk to the people. I don't want to talk to TV reporters. I like reporters but I really don't want people to decide on the questions the reporters ask me. I'll go anywhere to debate. I'd go to South Philadelphia. I'd debate on Rizzo's turf."

The Villanovan:

"How much faith do you put in the political polls?"

Goode:

"They're good. I'm still ahead."

The Villanovan:

"You've been quoted as saying that Frank Rizzo is a "national embarrassment" to Philadelphia. Why?"

Goode:

"I said that? Where did I say that? Is that right? That's true, he is. Because of the way he is perceived. The worst thing that could happen to the city is to have Frank Rizzo return as mayor. The city would definitely take a step backward in the eyes of everyone outside of Philadelphia.

Student Elections

Student government elections will be held next Thursday and for the first time at Villanova, the leading contenders for Student Body President are two women students, both well-qualified for the position: Mary Beth Bogan and Laura Moreno. Both served as Arts Senators this year and bring extensive experience to their campaigns. All the candidates running for the various offices are profiled in the election supplement in this issue.

The previous two student government elections have been marked by allegations of misappropriation of campaign funds and penalties assessed to candidates. This year's campaigns have been relatively quiet as those vying for the various positions have concentrated on the issue confronting students and not with denouncing each other's efforts. The candidates are addressing the usual concerns Villanova student politicians love to exhort as important: extension of library hours, a student bill of rights, the visitation policy.

It is important that students vote in the student government elections. Students are responsible for the representatives they put in office and should examine closely the stand each candidate takes on various issues.

Pathetic student turnout at the polls is a veritabale trademark at the polls. In past years, student government was viewed as a well-intentioned but ineffective organization designed by the students. The last election saw less than one-quarter of the total student enrollment vote: a run-off was held to determine the presidential election.

This year there is no excuse for all eligible students not to vote. Student government, under the leadership of the current student body president, has proven to be a fairly effective organization, representative of the University students'. The Villanovan urges all students to vote. Most importantly, we ask the students to concentrate on the race for Student Body President. Student government is only as strong as the leadership.

Congratulations

Looking back on the 1982-83 season, it is safe to say that the success of the Villanova Basketball team proved to be an entertaining diversion for all members of the Villanova community. Hearty congratulations are extended to Coach Rollie Massimino, his assistants, Mitch Buonaguro, Marty Marbach and Paul Cormier and particularly, to the players themselves for their impressive achievements.

There were many highlights over the course of the year: the pre-season rankings, winning the Cabrillo Classic, beating Georgetown for the first time in more than a decade, toppling top-ranked North Carolina on national television, winning the Big Five title, tying for the Big East regular season championship, and finally, reaching the Final Eight for the second consecutive year. In short, all those who followed the exploits of this 24-8 squad were provided with many assorted thrills and memories.

The team admirably represented the University in its ventures across the country, and brought Villanova added prestige and recognition that it sorely needed. Perhaps most importantly, the team served as rallying point for all those associated with the University: students, faculty, administration and the many alumni.

Again, congratulations to the team for its accomplishments, and best of luck to the graduating seniors who have built the foundation for an annually successful program.

Goode for Mayor

It's W. Wilson Goode versus Frank Rizzo in the May 17 primary for the Democratic nomination for mayor of Philadelphia. What should be clear to all Villanova students who are Philadelphia residents eligible to vote that Goode is the logical choice for the nomination and most probably, the mayoral post.

Rizzo has made much of his claim to be a "new Rizzo," and a "wiser Rizzo." He is neither. His ideas, prejudices and political cronies remain the same. Philadelphia needs a man like Goode to turn the city around. Goode's record in politics speaks for him. Rizzo's record is against him. It's time for a Goode mayor.

Letters to the Editor

Alcohol Survey 'Misrepresentation'

To the Editor:

The Villanovan article on Alcohol Consumption (Feb. 11,1983) reported "that 84.2 percent of male students surveyed, and 15.8 percent of female students surveyed are drunk more than once a week while 63.6 percent of the men and 35.1 percent among the women claim drinking interferes with their class attendance."

This was a complete misrepresentation of the results of the Alcohol Survey of 1981 from which source the Villanovan got their figures. The survey was sent to 1,560 students. 562 replies were received.

In the survey, only 19 students of the 562 respondents respnded "Yes" to the question of whether or not they were drunk more than once a week. 16 of these students were male which represented 84.2 percent of the 19 respondents, and 3 females which represented 15.8 percent of the 19 who had responded. It must be emphasized that all together there were only 19 respondents from a group of 562.

In regard to the question concerning interference with class attendance, 77 students of the 562 respondents answered "Yes." These were 49 male students (63.6 percent) and 28 female students (36.4 percent) in this group. The percentages in all these cases concerned the male and female breakdowns of the actual number of the repondents and not percentages of the whole group of those who responded to the entire survey.

The Villanovan article completely overlooked that the survey reported 8.7 percent got drunk about once a week. The total number surveyed was 562.

Rev. Frank A. Farsaci, O.S.A.
Advisor, Off-Campus Residents

Editors Note: Fr. Farsaci has presented us with new information that wasn't given to the Villanovan for the article he refers to in his letter. Farsaci now notes that there were only 562 responses received from the 1560 surveys sent out. These responses represent less than one percent of the total enrollment at Villanova. Does this signify that the survey was actually incomplete? The Villanovan stands by its article based on the initial information given by Farsaci.

El Salvador Op-Ed Shallow

To the Editor:

I cannot believe that anyone who has the academic ability required for admission to this University could be so shallow when it comes to understanding current world problems. While I conclude that the two students writing on behalf of the "Campus Coalition on Central America" are genuinely concerned with the problems there, I cannot fathom their motivation for trying to disseminate such blatant misinformation.

It is not the least bit absurd to recognize that the Soviets do back such groups as the Sandanistas and the rebels in El Salvador. Their attempts to destabilize the region have been documented. Yet, CCCA charges that the Reagan administration is unable to substantiate those charges. Did anyone watch President Reagan's speech two weeks ago? He produced photographic evidence that the Soviets are introducing offensive weapons into Cuba, and other Caribbean nations. Regrettably, additional proof would likely compromise our national security. No one can do that just to show the world that "we" are right, and "they" are wrong. We're bigger than that.

My favorite part of the editorial was the statement referring to "political groups that are democratic and enjoy popular support, but are labeled Communists because they seek self-determination." Since the article was supposed to be about El Salvador, I assume that the authors were referring to the guerillas there. How democratic is an organization that used terrorism and threats in an effort to prevent Salvadorans from voting last year? "Vote in the morning and die in the afternoon." On the other hand, when you consider the huge voter turnout, how popular can these rebels be? Just whose "self-determination" are they seeking? Candidates representing the entire political spectrum were running, so why didn't the guerillas welcome the election?

Granted, many Central American nations are repressive. Unfortunately, most nations in this world are. In the case of Nicaragua, Somoza was indeed an oppressive tyrant. But the Sandanistas are far more so. The "revolutionary program of social reconstruction" that CCCA mentions in Nicaragua includes mass executions of "undesirables" because their political beliefs are not in line with government position. It also includes the genocide of the Indians in the eastern part of the country. Other examples of this reconstruction are the "new economic zones" of North Vietnam, or the terror of the Islamic Guards in Iran. This has also been the

"White America": No Black Success

Do you want your black brother to succeed?

The question which I have asked is clear, but the ramifications that it points to are extensive and intensive. I could ask numerous other questions that have already been asked, are currently being asked, and that will probably be asked in the future, but none can deal with the question of racism as the one I have asked above.

I feel it is time to stop asking. It is time for each and everyone of us to decide, within ourselves, what the best answer is. It is time to halt the plea of innocence and ignorance and deal with the question. You as a person are responsible for your actions. Do you feel responsible enough to make a life-long committment to helping someone other than yourself?

The answer does not lie in the minds and hands of blacks and minorities, but in the mind and hands of the multi-ethnic power structure better known as "White America." It is they who dominate the political, business, and educational institutions of America. It is also White America that lives as the majority and has formed society in the manner that serves its interests best.

Sometimes we forget that people of color are also Americans. They, like their (white) brothers, seek to live a respectable, creditable and meaningful life. They wish not merely to be an American citizen, but also a functionally productive citizen whose efforts will bring growth to America as it did in the earlier days of her birth. For as long as there has been an America there has been black Americans. But there is a difference between subscribing to a periodical and being a writer for it.

Black people have not asked to paint the White House black, but rather for equality. They seek not to make Philadelphia a black city, but rather a city where blacks feel welcome to live and are treated with respect. They look not for your pity but for your geniune concern and willingness to act.

They ask whites because it they who have dominated in America. The blacks have succeeded only as far as whites have allowed them to. In this age of advanced technology and higher education it is no longer a believeable myth that blacks are in any way inferior to their white counterparts. But still they are restricted from entering positions of power and prestige in alarmingly large numbers.

In the academic world the black is constantly battling not only the customary academic pressures all students face but also pressures from his (peers and) professors. He is oppressed.

The time has been too long now that blacks have been enduring the consequences that comes with being a minority for anyone to consider and care about. Unless serious eradications of these severe circumstances are begun, black people will only have one alternative. The seeds of frustrations have been sown, the fruit of which will be rebellion. Whites have remained passively indifferent long enough.

Black nationalism is certainly not the answer. Neither whites nor blacks wish for this to occur. The violence and unnessary discord and destruction it brings are wholly unprofitable and ugly. But what other alternatives are black people given? They have been put in a position where they must take by force what is rightfully theirs.

You must be honest with yourself now, because the answer you give to this question represents the key to race relations in America.

If your answer is no, then you favor racism and oppression of minorities. You've given your black brother few opportunities to pursue his own self realization. You have stifled him and made it difficult for him to make meaningful contributions to our community and the world. You've denied yourself and black people a more pleasant world to live in.

If your answer is yes, then you should and must consider the extent of your commitment. There is no neutral ground on which for you to stand. For those making a genuine commitment there is no turning back. You must begin here and now, this very minute. This decision requires maturity and for many changes have to be made. But with all growth comes change. Respect your black brother. Show him that you wish for him to succeed. You will see then, that he is . . . our black brother.

In light of the upcoming student government elections the Villanovan asked students, "How effective is the student government and how do you think it could be more effective?"

"It has gotten more effective this year. I think that Fr. Driscoll is listening a little more to the student government due to Tufano and his government."

Ann Clavin
Junior, Communications

"I think it is important to have someone who represents the student body because we deserve a say in what goes on at V.U. I think they do a fairly good job."

Andy Wozniak
Junior,

Greeks Bring Easter to V.U.

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Over 200 children in the Villanova area participated in an Easter Egg Hunt at Villanova on March 26. The Panhellenic and Inter Fraternity Council sponsored the event, inviting children from local churches, day-care centers, schools, and of Villanova faculty, administration, and staff.

The Easter Egg Hunt is the first community service project the Panhellenic and IFC has sponsored.

Initially looking into the idea, those involved realized there were no Easter Egg Hunts for the children in the area so took the opportunity to offer one.

"This community service is likely to be an annual event since the turnout was so successful," said Gary Bonas assistant director of student activities.

"We had the potential to draw so many children because the publicity was good," added Bonas.

Members of the Greek organizations colored 1,200 hard boiled eggs for the Easter Egg Hunt and also hid 100 golden colored eggs with chocolate Easter candy to be awarded to each child who found a golden egg.

Every fraternity and sorority hid a silver egg with their name on it and the child who found it received a special gift donated by the group. Gifts donated ranged from a sorority hat or a fraternity jersey, to a chocolate Easter Bunny.

Bonas said he was very pleased at the way the Greeks cooperated and worked together to hold such a successful event.

"It is important that people know we are willing to take the time to help the community," said Bonas. "We want to generate the service aspect of the Greeks into the community."

The Easter Egg Hunt was an opportunity to bring the children out," said Thomas Tocci, a Villanova employee who brought his three children to the event. "There were so so many prizes. Even the adults had fun!"

Debate, Elections Set for Student Government

Villanova student government elections to decide the 1983-84 Student Body President, as well as University Senate and various committee seats, will be held April 15 with the winners to be announced that night in Dougherty's West Lounge.

The polls will open in the Connelly Center Cinema at 9 a.m. and close at 5 p.m. The debate among the four presidential candidates will be held April 13 at 12:30 p.m. in the Cinema.

The candidates for Student Body President are two Arts Senators, Mary Beth Bogan and Laura Moreno, Patrick Leahy and Joe McColgan. Qualifications for election to the office include having a 2.0 cumulative grade point average and to be in good standing with the University with no disciplinary probation.

Also to be elected April 15 are 11 representatives for University Senate seats; three for arts, two for commerce and finance and one each for sciences, engineering, nursing, graduate school, law school, and University College. Senate candidates must meet similar qualifications for election.

To be nominated for Student Body President, the four candidates had to obtain a petition signed by at least 10 percent of the enrollment of undergraduates, University College, graduate school and law school students collectively in order to be placed on the ballot. For University Senate seats, candidates were required to obtain a petition signed by at least 10 percent of the enrollment of the appropriate college or division.

Election to Student Body President will be based on the necessity of receiving a 40 percent plurality of the total votes cast. If no candidate receives a plurality, a run-off election will be held between the two candidates receiving the two highest totals of votes cast. The run-off election, if necessary, will be held April 19.

University Senate seats will be won by the candidate receiving a simple plurality. Campaigning began yesterday and will be closely monitored by the Election Commission. Last year, two presidential candidates received penalties for campaign violations covering money allocations and use of materials.

A total of 26 candidates are vying for the University Senate seats. In addition, candidates for seats on the Academic Policy and Rank and Tenure Committees will be elected. The candidates must be in the top 10 percent of their college class and have at least a second semester sophomore status at the time of election.

When people in Phoenix, Ariz., Tallahassee, Fla., and Memphis, Tenn. write about Frank Rizzo, they write things like 'Big Bambino Returns' or 'The Cisco Kid Returns.' If we could somehow take and have the people in this city see him as people around the country see him, it would be much better and it would be to my benefit to have that happen because it's truly negative around the country."

The Villanovan:

"Are there racial tensions in Philadelphia?"

Goode:

"Yes."

The Villanovan:

"How would you alleviate these as mayor?"

Goode:

"By basically having people understand there's no need to have racial tensions. I think that the best way to bring that about is to make sure that I'm elected mayor and when I'm elected mayor, it will send a clear signal to all parts of the city that a person can be accepted on his own merit and without regard to the color of his skin."

scheduled a party on April 15 but this was cancelled and has Wellness Week planned as a substitute.

The Villanova Union has also been affected. There was a Victory Celebration planned in the Field house on Feb. 11 after the Pittsburgh basketball game. According to Chris Stork, programming director, "it was not worth taking the chance so the post-game party was cancelled." She commented, "We (the Union) have a commitment to social life on campus and will continue to schedule events, however, they will be without alcohol. Realistically, this will affect attendance."

The Pennsylvania state law prohibits the use of alcohol by those students under 21 years of age. Villanova University is legally bound to act in accordance with this law.

According to Stack, "The cry that we (the University) inhibit social life is not accurate. Many students have not taken responsibility for their free time. They look to the University to provide free drinks because they equate having a good time with drinking. Villanova has no obligation to provide students with a place to drink. Students cannot expect constant entertainment."

Since the LCB plans to continue strictly enforcing the Pennsylvania law, the University plans to comply.

pattern with revolutions that have occurred in countries such as Cuba and the Soviet Union itself. So let's stop cloaking the real issues behind phrases such as "repression" and "U.S. interests." Where injustice exists, it needs correcting, but not by a series of bloody and violent revolutions that kill large numbers of innocent people. There are two groups who profit from these tactics: the Soviets, and the tyrant who replaces the tyrant.

El Salvador has many problems right now. Their government does leave a lot to be desired. But they've taken their first steps toward freer and more democratic government. Right now, they need help. Not at the expense of justice (i.e. the American nuns), but rather in conjunction with a more equitable system that will slowly emerge. Negotiating with terrorists only encourages other terrorists. This leads to both anarchy and suffering. No one should welcome that outcome.

The Monroe Doctrine was a warning to all colonial powers that we would not tolerate any more colonies in the Americas outside of then-existing ones. Unfortunately, since Soviet involvement in Cuba began in 1959, it has gone out of the window altogether. Russian fighter jets and naval bases are neither needed nor welcome in this hemisphere, and Soviet national security doesn't depend upon them. The only military committments in this region that they have are to countries with regimes that they helped to install, so their support is "artificial." CCCA is concerned with several billion dollars annually. Is that perhaps less "artificial" than our support for a freer nation?

We need to reaffirm the Monroe Doctrine in 1983. Our security and Central America's freedom depend upon this. No one needs a "Salvadoran Missle Crisis" during the coming years.

Business Minor

Like most students who enroll in the college of arts and science, I wasn't quite sure what I wanted to do for a living. It always seems that those students in the colleges of nursing, engineering or business have a much better idea of what their career goals will be. How someone can choose such a specific area of study at such an early stage in life is something that has always puzzled me. I opted for the broader liberal arts education, not wanting to limit myself to a technical major which I might eventually dread.

While not wanting to compromise the advantages of a liberal arts education, I also recognized the importance of having some background in one of the more technical fields of study, such as accounting, computer science, engineering or nursing. I investigated the possibility of having a business minor to compliment my major in English, only to be told of numerous restrictions and accreditation regulations prohibiting me from enrolling in this program.

The Villanova University Bulletin stipulates that entrance into the business minor program is restricted to members of the Class of 1983 and following classes. The number admitted to the program will be restricted and entrance will be determined on a competitive basis. The number currently being admitted to the business minor program is approximately fifty students a year, with a grade point average of at least 3.0.

Considering the fact that arts and science students, like all other students, pay in excess of $4,500 a year to attend Villanova, I believe that the individuals responsible for implementing the business minor program are committing a blatant injustice to students interested in enrolling in the program. As there are 49 students presently on the waiting list, the program should be expanded or rejected for one that better suits the needs of the student body.

I don't think it would go over too well at the college of commerce and finance if the English department decided to restrict the number of C&F students admitted to their minor program, or even worse, determine entrance on a competitive basis. Why then, does the college of commerce and finance restrict the number of students admitted to the business minor program? The secretary to the dean of arts and science vaguely explained, "The accrediting agency is making stricter regulations and monitoring them closely. One of those regulations is a limited number of non-business majors in all business classes."

If this is the case, then the very basis for which the accrediting agency determines its regulations should be questioned. How can the existence of arts and science students in business classes in any way detract from the quality of these classes? The answer is that it wouldn't. In fact, the presence of arts and science students in business classes would probably improve the standards of education in such classes.

It is time for all students interested in enrolling in the business minor to collectively take action. The reason for such restrictions on entrance into the business minor program seems to be related to the problem of accommodating such a great demand in the program. This does not seem to be a valid reason for restriction. The college of commerce and finance should increase its staff to satisfy the demand for business minors by non-business majors. After all, it is in the college of commerce and finance that we learn about supply and demand.

Examining Communication Trends

By NANCY C. ALBERICI, PETER BERKERY, JAMES H. DeLORENZO

"The Metamorphosis Of Media," a week-long honors forum, focusing on the various influences of journalism was held the week of March 21.

Various prominent news personalities presented their views concerning the writing, production and preservation of the news.

The first lecture featured Frank Traynor, producer of Channel 3 News, and Michael Pakenham, associate editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer, discussing the topic, "What news is good news?" The two newsmen debated the differences between the two forms of communication. Pakenham claims that the competition between television and newspapers is a "marvelous mythology," and stated that the two are separate entities, independent of one another. Traynor, conversely, feels that television newsmen are constantly aware of the pressures associated with getting the "big story" before the newspapers. "If a front page story beat my 11 o' clock news, I want to know why," explained Traynor.

Traynor pointed out that TV often doesn't allow the time to cover news in depth. "We are a rapid-fire headline service." Pakenham then cited the extensive research involved in serious newspaper articles. "When the danger first became apparent at Three Mile Island, we had 28 seasoned reporters on the scene within 24 hours."

Michael Pakenham

In order to promote credibility within the television industry, seasoned journalists are often hired, according to Traynor. "It happens all over town. The top television management people have their roots in newspapers."

Noted Philadelphia Inquirer columnist, Clark DeLeon commented on his daily feature, "The Scene," on the third day of the lecture series.

"My column tries to reflect the attitudes of the people who went to college in the late '60 s and early '70 s, "Everyone took themselves so seriously," claimed DeLeon.

DeLeon's quirky sense of humor often reveals itself in his column. Longtime readers are familiar with his crusade to save the minces that are made into mince pies during the Christmas holidays; a controversial column on the "wimpiness" of the name Larry; and tales of his Catholic school days.

"Everyone has a Catholic school story, especially here in the most conservative archdiocese in the history of the universe," DeLeon explained. "Occasionally I write about it and invariably I get into trouble.

"I wasn't planning to make this a career," DeLeon concluded, "but the unpredictable nature of the column keeps it interesting and I can't think of a better job."

Following DeLeon's presentation, Edwin Newman, NBC commentator and author, discussed the debasement of the English language.

"Millions of Americans are being cheated because they have never been led to understand the pleasure and satisfaction that comes from using English imaginatively and precisely," declared Newman.

According to Newman, much of our language is not only "awkward," but it "groans with false dignity." Most Americans, said Newman, speak with an air of "pomposity," in order to impress their peers.

Newman attributes his precise usage of the English language to his willingness to pause and think about what he wants to say before he actually conveys his message. However, the seemingly infallible NBC commentator admitted, "I make mistakes, sometimes."

V.U. Singers to Perform On Summer European Tour

By CATHY GROODY

This summer the Villanova Singers, along with the singers at the College of New Rochelle, are packing up their many talents and taking them along on a two-week tour across Europe.

Leaving from New York on May 31, the singers will be traveling to such places as Frankfurt, Rothenberg, Munich, Salizberg, Venice. Cortina D'Ampezzo, Innsbruk, Vadrez, Lucerne, Interlaken and ending their singing tour in Heidelberg, Germany.

The President of the Villanova Singers, Fran Halcovage and the director of the singers at New Rochelle arranged the tour along with Education Travel Experiences, Inc. E.T.E. is also responsible for many of their concert arrangements.

"We see this as a perfect opportunity to go to Europe," said Duane Siberski, Treasurer of the Singers. "It's a perfect time in our lives when we will be able to get most of us together to do something like this."

The Villanova Singers, an organization which began in 1954 by Howard Gill Reuschlein was established for the purpose of singing all types of music and enriching the cultural life of the community. Today, under director, Michael Luisi and moderator, the Rev. Edward Hamel, O.S.A., the Singers have performed at such colleges this year as Chestnut Hill and Chatham College in Pittsburgh. They have also performed local concerts this year at Parents' Weekend, Homecoming and a Christmas concert with the Villanova Woman's Glee Club. The singers will also be performing a Spring concert with the Glee Club on April 17.

It is the second time in the history of the Singers that they as a group will travel overseas. Four years ago, the singers went to Poland.

Throughout the European tour, the singers will be performing a variety of songs. They will have a mixture of religious songs such as "Ave Maria" by Bruckner as well as spiritual songs like "Ain't a' that Good News!"

"We are interested in bringing music to music," said John Timko, tour director and next year's president of the Singers. "We plan to sing music they normally don't hear over in Europe. It would be defeating the purpose if we went over there and began singing German folk songs or all the other songs they're more familiar with." Along with the several religious and spiritual pieces, the singers intend to sing show songs such as "Hello Dolly" and "Oklahoma."

The funding for the European tour was partially obtained through alumni along with other fund raisers. The Singers published a small booklet on the 1982 Villanova Singers and sold Singing Valentines which in itself was very successful.

The 17-day concert tour will travel through five European Countries (Germany, Austria, Italy, Leichtenstein, and Switzerland). It provides superior class hotels as well as English-speaking (multi-lingual) escorts throughout the tour. In Venice, there will also be special sight-seeing tour with local professional English speaking guides.

The tour has been carefully planned by the Educational Travel Experiences Inc. Each day in Europe will consist of continuous sight-seeing from St. Jacob's Church in Rothenberg to the Mirabell Gardens in Salzburg. Their final performance will be in Heidelberg. It is a once in a lifetime opportunity for the Villanova Singers as a group to share a little culture with the people in Europe the best way they know how as well as bring a little of Europe back with them.

Subliminal Sex Stirs Subconscious

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Traditionally, the purpose of advertising was "to inform" the potential buyer of a product to be sold. However, in recent years, it appears that in many instances, advertisers have cast aside the classical purpose and have adopted the more aggressive format and tactics of undue influence and persuasion. Also, advertisements have taken on a more overt use of sex, which is the standard appeal to sell most anything, using subliminal techniques.

This was the topic of the lecture and slide presentation by Dr. Benedict A. Paparella, professor of philosophy at the University, titled "Sex in Subliminal and Unethical Advertising." The lecture, held March 22, was sponsored by the Villanova organization for women.

Paparella emphasized Freud's theory that humans have two basic drives or appetites which have to do with creation, or sex, and death. While many people feel that the Freudian death wish theory may be farfetched, few would deny the influence of sex on human behavior. But if you believe in the death wish theory, each of us expresses this in a different way. Smokers ignore the cigarette package warning, drivers play chicken on the road, obese people continue to eat sweets in spite of the doctor's warnings, and young people who refrain from eating all seem to substantiate Freud's claim.

According to Paparella, it was Jung who felt that many of the things which are suppressed into the subconscious mind are represented by signs and symbols. Symbols of death include skulls, animal cadavers, fetuses, wolves, and ravens. These are placed in ads in the shadows or reflections of items by the airbrushing technique. The goal is to stimulate the unconscious mind. This technique can most often be found in the ice cubes in liquor advertisements.

The hope of the advertisers is that by way of the signs and symbols which represent those things which have been suppressed into the subconscious mind, the wish for these many desired things will be stimulated at the same time one is reading the ad which makes a connection with the unconscious.

Many times one wonders why the large manufacturers who could well afford to change their advertising weekly, keep a specific ad for many months at a time. The answer lies in the importance of repeated stimulation of the subliminal symbol with the particular product. Unless one is an avid "name brand" buyer, chances are that one can be influenced into buying products by use of the subliminal technique.

Paparella said the jury is out on whether this type of advertising is truly effective. Some psychologists say yes, some say no. Much more research must be conducted before definitive judgements can be made. However, if effective, the technique does not promise the consumer good news. Such methods would constitute an unethical, if not illegal, manipulation of one's mind and would be a violation of one's right to privacy and free choice.

By DANIEL REGAN

Twenty years ago this week the papal encyclical, Pacem in Terris was published. Unlike the encyclical, Humanae Vitae, Pacem in Terris did not refer to the morality of birth control or abortion. Thus, the American clergy responded to its content with the same lack of interest it had displayed to several other encyclicals that focused on the problems of social justice. The moral issues surrounding human life and human sexuality are as critical as any issue. Yet their personal universality renders them supra-political. This is not true of the moral issues of social justice and world peace. These are essentially political, social, and economic.

Much to the chagrin of those social philosophers, economists and political scientists who claim amoral status for themselves and their disciplines. Seven of the last eight papal encyclicals have focused on the moral imperatives in establishing social justice around the globe as the only basis for the possibility of world peace. The obvious reason for this continued emphasis by the papacy is that the popes have maintained, for more than one hundred years, that the pursuit of justice is the most important moral concern of our time.

It is fitting, therefore, that the Catholic colleges and universities in the greater Philadelphia area are using the week of April 10 through April 16 to focus our attention on a call for peace on earth. Villanova will participate in an ecumenical prayer service on April 10 at the Cathedral with our fellow undergraduates, faculty and administrators from other campuses.

This week will give us time to pray for peace on earth and reflect on the real contributions that each of us is capable of making in the quest for the peace of Christ in our world.

He is risen! As Christians we have recently reaffirmed our belief in Christ's resurrection. Each of us must search within ourselves for ways to channel the infinite redemptive grace made available by that resurrection of the son of God.

The moral gnomes of our world would have you swallow their paternalistic bilge that labels all those who seek justice on earth as naive, unrealistic, misguided do-gooders. Their political strategists label all anti-war, anti-poverty advocates as the communists dupes. All dissent gives aid and comfort to our enemies we are told, yet, we know that tyrants always fear countries strong enough to allow their people to govern and that require their representatives to serve their people, not their ideologies.

God so loved this world that he sent his son to redeem it. God decided against conquering it with an army of His own. Some believe that God opted for a non-violent solution to the world's problems knowing just what He was doing. There is much more to peace on earth than the absence of war. Where there is injustice, the disposition to war exists and as Hobbes pointed out that is the same as war. Let us reflect. Let us be peacemakers in the real sense.

R.S.A. Works On Wellness

By PETER BERKERY

For the past several weeks, the [illegible]" Resident Student Association has been working on a campus-wide event that would appeal to all Villanova students. The R.S.A. executive board felt that the students at Villanova needed a different kind of spring event, one that, according to treasurer Gail Jakelis, would be both "fun and practical." "Wellness Week," starting tomorrow with a Fun Run at 8 a.m., will be the culmination of a lot of hard work and concern for the students on the part of the R.S.A.

Wellness is a lifestyle that, according to Donald B. Ardell, author of High Level Wellness, encompasses four dimensions. Awareness of nutrition, self-management, environmental sensitivity and fitness, all combine to create self-responsibility. The aim of "Wellness Week" is to make students aware that there is more to life than studying and drinking beer. "There has to be a balance," says Jakelis.

"What's learned in college is carried into life," states Jakelis who feels that "Wellness Week" is a wonderful opportunity for students to learn more about themselves and their community. She insists that wellness is not a fad, but rather a new definition for "health" that can be incorporated into our lifestyles.

"Wellness Week" will feature prominent lecturers on the subjects of holistic health and improving relationships. Monday night, Elliot Diamond will discuss biofeedback techniques, to be followed by a health food reception. The athlete's point of view will be examined on Tuesday night with a special guest speaker to be announced.

Dr. Emily Binns of the Religious Studies department is scheduled to speak Wednesday night on interpersonal relationships, followed by Maureen Terzian from the College of Nursing speaking on "Assertiveness and the College Student."

The highlight of the week will be the "Fitness Festival" in the Field House on Thursday. Various community organizations, from Alcoholics Anonymous to Weight Watchers will sponsor booths. Also featured will be the Radnor Township Police explaining the intricacies of their breathalizer. All students are encouraged to attend as many events as possible in order to get the most out of "Wellness Week."

CANCER. NOT KNOWING THE RISKS IS YOUR GREATEST RISK.

A lot of people think cancer is unbeatable.

That simply isn't true. In fact, over two million people have had cancer and survived to lead happy, normal lives.

And not only can cancer be beaten, it can also be prevented.

There are definite precautions that have been proven to decrease your risk of getting certain cancers.

Talk with your physician about how often you need cancer-related checkups.

Ask your local American Cancer Society to send you a free booklet about cancer risks.

Learn the facts about cancer.

And make not knowing the risks, one less risk.

Foreign Film Presentation

By STEVEN HELMETAG and GREG MIZII

The Villanova Cultural Film Series will present Das Boot April 10, 11 in the Connelly Center Cinema of Villanova University. David Jones, an assistant professor of communications at Drexel University, will be the featured speaker. "The Cinema of Claustrophobia" is the basis for Jones' lecture, which will take place immediately after the Sunday evening showing of the film.

Jones feels that the Villanova Cultural Film Series is a valuable educational program offering first class films and the opportunity for intelligent group discussion. Das Boot is one of eight movies offered in the Spring series dubbed Gender/Genres. The films are shown at 3:30 and 7 p.m. on Sunday and again at 7 p.m. Monday.

Das Boot, a 1981 German adventure film directed by Wolfgang Petersen, is both original and exciting and is a perfect example of the quality movies of modern day Germany. Jones feels that the best German films are superior to the best American films because our latest films tend to lack originality.

Jones commented that "the German cinema of today deals primarily with four or five fantastic directors, each with his own distinctive style." Wolfgang Petersen is one of these select few.

In his lecture, Jones plans to compare and contrast Das Boot to earlier war movies by explaining the differences in attitude the Germans have in this film as opposed to the typical American war movie, "In Das Boot, the Germans exhibit a sense of sentimentality unmatched by the majority of other films dealing with war," said Jones. Technical aspects also play a major role, particularly the use of numerous different camera angles and the use of sound effects. According to Jones, "sound effects play a larger role in this movie than in almost any other movie."

Jones, who has taught film theory courses at Drexel for the past six years, has been involved with several films including Wild Horses, a PBS documentary, and The Dutch Connection, in which he wrote the script. He also has written a book concerning the National Film Board of Canada entitled "Movies and Memoranda." His academic specialty is the documentary film and he holds a Ph.D. from Stanford University.

Sunshine Day Seeks Help From Villanova Students

By BARBARA SIMON

"Bring sunshine and joy into the lives of children who ordinarily wouldn't have this kind of a chance," said Sister Teresa, service coordinator of the Social Action Committee. Villanova volunteers are needed to spend a few hours with a special child on April 16 for the 5th annual Sunshine Day. One volunteer per child is desired in order to facilitate a one-to-one relationship; a relationship these children are deprived of. The needy children from ages five to thirteen, emotionally disturbed and socially disadvantaged, are from Philadelphia area institutions.

Sunshine Day will be held at St. Mary's field. There will be the Villanova University Band, magicians, a puppet show, a petting zoo, pony rides, clowns and Walt Disney characters at this event. Some of the games include a ring toss, football throw, and a chance wheel game where the child picks a color. There will be face painting, relay races, a scavenger hunt and a tug of war. Volunteers are needed to help set up (9 a.m.) and volunteers to play with the child from 11 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Prizes include hoola hoops, whiffle balls, silly puddy, slinkies, harmonicas and junior backgammons. The Radnor fire and police departments will have a demonstration for the children.

Interested volunteers can call 645-4075 or go to the Social Action Office in 121 Tolentine. There will be a meeting for the volunteers on April 12 in 215 Tolentine.

Election Supplement '83
Candidates: Issues and Ideas

the Villanovan

Editor's Note: The word "candidate" comes from the same Latin root word that forms words like "candor" and "incandescence." The Student Government and the Villanovan have compiled this supplement in order to give the presidential and senatorial hopefuls for this year's student body elections a chance to frankly, sincerely express their views, at the same time emitting a degree of brilliance and intensity as only candidates can do.

Presidential Timber. . .

Patrick J. Leahy

I firmly believe that the Student Government has the capability of becoming an even more effective organization than it has proven to be. The Student Government does not require a major overhaul, only some fine tuning by a person enthusiastic enough to lead it in the best interests of the students. The Student Government must be led by a person with fresh, innovative insight — one who is sensitive to the needs of all students, residents, off-campus residents and commuters alike. I am that person.

One of my main goals will be to continue the progress made by the current Student Government administration, particularly in the area of football. An overwhelming 96 percent of us voted in the Student Government-conducted survey that we would financially support the reinstatement of football. When the findings of the Board of Trustees' newly formed committee to review football are revealed next semester, I will act in the best interests of the students by continuing the momentum that we have established.

I also intend to focus my energies on the issues that are a continual concern to the Villanova student, such as the inflexibility of the existing meal plan and the myriad difficulties faced by off-campus residents and commuters. Through open lines of communication, together, I assure you that our voice will be heard by the administration.

When I came to Villanova, the orientation theme was, "You make the difference." By electing me student body president, together, we can make the difference.

Joe McColgan

Around this time every year, candidates for student body president begin to make improbable promises in regard to what they will or will not do. They remind us of their so-called "experience" in dealing with the administration and how they would have acted on certain occasions. My name is Joe McColgan and I too am running for student body president. Because of my deep concern with the role the student body must play in the decision-making process of our university, but without those "improbable promises," is why I chose to run.

Every year we hear the same promises over and over again. Promises like a revision of the alcohol policy, a less stringent visitation policy and an alternate meal plan. Well, as we are all aware, progress on these issues has gone nowhere.

Last year the current president said that the real issue was "experience," and that he had. Well, this year that issue shall be progress, and progress in the right direction. We have come so close to getting football reinstated that we must continue to communicate sensibly so that we can see football once again played on our campus. We must find ways to reduce tuition increases and increase student aid and to open up more, the lines of communication between the students and the administration.

Now, more than ever, we need someone who will put his words into action. The wheel is just now starting to turn and it must continue to do so. Thank you.

Laura Moreno

Last year as a candidate for arts senator I chose to make no promises; but rather, to represent you to the best of my abilities. I feel that I accomplished this, and while participating in the changes and implementations of the Senate, I worked towards an important goal of getting more of the students involved and interested in the happenings of the Senate.

This year I choose to run for student body president because I feel that experience in the Senate is a necessity for this job. We all like to see results but these results take time, which is limited for the Student Government. The time needed to get acquainted with the proceedings of the Senate could be better used to achieve results if the president already has Senate experience.

This year student government progressed by getting Senate approval to take action on many issues concerning the students. However, many were left unfinished. I want to see Student Government get moving immediately next fall to finish what we started this year, and move on to new issues.

I have been involved in working on these current issues in the Senate: football; visitation; student bill of rights; library hours; and on campus parties/activities.

In addition to finalizing these issues I feel strongly about gaining better communication and involvement between Student Government and the students; an improvement in the parking situation; more reading days; and better lighting on campus.

If you want immediate action on these goals, vote Laura Moreno.

Mary Beth Bogan

CLASS OF 1984
POLITICAL SCIENCE MAJOR
EXPERIENCE:
— Elected arts senator 1982-1983.
— Elected executive secretary by colleagues of Senate.
— Two year appointment as member of Student Life Committee of the Board of Trustees.
— Appointed member of Committee to Reinstate Football.

The success of the Student Government is reliant upon the members whom the students elect into office. Therefore, the students owe it to themselves to elect the most qualified candidate; one who not only has had previous Senate experience, but one whose consistent diligence has furthered the causes and progress of the needs of the student body. Serving as arts senator has enabled me to work closely for the restoration of football and strive for a feasible extension of the library hours, as well as work for the relaxation of the visitation hours.

In light of my past Senate experience, I have established a positive rapport with members of the administration and faculty. In addition, I have come to realize the Senate's full capacity as an institution which functions as a representative body for all students. I believe it is wrong to think that those candidates without any previous political affiliations, specifically Student Government experience, could be better equipped to be an effective and progressive president.

In closing, I ask you to vote on April 14. Take the time to choose who will represent you next year. I have tried to fulfill my commitment to you this year and hope that I am given the opportunity to do so next year as student body president.

Vote on Thursday, April 14

(Bring valid picture I.D. — Seniors can vote)

Arts Senatorial Candidates. . . . . (select three)

Chris Fletcher

My name is Chris Fletcher and I am running for arts senator. An important quality of any leader is the ability to communicate; I feel I possess this quality. To be an effective senator, one must act as a representative and convey the students' opinions to the administration.

If elected, my primary objective for the arts students would be two-fold. One, the initiation of a newsletter for all arts students which would inform them of all current issues. Two, with my experience in the foods services, I feel I can effectively introduce a new meal plan which would provide several alternatives and remain economically feasible.

To conclude, I feel I am qualified for this position because I am honest, dedicated, and have a sincere interest in the student body and especially my fellow art students. A vote for Chris Fletcher means a voice in the Senate.

Patrick D. Connell

My name is Patrick D. Connell. I am running for the office of arts senator for the College of Arts and Sciences. For three years, I've heard candidates promise to change the alcohol policy, abolish visitation, alter the meal plan and restore the football program. I simply cannot promise you these things. What I do promise is that as a senator I will be committed to developing the much needed lines of communication between the student body and the University administration. It is only then that such areas as visitation or the meal plan can be seriously and openly discussed. I am a second semester junior majoring in English and religious studies. Villanova has given me a great deal, and with your support I can return to this community a part of what I have received. Thank you.

Tim Vallace

During my first two years here at Villanova I have experienced many of the challenges of college life. I have chosen political science as my major, and have a great interest in government. I hope to represent you as an arts senator.

My goal is to make Villanova better suited to serve our needs. The only promise I will make is to serve diligently as a positive force in voicing our concerns effectively to the University administration. My involvement in organizations (such as the DKE fraternity, varsity tennis, Basketball Club, WKVU) provide me with a diversified view of the happenings of Villanova. I am eager and confident to serve as a representative for you the students. Vote Tim Vallace, arts senator.

Daniel O'Connell

I would like to share with you some of my responsibilities as arts senator if elected. First of all, an arts senator is a representative of the student body, not a delegate. In other words, I am elected to represent my constituents, not to express my own personal views without even considering the student population.

I believe the main problem in our student government is not necessarily a lack of communication, but rather a lack of effort on behalf of the students themselves. So many times people vote one day in April and never even know who was elected to their respective offices. I believe it is the duty of all students to personally get involved and know who their senators are so if they have a problem they can go to that person and get results. That's my only promise. If elected, you will get results.

Jim D[illegible]

Through my campus activities and involvement in student organizations I have noticed that students have valuable opinions that they would like to voice, but until now they have not been encouraged to do so. It seems to me, that at the present time, the relationship between the student body and the student officers is not what it should be. As an elected officer, whether it be student body president or a Senate member, one should strive to support the views of the student body. As an arts senator, I feel my job would be to incorporate the ideas of the students with those of my colleagues and myself in the most productive way possible.

With the support and involvement of the students we can make the Senate a valuable asset to the University.

Mike Koribanics

On April 14, you will all have the opportunity to vote for representatives in your student government. This vote should be for the candidate that will best represent the interests of you, the voters. As arts senator I will work to the best of my ability to put the "student" back in Student Government. So when you vote, vote for someone who will work diligently for policies that will benefit the students. It is time for change at Villanova and with your help and support we can bring that needed change about. Vote Michael Koribanics, arts senator.

Burke Fishburn

My first impression of the Student Government at Villanova was not positive; S.G. seemed impotent, incapable of addressing or solving the problems of the student. That evaluation, however, severely misunderstood the value of S.G. It deserves the credibility of a responsible, effective representative group. And there has been an effort to give S.G. that accountability — I want to be a part of that effort.

My activities include the Honors Program, tennis, "Lynx" staff, NROTC, Political Union, Philosophy Club and Karate Club.

My political training is limited to the Academic Policy Committee and dabblings in socialistic uprisings within the NROTC unit. As a philosophy major I have contemplated the true meaning of a senatorial seat — now I want to pursue it. S.C. is not only of importance to me, but to the University, especially its students. For that reason I am asking your support, with a little humor, but much enthusiasm and sincerity.

Dan Capodilupo

My name is Dan Capodilupo and I am seeking the office of arts senator. If elected, I would conscientiously prepare for every meeting as I would an important examination. I am confident I will provide the responsible representation that this important job requires. The first goal I will be looking forward to accomplishing is encouraging the student senators to work together to promote one common cause — the students' interests. Secondly, I will be dedicated to facilitating the acquisition of business electives for liberal arts students. Thirdly, I will also be devoted to the publication of faculty evaluations for the specific purpose of upgrading the quality of the College of Arts and Sciences. Consequently, my goals are realistic and, if elected, I will fight for them.

Frequently, the student body has been accused of apathy. On April 14, don't display this apathy. Instead, devote one minute of your time and help me to help you.

Jim Baker

Once again it's election time, when candidates put up signs and make meaningless campaign promises. I have chosen to enter into the senatorial race, not to make meaningless promises which I cannot keep, but to work hard for my constituents. I do not vow to restore football, or to rid Villanova of some of the archaic rules which exist. I mean to work for realistic goals which can be achieved. Goals such as improving our intramural program, and enhancing student activities are realistic and obtainable.

In my two years here I have taken on various responsibilities in our intramural department and within my own dorm. These experiences have taught me much in handling situations and organizing activities. Villanova apathy could no longer be a part of our school atmosphere, if you the voter, support me on April 14. We must be realistic. Thank you.

Chris Dunn

Too often you hear preposterous promises offered by students running for office. I will only make one promise, one of a credible nature: to voice the thoughts, beliefs, and needs of the student population to the administration.

Often there are changes in school policies that the students have no knowledge of, and when they do, it is too late for them to have an effective say. As your representative, I will voice the policy of the administration to the students; and more importantly, voice the opinions of the students to the administration.

I feel that the students must first establish a strong line of communication with the administration before they can even begin to deal with the issues at hand. I strongly believe that I am a candidate who will accomplish what he is elected to do — voice the needs of his constituents.

Start voicing your opinion now and vote!

May We Have The Envelope Please?

By JOHN F. LYNCH
and
DEAN C. BALSAMINI

The Academy Awards are once again upon us and this year's selections should prove to be rather interesting. We, the Villanovan Entertainment Editors, are putting our expertise on the line by presenting this year's nominees and predicting the winners.

In the best movie category, the nominees are "The Verdict," "Tootsie," "Sophie's Choice," "E.T.," "An Officer and a Gentleman" and "Gandhi."

Ben Kingsley

The best bet here is "Gandhi." It is a wonderful film but even more, it is an "important" film. Hollywood likes to look intelligent. Also, "Tootsie" is too light, while "Sophie's Choice" is too heavy. An "Officer and a Gentleman" is not worthy of an Academy Award in that it is a rehashed 1940s love story. Big money grossers like "E.T." never have a chance when it comes to Academy Awards. So the pick here for best movie goes to "Gandhi."

The nominees for best actor are Peter O'Toole for "My Favorite Year," Paul Newman, "The Verdict," Dustin Hoffman for "Tootsie," Ben Kingsley, "Gandhi," and Jack Lemmon, for "Missing."

O'Toole gave a fine performance but "My Favorite Year" was not seen by that by many people; therefore his exposure was minimal. Newman is the sentimental favorite but his performance in "The Verdict" was similar to several of his past efforts. Jack Lemmon's portrayal of a father searching for his son in "Missing" also received minimal attention and "Missing" came out late last year. Kingsley will not win for "Gandhi" because he is a newcomer and for the mere fact that "Gandhi" will win best picture.

The winner for best actor would have to go to Hoffman for his great performance in the comedy "Tootsie." Hoffman is the industry's best actor period, and his portrayal of both a man and a woman in the same film was magnificent. Hoffman is equal to any challenge.

In the best actress category the nominees are Meryl Streep for "Sophie's Choice," Jessica Lange for "Frances," Sissy Spacek, "Missing," Debra Winger, "An Officer and a Gentleman," and Jessica Lange and Kim Stanley star in "Frances."

Julie Andrews for "Victor/Victoria." Choosing the winner in this category is not as difficult as it may seem. Andrew's portrayal of a man in "Victor/Victoria" is quite good but falls short. Lange should win best supporting actress for "Tootsie," therefore her winning best actress will be a long shot. Winger's role in "An Officer and a Gentleman" is effective but not worthy of an Oscar. Streep should win best actress for her fine performance in "Sophie's Choice." The role of Sophie was particularly difficult in that she portrayed a woman plagued by memories of her suffering at the hands of the Nazis.

For best supporting actor, the nominees are James Mason for "The Verdict," Robert Preston, "Victor/Victoria," John Lithgow, "The World According to Garp", Louis Gossett Jr., "An Officer and a Gentleman," and Charles Durning for "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas." This is the easiest category in picking the winner. The clear favorite is Gossett for his memorable performance as the sadistic drill sargeant who torments Richard Gere.

The nominees for best supporting actress are Terri Garr for "Tootsie," Glenn Close, "The World According to Garp," Lesley Ann Warren, "Victor/Victoria," Kim Stanley, "Frances," and Jessica Lange for "Tootsie."

The pick here would have to be Jessica Lange for "Tootsie." Although Garr's and Close's performances were better, the Academy has to make-up for Lange not winning best actress for "Frances," which was clearly her better performance.

Finally, in the category of best director, the nominees are Wolfgang Petersen for "Das Boot," Richard Attenborough "Gandhi,"

Dustin Hoffman is Dorothy Michaels in "Tootsie."

Sidney Pollack, "Tootsie," Sidney Lumet, "The Verdict," and Steven Speilberg for "E.T." Speilberg is a genius whose direction of children is matched only by Francois Truffault. Also, "E.T." is a wonderful motion picture that will be with us for years to come. Speilberg's direction gave this movie a charm not unlike that of "The Wizard of Oz."

So there you have it, our predictions for this year's Oscars. Don't say we didn't tell you so!

Rise and Fall of The Wall

By MIKE MORAN
and BOB HERMAN

Apparently, Roger Waters has finally gone over the edge and is mired in the self-pity which pervades Pink Floyd's latest album, "The Final Cut." With the release of "Animals" in 1977 and "The Wall" in 1979, Water's dominance of the group became evident. But with the departure of keyboard player Richard Wright, Floyd has lost an intangible but significant aspect of their music.

The negativeness of "Animals" and especially "The Wall" was enough to turn off many people, although die-hard Pink Floyd fans saw these releases as measures of Waters' genius. When the movie "The Wall" came out, still more people were repelled by the "woe is me" attitude of a millionaire rock star.

Now Waters has created a "post-Wall" follow-up in "The Final Cut." The album is about the post-war syndrome from which many people suffer. The "Final Cut" is dedicated to the composer's father, Eric Fletcher Waters who was killed in action in Italy.

Waters is obsessed with death in war, as evidenced by the tracks titled "The Post War Dream," "The Hero's Return," "The Gunner's Dream" and "Two Suns in the Sunset."

Although Waters speaks for his whole generation, most of these people have been able to get "over the hump" and realize that life goes on. It is a shame that a musician of Waters' genius is so obsessed with such depressing material. His pessimistic attitude makes "The Final Cut" inferior to the standards that the group established with "Dark Side of the Moon" or even "The Wall."

The most redeeming feature of the release is the sound reproduction done with holographic sound. Listening to it on a very good stereo almost makes up for the negative tone of the album.

With the release of "Killer On the Rampage," maybe Eddy Grant will be recognized as a great musician and singer, in addition to having prowess as a songwriter.

While it has been a long time since Grant has done anything of note, like "Police On My Back," "Killer On the Rampage" gives credit to the suggestion that the genius of Grant is still in prime form.

There are no weak cuts on "Killer On the Rampage," and the album has already received critical acclaim on the radio with the single "Electric Avenue."

The songs are so well written, arranged and produced that the album should place high on the charts despite its non-commercial approach. In this way, "Killer On the Rampage" is similar to one of last year's best releases, "Love Over Gold" by Dire Straits. The album leaves the listener wanting more, which is surely a positive sign for Eddy Grant. The comeback trail appears wide open.

Apparently, Moore is Less

By CAROLYN MILLER

"Lovesick," written and directed by Marshall Brickman and produced by Charles Okun, is a film starring Dudley Moore and Elizabeth McGovern. It is a romantic comedy about a prominent, married psychiatrist who falls in love with his playwright patient. In reckless pursuit, the psychiatrist chases his young patient and, in the process, breaks his profession's ethical code of non-emotional involvement.

The setting for "Lovesick" is New York City: the upper East and West Sides, apartments, offices and the city streets. The movie was filmed entirely in Manhattan.

The main character of Dr. Saul Benjamin, played by Moore, basically leads a "hum-drum" existence. He is caught in a loveless marriage and routinely goes through the motions of treating patient after patient. Upon the death of an associate psychiatrist, Benjamin "inherits" as a patient McGovern's character of Chloe Allen, whom his partner had been treating.

From the first glance, Benjamin falls in love with Allen and becomes obsessed with her. It is from this point, that the already "luke-warm" film deteriorates. Moore's role as the psychiatrist is distorted and not believable. The doctor is as "sick" as his patients. He begins having visions of Sigmund Freud, jeopardizes his work for his passions and is in need of a psychiatrist himself.

With the exception of Benjamin, the remaining cast of characters is stereotyped. Benjamin's patients are neurotics: one is a nymphomaniac, one is frantic, one is gay and one does not talk. Benjamin does not seem to help them at all. There is also the Psychiatric Subcommittee on Ethics and Professional Standards, a domineering group of elder psychiatrists who want "their" doctors to conform, to be one of "them." They represent a symbolic, demented outlook on the "establishment."

'Kilroy Was Here' LP is a Styx Extravaganza

By BILL SANTOS

Styx is back after a three year period of silence. The album is entitled "Kilroy Was Here" and was definitely worth the wait. It contains the efforts of three of the five members of the group; the brothers Panozzo did not write any of the songs but keep a steady beat throughout the album with bass and drums.

The album takes on a futuristic theme and tells the story of a Dr. Everett Righteous, the founder and leader of the MMM (the Majority for Musical Morality). A law was passed banning all rock and roll. Robert Orin Charles Kilroy, a rock and roll star, breaks this law by performing music and killing an MMM protester. He is sent to prison. That was the past, but what about the present?

Jonathan Chance, is the rebel leader of an underground movement to bring back rock and roll. He saves Kilroy from MMM brainwashing which is taking place in the prison. With his help, Kilroy escapes, and moves throughout the city leaving coded messages for Chance. These messages take the form of backward sayings on the album itself. Chance, by following the codes, discovers where the old Paradise Theater is; the theater is now the site of Dr. Righteous' Museum of Rock Pathology. This is where Chance and Kilroy meet for the first time. This is the underlying plot behind the album, a story similar to Zappa's "Joe's Garage."

The album contains many different types of songs ranging from slow, sentimental to heavy metal. "Mr. Roboto" is the opening song and provides a hard foundation for the album and story to build upon. This song contains Japanese words to help portray the Robotos verbally. "Don't Let It End" is a love song that can be interpreted two ways: don't let our love end or don't let rock and roll end. De Young's voice rings out in this romantic "Babe"-like song. The transition from vocal to guitar solo is magical and shows the talent and tightness Styx has exhibited in the past. It is clear that De Young is a talented writer, but one must not overlook the ability of Tommy Shaw and James Young. Shaw wrote and sings many of the songs. Young's "Heavy Metal Poisoning" is a gut-ripping piece condemning rock and roll, as Dr. Righteous would. The album ends with a reprise of "Don't Let It End," leaving the listener hanging and waiting for a sequel album.

"Kilroy Was Here" is a true album in the sense that it tells a story, the way albums were meant to be written. The album is the best from Styx in a while. The songs are mystical; the theme is cult-like. The backward messages (wherever they appear) provide the clues to a search for the exact meaning of the album. This record is a magical representation of Styx at their prime with a talented De Young, who is the writer of the Kilroy story and also the keyboard player and lead vocalist of the band. The album is robust and shows a conglomeration of effort that went into forming this piece.

Lovesick

Allen's role as the paranoid, anxiety-ridden patient is also stereotyped. She comes from a small town and cannot handle the city's crowds. Concerning Benjamin's unfeeling wife, when he confesses his love affair to her, the problem is conveniently solved because she, too, is having an affair.

As for Moore the actor, this role parallels characters who can be seen in his last two movies. He plays a wealthy person in "10" and "Arthur" as well as in "Lovesick." The role Moore played in "10" is quite similar to his present role in "Lovesick." In both films, his characters are obsessed with each of the leading ladies, and his "drop-everything," fanatical pursuit of them is similar.

Perhaps the only humorous part of "Lovesick" is when Benjamin becomes drunk. It is becoming increasingly evident that Moore's best characters are those in drunken stupors, as his "drunks" in "10" and "Arthur" are quite amusing.

"Lovesick" is not a believable love story. Instead of a romantic comedy, it is a romantic disappointment. The pace of the film is slow and the action is nonexistent. "Lovesick" portrays the dilemma of a doctor-patient relationship as a common theme. The love affair between Benjamin and Allen is boring, lacking enthusiasm and creativity. "Lovesick" leaves the audience feeling heartsick.

Area Shows Offer Something for Everyone

DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Recently the Tower Theatre billed Randy Newman and the Roches. It would have been difficult to find a combination that could have been more appropriate. Both Newman and the Roches have a biting, sarcastic humor that was shared by everyone in attendance. Their humor could be misinterpreted as being pompous or condescending, but the crowd was filled with die-hard fans who were used to this type of treatment.

The Roches opened the show with one hour and 30 minutes of silly, cynical tunes. These three women have beautiful voices and their three part harmonies were just exquisite. Voices like theirs are not often heard in rock-n-roll, and it was a real treat. The most memorable song that they sang was the "Hallelujiah Chorus." In this song, the Roches awed their audience with each girl taking two different parts. With no accompaniment, this was a tribute to their true talent.

It was very interesting to have Randy Newman on the stage alone. It turned the evening into one that was very personal and intimate. The fact that he was alone and only playing the piano made his sarcastic and cynical lyrics easy to hear, and that much more appreciated. He, of course played "Short People," his criticism of short people. Newman demonstrated his versatility, however, by performing his romantic love song, "Marie." His humor was candid and spontaneous; this was especially evident in the song "Burn On," his tribute to the Cuyahoga River in Chicago. As he sang about the red moon rising, a red spot light rose on the curtain. His comment: "What do you expect for low budget?"

Some of the songs from Newman's latest LP that he performed were "I Love L.A.," "Christmas In Capetown," "Real Emotional Girl," and "My Life Is Good." "My Life Is Good" is a parody of life after "having made it." Newman's comment preceeding "Christmas In Capetown" (a song about that holiday in a black ghetto) was that it was a lot like Stevie Wonder's "Ebony and Ivory."

Newman and the Roches both performed well and were very enjoyable. It was an evening of fun and cynical humor.

If there were any questions as to whether or not Daryl Hall and John Oates are legitimate superstars, their recent Spectrum performance answered these quite loudly.

Hall and Oates have been churning out hits for over ten years now, but this was, surprisingly, their first time heading the Spectrum. The tour, which is in support of the H2O album, showed Hall and Oates to be "hard rockers" rather than the A.M radio image that they project. In concert each song sounded significantly more powerful than on vinyl, particularly "Family Man" and "Art of Heartbreak" (which will undoubtedly be their next hit).

Daryl Hall is obviously the band's leader and presence. Whether it was leading the crowd during "I Can't Go For That" or dancing and strutting during

The Roches

"How Does It Feel to Be Back" he had the crowd constantly on their feet. Hall is certainly versatile, playing trombone, keyboards and guitar.

The band behind Hall and Oates is first rate. Charlie "Mr. Casual" Dechant came close to stealing the show with his wailing sax, while T. Bone Wolk's thumping bass, made "Maneater" one of the evening's highlights. The duo did not forget to play such early favorites as "She's Gone," "Rich Girl" and "Sara Smile."

In a tribute to the city in where it all began for them, the boys from Temple University played a medley of Philadelphia-based hits, including, "American Bandstand."

Overall, it was an evening that proved Hall and Oates to be one of music's great rock duos. For shame Thomas Wolfe. You can go home again.

This Road Not Worth Taking

By BARBARA SIMON

Just for fun and a few laughs, go to see "High Road to China," a romantic, adventure film starring Tom Selleck and Bess Armstrong. The adventure is absurd, the romance is clean and comical, and overall this PG rated movie keeps the audience attentive and chuckling.

The plot is simple. A feisty heiress, Eve Tozer (Armstrong) hires a raunchy, air ace pilot named Patrick O'Malley (Selleck) to fly her on a wild-goose chase to find her millionaire father. It is imperative for Tozer to find her father (who disappeared five years ago) in 12 days or he will be declared legally dead by the courts in England. Set in the 1920s, Tozer is a rich, spoiled daughter, dressed like a flapper and desperate to find her father before his unscrupulously evil ex-partner gets all his money. Early in the movie, the ex-partner (played by Robert Morley), sets out to stop Tozer from reaching her father, even if he has to kill her. Bentik hires men to stab and shoot at Tozer in dramatic scenes, but every attempt fails as Tozer flies away with O'Malley, further East to her father's rescue.

Romance blossoms between O'Malley and Tozer as the movie progresses. Love is inevitable as the slow-paced romance encounters more antagonism than not, throughout the movie. O'Malley agrees to be hired only because he needs the money badly. He is scornful of Tozer's snobbish lifestyle and he doesn't hesitate to belch in front of her or humiliate her. In return, Tozer continually reminds him that he is working for her, and she is paying him an exorbitant amount of monev.

Like Burt Reynolds, Selleck has that macho physique mixed with a charming appeal. He drinks like a lush and flies a plane like an ace. Likewise, Armstrong is as bold a maverick as Selleck. She is daring, stubborn, equally attractive and also a great pilot.

The exquisite scenery in this movie warrants attention. Mostly filmed in Yugoslavia, many of the shots are seen from aerial views and the country is full of natural beauty. Adding to the humor of the movie is O'Malley's loyal mechanic and friend, Struts Boose, played by Jack Weston.

"High Road to China" is at best a superficial version of "Raiders of the Lost Ark." The comedy, danger and adventure are there but the quest is ridiculous and many of the scenes are just too contrived. It is a mediocre movie, somewhat funny and somewhat romantic. It would not be a bad idea to wait until 1985 to watch this movie when "High Road to China" will surely be on television.

PENN STATE

10 GOOD REASONS TO ENROLL FOR SUMMER SESSION AT PENN STATE/DELAWARE COUNTY CAMPUS

1. PENN STATE QUALITY
Okay, so we're still high on the National Championship thing, but with all objectivity, we feel we're No. 1 in a lot of ways — including our faculty and choice of majors.

2. LOW TUITION
"Low" tuition is a relative term, we admit, but let the numbers speak for themselves: $69 per credit for undergraduates, $87 per credit for graduate students.

3. TRANSFER OF CREDITS
Always look before you leap, but when you do, you'll probably find that Penn State credits transfer easily to most other colleges and universities.

4. LONG WEEKENDS
The earliest daytime class starts at 8:30 a.m.; the last afternoon class ends at 2:15 p.m. And there are no classes on Fridays. Isn't that thoughtful of us? Evening classes, twice a week, run from 6 to 8:30 p.m.

5. CONVENIENCE
We have an accessible suburban campus, plenty of parking, and we're served by public transportation. What more could you ask?

6. THE 'KILLER' COURSE
Face it: this course won't go away. You've put it off long enough now, right? Take it here this summer, when pressures are few and you can truly concentrate on whatever it is you think you don't want to learn.

7. THE 8-WEEK CALENDAR
An 8-week session allows plenty of time for vacation. And it's just long enough for the 'killer' course. (See No. 6.)

8. INAUSPICIOUS BEGINNINGS
So you blew one along the way and it has to be repeated? Try it here this summer in a relaxed atmosphere. Maybe you'll like the way we do it better.

9. NOCTURNAL OPPORTUNITIES
Allowing that most people like to catch a few rays and earn a few bucks during the summer, many credit classes are offered both day and evening. Same place, same price.

10. NEW FRIENDS
Our summer session traditionally enrolls scores of students from scores of colleges. Many of them have great bodies. And minds, too. Who knows? Anything can happen.

Registration: June 6 Classes start: June 8

Credit courses available in Business Administration, Science, Liberal Arts, Education, Nursing, Engineering, Computer Science, Administration of Justice, and Physical Education.

Wildcats Edge Iowa on Late Free Throws

By LARRY GOANOS

Everyone in the state of Iowa wasn't packed into Kansas City's Kemper Arena to see their beloved Hawkeyes square off against the Wildcats two weeks ago — it just seemed that way. But despite the huge, intimidating throng of Iowa rooters on hand at the Midwest Region semi-final game, the Hawks were still only allowed to place five players at a time on the floor and that was a number the Wildcats could deal with.

Sophomore Gary McLain sunk two clutch free throws with 23 seconds left in the game to give Nova a 53-51 lead and senior John Pinone added two more 11 seconds later to seal a 55-54 Wildcat victory.

"I think that's the hardest any team has played against us all year," said a visibly exhausted Pinone minutes after the triumph. "It was a typical NCAA Tournament game. It was played very aggressively."

Pinone, himself one of the main aggressors, pounded the Iowa defense for a team-high 18 points to go with his nine rebounds. He was followed by guard Stewart Granger's 11 points and Dwayne McClain's ten.

The losers were led by sophomore Greg Stokes' 22 points and 11 rebounds. Senior guard Bob Hansen also turned in an impressive night's work scoring 21 points and snatching eight rebounds in his last game for the Black and Gold.

The Cats began on a roll, racing out to a 15-9 lead 12 minutes into the contest behind a familiar formula — a strong inside effort from Pinone and Ed Pinckney and some accurate jumpers courtesy of Granger.

But Stokes wasn't about to let his Big East opponents run away and hide.

During a seven minute stretch in the middle of the half, Stokes personally scored ten of 12 Hawkeye points, enabling the Iowa squad to scratch their way back into a tie at 24 when the half ended.

Stokes wound up the half with ten of Iowa's 24 points while trying to combat Pinone's superior physical strength. Before the game Stokes had revealed that he planned to "use my quickness against his (Pinone's) strength. It's hard to push back against someone like him."

The second half proved to be a classic see-saw affair replete with no less than nine lead changes. Villanova's multi-faceted defense had its hands full against Iowa's two-pronged attack of Stokes and Hansen. Those two accounted for 43 of the Hawk's 54 total points while fellow starters Steve Carfino, Mark Gannon and Michael Payne added a meager nine points.

With the possibility of having only 3:49 left in his college career, senior Mike Mulquin broke a 49-49 tie by streaking down the lane and tipping in a Granger miss with a move more suited to a volleyball court than a basketball court.

Iowa knotted the score 34 seconds later as Carfino hit his only field goal of the day, a 20 footer from the perimeter, which made it 51-51.

Neither team was able to hit again until Carfino was tagged with a blocking foul at the :23 mark, sending a calm McLain to the line for the tie-breaking attempt. McLain's deodorant may have been working overtime but the six foot guard didn't want to; he sunk both free throws despite 10,000 Iowans breathing down his neck.

Stokes had a chance to pull Iowa even 11 seconds later after a Pinckney foul sent him to the line. The Hawks' center managed to convert only one of the two free throws ,however, leaving Iowa behind by one, 53-52.

The Cats sealed the victory two ticks later when Pinone was fouled on the inbounds pass to send him to the line, where he hit both foul shots.

High percentage shots such as this Ed Pinckney slam aided the Cats greatly in their 55-54 win over Iowa.

Tickets Anyone?

By JOE MARUSAK

Some people will do anything for a college basketball ticket. Some will even travel halfway across the United States to get the one they want.

Villanova Ticket Manager Lee Donar found that out a couple of days prior to the Villanova-Iowa Midwest Regional matchup.

As Donar put it, one day a couple of guys walked into the Field House ticket office and purchased about 20 tickets for the game, which was played March 25th in Kansas City. They said they were Villanova alumni.

But Donar happened to look out of her office window as they were leaving and noticed Iowa license plates on a van the men were driving.

Shortly thereafter, the same people came back, wanting more tickets. Donar didn't oblige.

There were other stories just as bizarre.

A group of Hawkeye fans in Marshallton, Iowa, wanted tickets so badly that they hired a bus for Kansas City, and sent the receipt to a Villanova alumnus friend in this area. This person in turn showed the receipt to Donar, telling her that it was from the Villanova Alumni Club of Iowa.

Donar checked that one out and found out there is no Alumni Club of Iowa. Needless to say, the tickets were not sold to the interested party.

Donar wasn't the only one forced to deal with The Con Artist Club of Iowa.

Villanova Alumni Director Bob Capone, who was in charge of distributing tickets to alumni, heard similar stories. In fact, when a straight one did come along, he didn't know whether or not to believe it.

"The best story," said Capone, "came from a guy who said he was studying to be a priest (in the Midwest)." The man told Capone that he had graduated from Villanova.

"Quite honestly, I was very suspect," said Capone. "In fact, he is going to become an Augustinian. He wound up going to both games."

"Radiation Day" Photos

Saturday afternoon's keg party commemorating the third anniversary of the accident at Three Mile Island, dubbed "Radiation Day," called for Radnor Township police action to calm disturbances outside of Stanford Hall.

Campus officials were quick to respond to the event, criticizing the students for their actions and disregard of University rules. No arrests were made as the party was allowed to continue following the confiscation of several kegs of beer.

Lacrosse Squads Open on Winning Notes

Women

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova women's lacrosse team opened its 1983 season on March 28 with a contest against Kutztown State College.

The Kutztown team completely dominated the first half of the game, pounding the Wildcats for eight goals to take an 8-0 lead into the locker room at halftime.

During halftime, Nova coach Diane Moyer tried to settle her team down. Moyer succeeded, because the Cats played much better during the second half, allowing just two goals while scoring twice themselves. The Cats' opening goal was by Adri Falco. Her goal made the score 9-1, Kutztown. V.U. scored its next goal shortly thereafter on an unassisted shot by senior Anne McGuiness, making the score 9-2. Kutztown scored once more with just seconds left to make the final score 10-2.

Nova's next game was two days later against Widener. McGuiness opened the scoring early in the first half to give the Cats a 1-0 lead. Widener found some weaknesses in Nova's defense and came back to tie the score at 1-1. The Cats took the lead again, 2-1, on a goal by Kathy Yeh. After a Villanova goaltending change, Widener scored five straight goals in a matter of minutes to take a 6-2 lead. The Cats added one more goal before halftime on a shot by Andrea Martino. Her goal was assisted by Anita Clarke.

Widener dominated play throughout most of the second half, outscoring the Cats 10-3 to win the game 16-6. Two women from Widener, Joanne Kizelk and Josie Maganti, accounted for 11 of Widener's 16 goals. The three second half goals by the Wildcats were scored by Falco, Susan Callahan and Maura O'Shea. McGuiness got the assist on Callahan's goal.

The loss left the Cats with an 0-2 record.

Though injuries walloped the Wildcat's lacrosse team, the players managed to get the season off to a winning record. Midfielder Kenny Delgatto scored two goals and an assist in the winning opener against Western Maryland before suffering a dislocated shoulder which put him out for the season.

"That injury really hurt us," said captain Bill Gold. "Our whole offense was centered around Delgatto."

The Cats hung on in winning the next game 9-8 over Michigan State before the offense began sputtering. Others began picking up the slack, however, and the team raised its record to 3-2 with a 17-4 win over Widener.

"John Haggarty (13 goals and 3 assists) and Mike Cortese (9,5) have been playing especially well," said Gold. Haggarty led the team in goals in 1982 with 20 while Cortese is a returning starter.

Injuries to junior midfielders Tom Gravina and Ken Crowley also stunted the Wildcat attack during the losses, but both came back to score in the Widener game.

Another factor in the win was goalie Drew Cunningham. The sophonsore has compiled a .521 save average while making 73 saves this season.

"This season will see a lot of development in the team," Gold stated. "We only have two seniors starting. Next year we will have a very good team with a lot of sophomores and juniors coming back. This is our coach Randy Marks' first year and he has really turned the program around."

The Wildcats will have a chance to continue on the winning track tomorrow against Montclair State

Bradley Leads Cats To Big Five Title

By BEVERLY REILLY

The women Wildcat trackstars opened their outdoor season with a splash. Amidst an endless downpour on March 27, the women's track team captured the Big Five Outdoor Track and Field title. Scoring 191 team points, the Wildcats drowned their closest competitor, West Chester (136 points).

Junior Patty Bradley was the team's only triple winner. In the field, Bradley won the long jump with a leap of 17'5½". On the track, Bradley captured first in the 400-meter hurdles. Later, she joined the 440-yard relay team of Sharon Margaretha, Veronica McIntosh and Tracey Carter to capture another first-place title.

Sophomore MaryEllen McGowan was a double winner, sweeping the 1500-meter and 3000-meter runs in 4:39 and 10:19 respectively.

Other first places were captured by freshmen Jan Yerkes and Joanne Kehs. Yerkes won the 5000-meter in 17:46.2. Kehs captured the gold in the 800-meter run. Kehs also returned to join the winning two-mile relay with teammates Valerie Allen, Beth Lyons and Nancy Fleming.

The one-mile relay team of Judy Palmer, Carter, Margaretha and McIntosh also captured first place.

Due to the adverse conditions, the women's times and distances were not a true measure of their capabilities. However, one week later at the George Mason Invitational the talent of the Wildcats shone.

Last weekend, the Wildcats were runners-up to Penn State for the team title. The Cats scored 133 points, only eight points short of Penn State's 141 points.

The individual performances were outstanding. The Wildcats shattered seven Villanova outdoor records at the two-day meet.

Newcomer Yerkes was honored as the meet's Outstanding Performer. Yerkes won the 10,000-meter and 5,000-meter runs, setting records in each event. En route to her 5000-meter run, Yerkes also set Villanova records for the two mile and three mile.

Patty Bradley captured first in the 400-meter hurdles, while qualifying for the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships with her time of 59.4.

Senior Peggy Stewart also picked up two Wildcat records when she finished first in the high jump at 5'10" and threw 28'5" in the shot put event of the heptathlon.

McGowan captured first place in the 1500-meter run with an Easter Championship qualifying time of 4:33.3. McGowan also ran the lead-off leg of the 4x800 meter relay team of Fleming, Lyons and Kehs to capture the gold

Men Compete at King Games

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's track team opened up its outdoor season last weekend in the 14th Annual Martin Luther King International Freedom Games which was held at Stanford University. Several team members went away with first places and personal records. There were IC4A and NCAA qualifying marks achieved by the Cats in their inaugural campaign of 1983.

Winning their events were: Craig Morris in the 400 intermediate hurdles. The time 50.73 was an NCAA and IC4A qualifier along with a personal record. Martin Booker placed 4th with a time of 51.98.

John Marshall qualified for the IC4A meet by winning his flagship event, the 800 meters in a time of 1:49.05.

Irishman Marcus O'Sullivan won the mile with a time of 4:05.4, enabling him to also qualify for the IC4A meet. Senior Peter Carroll was sixth in 4:08.8, his best time to date.

Freshman John Keyworth ran a strong race in the 5000 meter run, placing fourth with a time of 13.54.5.

The relay teams were all successful as each placed first. The mile relay team was composed of Martin Booker (48.6), Chip Jenkins (48.1), Craig Morris (47.1) and Carlton Young (46.4) anchoring. (Young also placed second to Cliff Wiley in the 400 meter dash with a time of 46.31.)

The two-mile relay had a 2.6 second victory over Long Beach State. John Borgese (150.00), J. J. Clark (1:52.9), Marcus O'Sullivan (1:50.5) and John Marshall (1:53.1) put their talents together and crossed the finish line in 7:26.5.

Villanova as usual won its specialty event, the distance medley relay, in 9:43.4. Ken Lucks (1:52.9), Chip Jenkins (47.5), Brian O'Keeffe (2:57.7) and John Keyworth (4:05.3) were the four who won the event for Villanova.

The Wildcats will be traveling to Knoxville, Tenn., this weekend to race in the annual Dogwood Relays.

Wildcat Baseball Team Riding Rough Road

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Villanova's varsity baseball team picked up its first win of the year at Philadelphia Textile in the midst of a disappointing seven game road trip.

The Wildcats defeated Textile's Rams 6-5. Villanova scored the winning run off a two-run double by freshman Rick Faggioni. Homeruns by junior John Corbin (a seventh-inning solo shot) and sophomore Dan Mostardi (a two-run blast) paced the Cats, while freshman pitcher Steve Zolner got the win.

LaSalle's Explorers defeated Villanova 15-6, despite the strong two-for-four day at the plate of senior Mike Craig.

The Wildcats next traveled to the Bronx to meet Fordham. In a contest abbreviated by rain in the sixth frame, Fordham won 3-1. Craig continued to hit well, scoring the Cats only official run with a solo homer in the second inning.

Mostardi had a three-for-four day at Penn, with two singles and a double, yet the Quakers scored nine runs in the sixth inning to club the Cats 16-8.

Villanova's lone home game of the past campaign was a tough 6-7 loss to St. Joseph's. The contest was halted in the bottom of the eighth by darkness, but sophomore designated hitter Tom Sullivan still managed to tap the Hawk pitchers for two hits in three at-bats. Sullivan picked up two RBI's with a homer and a single.

Trenton State's Lions scored a 12-4 win over Villanova, while the Wildcats lost both ends of a doubleheader with the tough Pirates of Seton Hall, 10-4 and 7-5.

Villanova, now 1-10, will next face the Naval Academy, Drexel and Georgetown. They return to their home field to meet Iona on April 10.

Lifters at Nationals

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

On the weekend of March 25-27, while most Villanova fans focused their attention on the NCAA Basketball Tournament, members of the Cats' powerlifting team traveled to Texas A&M University to participate in the National Collegiate Powerlifting Championships.

The seven members who qualified were captains Tony Trachio, in the 181-pound class, and Dan Capice, in the 132-pound class. Others included Pete Anninos in the 198-pound class, Mark Majerus in the 114-pound class, Rich Nielson in the 148-pound class, John Padova in the 114-pound class, and Betsy DeLura in the 114-pound class.

Each competitor is allowed three attempts at the squat, bench press and dead lift, and the total of the best three becomes the athlete's score.

This year's overall results were as follows: Majerus — third place in the nationals, third team All-American and first in the dead lift at 397 lbs.; Padova — second place, second team All-American and first in the bench press at 225 lbs.; Capice — second place, second team All-American; Nielson — even though injured, he still lifted and placed 6th; Trachio — though not placing in the top ten, he served as a source of inspiration and encouragement to his teammates along with fellow captain Capice; Anninos — was in the toughest weight class and took tenth place. He would have placed higher if he hadn't been called on a technical; and DeLura — who took 5th place and made Honorable Mention All-American.

Speaking of technicals, according to sophomore John Padova, "The judging was really tough, but it was too technical. However, on the whole it was the best national meet ever held and the best crop of powerlifters that was ever assembled." The Wildcats managed to place fourth overall in the national competition. For next year, the Cats have put in a bid to have the nationals held here at Villanova.

Micheaux, Olajuwon lead Cougar Onslaught...

Houston Pounds Outmanned Cats

By LARRY GOANOS

The brothers of Phi Slamma Jamma chose to hold a fraternity meeting during Houston's NCAA Midwest Region Championship game against Villanova in Kansas City. Unfortunately for the Wildcats the meeting place was above the rim and the chief order of business on the agenda was slam dunks — ten in all — which the Cougars used to propel themselves to an 89-71 victory over the Cats.

"It was a very tough, intense game. I know you expected me to say that but it was," said a pleased Guy Lewis, moments after his Cougars had put the finishing touches on the win. "We were just lucky enough to break it open in the second half."

Lucky? Ten slams, 13 blocked shots and a 58 percent team shooting mark. Luck? The Philadelphia 76ers should be so lucky.

"I think this is one of the best games I've played," said Larry "Mr. Mean" Micheaux. The senior forward "lucked" into 30 points and 12 rebounds against the Wildcats.

Anchoring the attack in the middle for Houston was Akeem "The Dream" Olajuwon, perhaps the best center this side of the NBA. "The Dream" slammed, jammed and whammed his way to 20 points on 10 of 11 shooting from the field (if you consider two feet above the rim to be part of "the field"). In between dunks he found time to reject eight shots and make two steals. Not bad for a guy who has been playing roundball for only four years.

Villanova's attack was led by senior John Pinone and sophomore Ed Pinckney, both of whom scored 18 points and combined for 21 rebounds as well.

The Cats shot an anemic 34 percent for the game, a fact which caused their downfall according to Pinone.

"We just didn't shoot the ball very well," assessed Pinone of his last game in a Villanova uniform. "We got the ball inside whenever we wanted. The shots just wouldn't fall."

Everything was looking up for the Cats in the early going. Pinone and Pinckney maneuvered underneath for Villanova's first 11 points, giving the Wildcats an 11-8 bulge with 6:30 gone in the game.

A Michael Young 19-foot baseline jumper followed by (what else?) an Olajuwon slam gave Houston a 12-11 lead one minute later. From then on the Coogs never looked back as they built their margin up to ten at 37-27 before the halftime whistle blew.

The Cats came out in the second stanza with hopes of tightening things up a bit but Olajuwon, the Midwest Region's MVP, had other thoughts. After Micheaux banked an eight-footer, "The Dream" connected on three straight Cougar baskets before the Houston lead ballooned to 49-31.

Villanova employed a press in the second half to try to force some Houston turnovers but it was to no avail. The athletic Cougars slithered through the seams of the Cat press almost effortlessly, triggering a barrage of lay-ups and slams. The outcome was never really in doubt from that point on. It was clear that the Cats were about to become Houston's 25th consecutive victim.

"I was disappointed with the loss but not to the point of being embarrassed. We played hard and never stopped trying to get back in the game," Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino said.

The defeat marked the second straight year that Massimino had guided his squad to an NCAA Regional Championship only to be beaten by the nation's number-one ranked team.

For most of the Wildcat players there's always next year to look forward to, but for the three senior captains this was the farewell performance. Stewart Granger, Mike Mulquin and Pinone will take with them the memories of 91 wins against only 35 losses and four straight NCAA Tournament appearances, something which Wildcat fans will remember long after the thoughts of Phi Slamma Jamma's Greek Week festivities have faded.

NOTES: The win avenged Houston's loss to Villanova in the East Region two years ago when the Cats won by an 18 point margin, 90-72 . . . The win sent Houston to the Final Four for the second straight year . . . Villanova's series record with Houston is tied at 2-2 . . . The Cats season record ended at 24-8, the same mark that they posted last season . . . Villanova's record in NCAA Tournament play is now 23-16.

Wildcat Dwayne McClain gets off a shot that managed to evade the outstretched arms of Akeem "The Dream" Olajuwon of Houston. Olajuwon had eight blocks to spearhead the Cougar defense.

LIFE IN THE FAST LANE: Villanova guard Stewart Granger motors towards the basket while fellow senior John Pinone gets stuck in some heavy traffic. Akeem Olajuwon and Larry Micheaux led the No. 1 ranked Coogs as they cruised to an 89-71 victory.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

John Pinone

GENUINE GENUINE GENUINE

John Pinone's exploits during the Wildcats' recent NCAA Tournament appearance have earned him his second Budweiser Athlete of the Week award this year.

The 6-foot-8-inch senior center led the Wildcat squad in a victory over Iowa and a defeat at the hands of the Houston Cougars.

Against the Hawkeyes, Pinone fought his way inside for 18 points on six of 12 shooting from the field and a perfect six of six from the charity stripe. The burly center also ripped down nine rebounds.

The impressiveness of Pinone's performance didn't escape Iowa guard Bob Hansen.

"He's an excellent ballplayer, I have a lot of respect for the way he plays," said Hansen, himself a future NBA pick. "He's going to go a long way in his career."

Against the physically imposing Cougars Pinone duplicated his previous effort with an identical 18 point, nine rebound output, quite a feat considering he was up against seven-foot center Akeem "The Dream" Olajuwon.

"He wasn't intimidating at all. I've been saying that all week long," explained Pinone, one of the few people in college basketball who can honestly make such a statement.

Pinone has been selected, along with teammate Stewart Granger, to play in this weekend's Aloha All-Star Classic which will be held in Honolulu, Hawaii.

Dormitory Construction Begins

By KEVIN McKENNA

Ground breaking ceremonies were held Tuesday for two new student dormitories on the South Ithan tract of campus adjacent to Stanford Hall.

"I am pleased with the progress we have made," stated the Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A., director of planning for Villanova. "If all goes according to plan, the dormitories will cost $6 million and will be completed by August, 1984."

The Board of Trustees, including University President Rev. John P. Driscoll O.S.A., were on hand for the traditional first shovel full. The Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., vice president for university relations; Eugene J. Shuane, director of public relations; the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A. dean of students; Christopher Janosik, director of residence life; and Student Body President Paul Tufano also participated in the ceremony. Daniel J. Keating of the Daniel J. Keating Co. which will be the general constructor, was also present as were representatives from campus ministry and the office of Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life.

Tuesday's ground breaking festivities undoubtedly would have been held much earlier had local neighbors living near the sight of the dormitories not voiced concerns for the new dormitories and sought changes in the original design.

Points of unrest for those residents living along the South Tract of Ithan included loud noise coming from stereos and parties, storm drainage on their properties, and closeness of the buildings to their respective back property lines. Area residents had also been distressed by the anticipated drop in the market value of their homes as a result of the construction.

According to McKenzie, final approval was granted by Radnor planners and local residents only after the following concessions were made by the University. There will be no student's rooms in the rear of the dormitory closest to the area residences and non-operable windows will be installed. BOCCA, a national fire code review organization, has given its approval after examining the safety situation.

A temporary six-foot high cedar fence will be erected along the west property line until an evergreen screen grows to serve as a natural buffer.

Villanova officials present at ground breaking ceremonies.

The dormitories are being built to house either males or females to allow the university flexibility in accommodating future residence. Presently, the University houses 40 percent of its undergraduate students. However, an estimated 82 percent of Villanova's undergraduate population would like the opportunity to live on campus.

Each dormitory will include laundry facilities and four lounge areas for specific activities. This includes one each for meetings, studying, gameplaying and television viewing. The dormitories will also be equipped with air conditioning

Villanova had also received approval to construct a food services building on the south section of campus. That project, however, will not be continued until further funds have been acquired. Renovations will be made in Dougherty Hall to that building's food service area to accommodate the additional 320 students.

Future of SEPTA Discussed

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The future of SEPTA and its impact on commuters was discussed by Chief Operation Planning Officer of SEPTA, John Tucker, who emphasized at the April 6 meeting the need for passengers to accept SEPTA as a "fundamental" transit system.

The Association of Commuting Students sponsored the event in light of the current workmen's strike and system take-over by SEPTA.

Tucker predicted no vast technical changes in the future but pointed out that the transit system should not be a glamorous convention but a basic day-to-day fundamental service which is safe, reliable and efficient.

"The transit system has been neglected for years," said Tucker, "and SEPTA is now beginning to work on desperately needed major renovations to run as an ideal and fundamental service."

No extension in the scope of the system is forecasted according to Tucker, until the system is at a permanently sound basis.

The "very serious trouble," both financially and physically, is what SEPTA is concerned with now, according to Tucker. Part of SEPTA's goal is to accomplish work as efficiently as possible in order to cut expenditures while still serving the public.

"The physical plant improvement is the key to achieve operating efficiency," said Tucker. "The plant now is considered in total disarray." Neglected areas of the physical plant include the tracks, basic parts of signal circuits and stations.

"The essential need to spend several million dollars a year on physical conditions is seen by SEPTA and is attributed to the constant and lengthy neglect and abuse the transit system has taken," said Tucker. In the future, once the system is on a "firmer base," Tucker predicted that repairs can be made on a regulated basis by laying a certain amount of track per year and renovating or replacing trains and buses on a systematic schedule.

"Passengers will not notice the immediate take-over from the instant of reorganization of a commuter Rail Service to transit Rail Service, but the reorganization in employee placement and repairs in the physical plants are all of primary importance and are under way," stated Tucker.

Tucker emphasized the fact that SEPTA is trying to save money. The increase in fares and decrease in service "had to be initiated now," according to Tucker, to cover one time expenses in the SEPTA take-over and to pay off the Conrail bills SEPTA is forced to pay. "Conrail was running at an impossible rate of expenditure," commented Tucker.

Villanova Commuter Railroad Station

Tucker added that he felt the expenses have to be brought under control since the fares have been too high to be attractive to the public.

"Once the financial situation is 'under control,' improved frequency and experimental fare decreases will be in line," said Tucker.

"Transit systems are supposed

Patrick Leahy

Patrick Leahy was elected Student Body President last night following the tabulation of votes by the Elections Commission.

Leahy received more than 40 percent plurality of the total votes cast necessary for victory.

The VILLANOVAN will print complete election results in its next issue, April 22.

VILLANOVAN Takes Honors

The VILLANOVAN has been awarded first place with special merit by the American Scholastic Press Association ASPA, in the annual nationwide contest.

In the annual review and contest awards, the VILLANOVAN received 970 of a possible 1000 points. The newspaper scored perfectly on content coverage, page design and creativity. The other categories judged were: general plan, editing and art. First place with special merit is awarded to a publication that scores over 900 points.

In the judges' evaluation, "The VILLANOVAN is a truly excellent newspaper. Your layouts are very well done and your articles are very well written. Your 'For Your Information' feature is very good and provides a source of valuable information for your students."

According to contest rules, first place with special merit is awarded in recognition of an outstanding example of a student publication in format, content and presentation.

In the highest point scoring category, content coverage, the VILLANOVAN scored perfectly with 500 of a possible 500 points. In a sub-category under editing, the VILLANOVAN received a perfect score for presenting facts "accurately, avoiding suppositions and misstatements of data and presenting material in good taste."

This is the second consecutive year that the VILLANOVAN received first place with special merit; last year the newspaper scored 920 in the contest. The Drexel University and St. Johns University newspapers were the only other repeat winners.

The ASPA also notes that publications whose scores were five to seven percent above those of last year are maintaining or exceeding their goals for the publication year, and are to be further commended.

Career Development

"How to Get a Job in Washington, D.C." Catherine Barr, Villanova '75, will offer tips on capital job seeking to students interested in journalism, politics, public policy and related fields. The speaker has worked in political campaigns, journalism, and at a public policy think tank, and currently holds a position in the Reagan Administration. Questions will be welcomed, April 19, 12:45 p.m., Career Development Center, Corr Hall Basement. Contact Mary Lou Cubbage, Career Development Center, for more information.

Baccalaureate Masses

For all interested seniors: there will be a planning meeting for your Baccalaureate Masses on April 20 at 4 p.m. in the Campus Ministry Center. If you would like to specially contribute or participate in these Masses, please come to the planning meeting. Everyone is welcome.

Blood Drive

Villanova College of Nursing is sponsoring a blood drive on April 21 from 11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in St. Mary's Gym. Please donate.

Nuclear Disarmament Rally

There will be a nuclear disarmament rally in Kennedy Mall on April 17 at 12 noon. The rally will feature speakers and music. Everyone is encouraged to attend.

Football Boosters

There will be an organizational meeting of the new Football Boosters (part of the Student Government) on Thursday, April 21, at 4 in the Villanova Room. The first 500 people in the door will receive a free Villanova Football hat.

Help Wanted

Any underclassmen interested in being hired to assist in the distribution of academic attire for the 1983 graduation ceremonies, please contact the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall. Assistants will be paid for their services.

Nuclear Power

The Villanova Consumer Action Committee, formerly the Villanova Consumer Club, is sponsoring a symposium entitled "Nuclear Power — Menace or Marvel" to commemorate the fourth anniversary of the Three Mile Island crisis. The affair will be held on April 21 from 6:30 to 8 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Refreshments and cheese will be served afterwards.

The speakers panel will consist of four distinguished experts: two representing the industry view from Philadelphia Electric Co., and the Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association and two representing the consumer view from the Union of Concerned Scientists, and the influential Keystone Alliance. The symposium is open to the public free of charge. Anyone concerned with this contemporary and controversial issue is urged to participate at this informative event and also make their views known.

Cultural Film Series

Upcoming attractions in Villanova's Cultural Film Series include two recent and highly acclaimed films. Louis Malle's "Atlantic City" will be shown on April 17 at 3:30 and 7 p.m. and on April 18, at 7 p.m. Claude Weill's Girl Friends will be shown on April 20, at 7 p.m. Both films will be shown in the Connelly Center Cinema on the Villanova University Campus. Following the Sunday night showing of Atlantic City, Dr. Joan Lynch will lead a discussion entitled "Atlantic City — An Original Pastiche." Admission for the series is $3 for the general public and $1.50 for students and senior citizens. Call 645-7262 for more information.

Atlantic City is an enchantingly offbeat film, combining elements from gangster movies, romantic melodrama, and screwball comedy. Outstanding performances are given by Burt Lancaster and Susan Sarandon. Girl Friends is a sensitive, funny film about women coming of age in the era of liberation. Melanie Mayron stars.

The Sunday night speaker, Lynch, teaches courses in film and theatre at Villanova University, and is the chairperson of the Cultural Film Series. She has published articles on film in the Journal of the University Film Association and in Media and Methods.

The Cultural Film Series for Spring 1983 will conclude with the presentation of Werner Fassbinder's satirical masterpiece, Lola, on April 24 and 25.

SWE

Elections will be held on April 18 at 7:30 p.m. in 212 Tolentine. Please attend!

Spring Concert

Celebrate spring with Villanova Singers on April 16 at 7:30 in St. Mary's Chapel with their special guest, the College of New Rochelle Glee Club. All are invited. Admission is free.

Radio Club

The Amateur Radio Club will hold a meeting on April 20 in the Radio Shack on the fourth floor of Tolentine. All are welcome.

New Play Weekend

Villanova Theatre will sponsor its second annual New Play Weekend on April 13, 14, 15, and 16. Two one-act plays will be presented on each of these nights in the Rosemont Studio Theatre, which is located in Good Counsel Hall on the campus of Rosemont College.

Playwrights from throughout the country submitted plays for possible production in the Rosemont series. The two selected plays, both of which are as yet untitled, are by students in Villanova's graduate playwriting course, taught by former Bulletin critic Ernest Schier.

The first play, by Wesley Maloney-Truitt, is a funny, moving encounter between two strangers in a New York bus tewrminal — a Vietnam veteran and a shy young woman newly arrived in the city. In the second play, by Marian Warrington, a black woman poet struggles to accept love and success. Villanova faculty members Jim Schlatter and Jim Pomilo will direct.

Performances will begin at 8 p.m., and there will be opportunities to discuss the plays with playwrights and directors after each performance. Tickets are $2.

Good Counsel Hall is located off Montgomery Avenue in Rosemont, PA. For more information on the New Play Weekend, call 668-6268 or 525-7471.

Computers Assist Registration

By TIM CALLAHAN

Problems have arisen in the classification of a student's year in school (freshman, sophomore, junior, senior) under a new computerized system. By not allowing for the varied credit hour requirements of different majors within the same college, the computer occasionally misclassifies students.

"Under the system, students are automatically re-classified at the end of each semester as grades run through the computer. Every college has key numbers which triggers the computer to reclassify students as credit hours accumulate.

The problems arise when one considers that there are more than one major area in most of the colleges, and some of these have varied credit requirements. An example of this is the college of engineering which has four majors, and the number of credits which must be earned never agree because of varied curriculums.

Dr. Robert D. Lynch, dean of engineering, said that he wanted a different system from the start. Under the system proposed by Lynch, students would be classified according to the requirements of their major instead of their college.

"Classification effects so many important things, that it is mandatory that it is done properly," said Lynch. He added that he has been led to believe that the system he proposed will be implemented, but he is not certain when or if it will. "The University must make the decision to invest the time and effort needed," added Lynch.

Student classification effects the housing lottery, compiling of academic standing, prospective graduates, and a wide variety of other student groupings. Lynch stressed that "classification is fundamentally important and should be done completely and precisely."

Earlier in the school year, the College of Arts and Sciences had some problems with the financial aid office because of classification. The Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of arts and sciences, said "We were told that classification would be automated, and we had to do all the work to do it."

"The problem arises when trying to find numbers that will work," said O'Malley. "The numbers for Arts and Sciences work well, and the various science majors vary by only a few points, three at the most, so I do not think that individual major classification is necessary.

"The system is complicated as it now stands, and if we try to make it more complicated, we will only cause more problems," said O'Malley.

According to O'Malley, the problem with financial aid was caused because their office did not have a computer terminal at the time. "There is no law which states that students must complete their college education in four years" commented O'Malley, "a student is considered full time when he is carrying twelve credit hours."

When the financial aid office processes aid, they frequently find it necessary to re-classify students. When they did not have their own terminal, they came to us. Now that they have one, the office can make their own.

"The system is flexible and allows the students to have more mobility in selecting courses and course load. The system suits the students," said O'Malley.

Further problems arise when students transfer into Villanova or switch colleges. The dean of the college that they are transferring into reviews the courses that they have already taken whether here or at another school, and decides which courses may be applied to the new major.

The unapplied courses remain on the transcript, but the quality point average is compiled only from the courses applied. Students are then classified accordingly.

Draft Linked to Grants

By TIM HANLON

The Solomen Amendment is a move to link draft legislation to financial aid for college. If passed, no student may receive financial aid from federal grants if he does not sign an affidavit verifying his registration for the draft. Now, as in the past, all one has to do is sign a standard affidavit of educational purposes to receive aid.

The law could be effective as soon as September of this year. Some states have ratified it.

Arthur Switzer, financial aid director at Villanova suggests three alternatives the amendment can take. Either Congress has to change the law, the United States Department of Education has to change its regulations, or court cases have to decide the constitutionality of the amendment.

Arthur Switzer, financial aid director.

The American Civil Liberties Union is a strong opponent of the Solomen Amendment. They have taken action through court cases such as the recent one in Minnesota, according to Switzer.

The ACLU requested an injunction to stop the law in that state by presenting students' names who did not wish to register to the court. Although the judge did not find this a constitutional issue, he cited precedents which permitted the injunction.

The Department of Education must abide if Congress passes the law. According to Switzer, 45,000 out of 9,000,000 students who should have signed the affidavit have not. "The Selective Service is not even getting the letter of confirmation out of those who did register voluntarily," said Switzer.

"Although students are not required to sign the affidavits," said Switzer, "we will insist they sign it. We really don't know what is going on with it."

Regent Three of the Presidents of Artriculation Meeting which encompasses the states of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland and Washington, D.C. recently held a meeting in their host city, Philadelphia. Among those who attended the meeting was Switzer who commented that the Solomen Amendment was one of many key topics. "There has been a general consensus that colleges in the servicing areas will not insist that students comply with the amendment since it has not been ratified by Congress," said Switzer.

"Nationally, it ought to be certain by now whether Congress intends to pass this amendment or not," said Switzer.

Villanova has on record approximately 9500 financial aid students and, "the paperwork and tracking on thousands of students would be overburdening and time consuming," said Switzer.

Lindback Award Nominees Named

On March 21, Villanova students and faculty voted for six faculty members to be nominated for the 1983 Lindback Awards. Six hundred and fifty ballots were cast by full time, undergraduate seniors, juniors and sophomores and faculty to select the following faculty members: John A. Doody (Philosophy), Jean M. Maurer (Nursing), Thomas F. Monahan (Accounting), Elise Pizzi (Nursing), John R. Stehle (Economics), and Burke T. Ward (Business Law). University President Rev. John Driscoll will select two of the nominees to receive cash prizes of $1000 each. Funds are provided by the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation. Awards will be presented at commencement ceremoniesin May.

Ten faculty members were also selected to the honorable mention category in this year's voting. Joseph R. DesJardins (Philosophy), Isabella Erickson (Nursing), Michael J. Hones (Physics), C. Michael Kelly (Chemical Engineering), Margaret F. Kendrick (Nursing), Oliver G. Ludwig (Chemistry), June W. Lytel (English), David J. Sprows (Math), C. Gerald Walsh (Economics), and Barry S. Young (Sociology).

The Lindback Foundation annually makes grants available to colleges in the Delaware Valley to encourage effective teaching on the undergraduate level. Villanova has participated in the awards program every year since 1961. Previous winners of the award are not eligible for re-election by terms of the foundation's regulations.

Members of the Blue Key Society, directed by Robert Scott, staffed the committee responsible for supervision of the voting procedures. Dr. Joseph George chairman of the History Department, served as chairman of the committee.

Student Struck on Lancaster

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

A Villanova student was struck by a car and injured on April 10 while attempting to cross at the intersection of Lancaster Avenue and South Ithan Avenue at approximately 7:30 p.m.

Lawrence Cancilang, a sophomore from Hudson, Ohio, was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital and reports state he suffered a broken left leg and a fracture to his left arm plus minor cuts and scrapes.

Cancilang was trying to cross at the intersection while the light was red.

The accident report filed by Officer Charles R. Yespelkis indicates the pedestrian was at fault, violating the Right of Way of Pedestrian.

The driver of the vehicle, Daniel A. Perna, also a Villanova student, told police that he did not see the pedestrian until he was right in front of the pedestrian.

The accident report cites that Perna, traveling east along Lancaster Avenue in the curb lane, had a green light when he went through the intersection of Lancaster Avenue and South Ithan Avenue and hit the pedestrian approximately 40 feet east of the intersection. Perna was reportedly traveling at the 35 mph speed limit.

Cancilang told police he "came out of the gym, looked at the traffic light, thought it was all right to cross and so ran across Lancaster."

Two witnesses confirmed that the car had a green light and that the pedestrian was not seen until he was in front of the car.

Presidential Debate Held

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The four candidates campaigning for the position of Student Body President squared off in a debate Tuesday afternoon that featured an audience of approximately 100 students and campaign workers.

Jerry Dempsey, executive vice president of student government, acted as moderator of the debate that included panel questions from former Villanovan Editor-in-Chief and Senate Budget Committee member Gerald Arth and Villanovan News Editor Linda Bond. The four candidates, Patrick Leahy, Joe McColghan, Laura Moreno and Mary Beth Bogan each gave an opening statement, then fielded panel and audience questions.

Leahy spoke first, claiming that explaining his campaign stand could take well over three hours to expound on but that it could be summed up in three words — "perspective, commitment and alternatives."

"I'm a well-balanced candidate. I've been included in a lot of activities. I love Villanova, it's a great school. I could bring fresh new ideas and a different outlook."

McColghan addressed the audience next and said that the "same old issues were being beaten to death." "The student government needs a leader to continue Paul Tufano's progress. Tuition increases have been too high especially the percentage increases with student aid being cut."

Moreno, currently an Arts Senator, recognized that "a lot of work has been left undone by the current student government." Moreno emphasized that the inexperience of two of the candidates would not benefit student government.

"It would be difficult for one to obtain office and guide an entirely new Senate without having previous experience in student government," said Moreno. "It's not only an executive title but a great deal of hard work and dedication for a full year."

Bogan outlined her experience as an Arts Senator, emphasizing that such experience was needed to assume control of student government.

"Time is very crucial. I agree that it's hard to imagine the student body president without experience. It takes at least five months to acquaint oneself with the Senate procedures and become competent and efficient. No one individual can be successful alone."

Presidential hopefuls debate the issues.

Tufano's Term

Student Body President Paul Tufano will pass over the duties and responsibilities of the office to the winner of this year's presidential race on May 1.

The termination of Tufano's term will mark the conclusion of what should be regarded as one of the more successfully-led student governments in recent years. While every goal Tufano set out to accomplish was not achieved and a great deal of work has been left undone, student leadership was reestablished in several areas and his efforts will undoubtedly smooth the way for future student governments.

A critical review of Tufano's term in office would be incomplete if his government's efforts to restore football at Villanova went unmentioned. Although several of his methods have been criticized, Tufano has managed to garner student opinion and ideas and correlate them into a comprehensive student belief; that the University would be a better campus socially if football was restored. Partly as a result of the work of student government, the Board of Trustees agreed to review new evidence on football and consider restoration.

Tufano's government's work has not been restricted to the volatile football issue. His vice presidents have tackled the problem of restoring student government to the level of the students that are being represented and the escalating drainage problem on Ithan Avenue was dealt with efficiently. Currently in the works is a student bill of rights and a concerted attempt to redefine the residence hall visitation policy.

Changes are always needed to prevent stagnation and complacency. Certain issues could have been dealt with differently with possibly opposite results. Yet Tufano was successful. The student government does have a better image. It's more accessible. Realistic goals were set and some were accomplished. Tufano and his government have sowed the seed of credibility. It remains the task of the new student body president to nourish and cultivate the growth of this credibility.

Alcohol Survey, Facts Explained

Certain things have a way of snow-balling. A small matter of ambiguity can lead to a large furor, resulting in confusion.

The Feb. 11 edition of the Villanovan featured an article detailing the alcohol habits of students according to a survey conducted for the Office of Student Life by Rev. Frank Farsaci, O.S.A. Like most surveys, this one did not generate a great deal of interest on campus. However, the Philadelphia Inquirer picked up the information, used in it an issue of their Sunday supplement magazine and all hell broke loose. The administration was beseiged with phone calls from irate parents questioning the moral direction of the University. Now, some clarification is needed.

Of the 1560 surveys sent out, only 562 students were inspired to respond. The Villanovan misinterpreted the survey's actual figures and reported that 84.2 percent of the male students surveyed and 15.8 percent of the females are drunk more than once a week. In actuality, of the 562 responses received, 19 students reported that they were drunk more than once a week: 16 were male, three were female. Here the ambiguity occurred.

Farsaci's efforts to provide a comprehensive look at the alcohol policy at Villanova should be applauded. A survey is difficult to administer and harder yet to compile and correlate. However, the question remains. Was the survey indicative of the nature of alcohol use at Villanova? The answer is probably not. Less than approximately ten percent of the undergraduate enrollment responded. Hardly a vast majority. It requires only a glance at the migration on weekends to realize that students will travel elsewhere for alcohol not available on campus. This is an undeniable fact. A survey like the one conducted by Farsaci can unfortunately present ambiguous notions that can lead to speculations; reality must actually be witnessed to be understood and accepted.

Letters to the Editor

Student Apathy Disappointing

To the Editor:

Last week's "On-Campus" was an example of something which many student organizations, as well as the rest of the University, face — a negative, apathetic faction within the student body. The overall response to last week's question concerning the effectiveness of the Student Government was quite disappointing to say the least (actually it was outrageous, unsupported, and discouraging).

The remarks I refer to specifically are those of Mr. Sorrentino, Ms. O'Reagan, Ms. Whitaker, Mr. Keller and Ms. McLindon. All of them speak of the Student Government as being ineffective, obscure and a failure. In fact, one student (Mr. Sorrentino) stated that he would like to see the Student Government sponsoring outdoor parties and picnics — a function of the Union, not the Student Government. To be quite honest, I feel these people are ignorant — ignorant of perhaps the most successful year the Student Government has ever had in terms of accomplishments and publicity.

My question to these people, and people with the same attitude, is "do you ever read the paper?". Through 17 articles and editorials and the equivalent of 11 full-page ads (paid for by Student Government) the activities and results of the Student Government were communicated to the entire University community. This publicity would have answered Mr. Keller's comment "Who are they?" and Ms. O'Reagan's "I haven't heard of anything they've accomplished." By reading these articles and ads they would have learned of the Student Government's effectiveness — not ineffectiveness — in the areas of football, extension of library hours, drainage of South Campus, lowering of the tuition increase, interaction with the community and a variety of Senate and Trustee committees. These results indicate that the administration did listen and did act on important concerns of the Student Government. Perhaps we would have been more effective if people such as themselves came out and got involved in the many activities and projects the Student Govern-

Record Industry Fights Back

The recent growth of the blank cassette tape industry has significantly eroded the gross sales of the record industry. Along with downward economic factors, the taping of albums onto substantially less expensive blank cassettes for private use has brought about the decline of the record industry. An example of this decline is that top selling album in 1981, REO Speedwagon's "High Infidelity," sold 8.3 million copies. The next year's top selling album, "Asia," by the group Asia, sold 2.6 million copies.

The piracy of albums using blank tapes was the major cause of this decline. Initially this sales drop caused the industry to hold back on the development of new artists and play it safe by concentrating on marketable, established bands. This caution made it very difficult for new talent to get access to major record labels and quality promotion.

As might be expected, this in turn caused a stagnation of the industry and propagated a vicious cycle of less desirable products and poor sales.

It is good to see that the record industry is taking measures to combat the tape industry threat.

Record companies have begun taking chances with newer artists and different kinds of music. I.R.S. Records, a subsidiary of A&M Records, is an example of this.

The companies have also been releasing extended plays and 12-inch singles. These albums contain fewer, more popular songs and are less costly to produce than regular albums.

Experiments in recording with holographic sound and scrambling devices in order to make recording albums onto tapes impossible or less desirable are also being tested.

While the blank cassette tape industry cannot be blamed for exercising its right to participate in free enterprise, it is uplifting to see that the record industry is not taking this threat lying down.

ment undertakes.

My reaction is strong because I, in addition to the other members of the Student Government, have worked hard for the student body. As Student Body President, a 100% volunteer position, I have spent almost all of my senior year in meetings, discussions, hearings, etc., implementing plans, pushing for changes and voicing recommendations in order to serve the students. There are concrete, positive results and we have achieved a fantastic rapport with the University community. To be called obscure, ineffective and a failure is an insult, and I deeply resent it. Hopefully, these students, and others like them, will wake up and become aware of what is going on around them.

Paranoia, Complicity

To the Editor:

In reading Mr. King's letter to the editor last week, I was wondering how many of the Villanova community and on a larger scale how many Americans hold views similar to Mr. King's. If it is a growing number, I am concerned for two reasons.

One — as the letter suggested, almost all opposition to U.S. policy is labeled Soviet inspired, if not manipulated, and those who suspect otherwise are the dupes of communism. Such views can lead us toward national paranoia and paranoid solutions to international problems, the most catastrophic one being a pre-emptive nuclear attack for which we are building the capability.

My second concern is more immediate. Under the guise of combatting communism and maintaining "freedom" in third world nations, we, U.S. citizens, militarily bankroll murderous regimes. There is a direct connection between the withdrawal of taxes from my salary at Villanova University and the tortures and killing of unprotected individuals. This is not, as implied by Mr. King, an unfortunate condition. It is our complicity.

To provide one instance, a bishop, Oscar Romero, was killed, because he spoke out against U.S. military aid to El Salvador that was being used against its civilians. We not only still supply the ill used military assistance, but have increased it. The response of the U.S. Catholic community to this bishop's plea, has been almost nil.

Have we become so indifferent, insensitive or malevolent in the pursuit of anticommunism that we look away from the evil our government perpetrates? Is our religion Christianity or is it anti-communism at all costs? I do not understand how we as individuals and organizations can maintain our hypocrisy.

'Radiation 1'

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the article describing, or should I say attempting to describe, the "Radiation Day" party on March 28. I feel that although the article did hold some good points, a lot of its facts were a bit exaggerated and often false.

"Radiation Day" has been an annual event for at least three or four years now and in years past I haven't heard of any problems as serious as this year. The party is held to commemorate Three Mile Island and to welcome the new spring season (good weather). It is more or less a spontaneous event and involves very little or no organization. In effect, the only organization involved is getting friends together for a little socializing, recreation and beer drinking. In past years there has been little or no involvement by the

Increased Enrollment for Private Colleges

Last fall, private colleges shuddered in what they feared was the first stage of a long-expected decline in enrollment, while public schools managed a marginal nationwide gain of 27,000 students.

But a just-completed study of freshman applications for the fall, 1983 term suggests just the opposite might happen next year.

The number of freshman applications at private colleges is up seven percent over this time last year, according to the Chronicle of Higher Education's annual survey of admissions trends, while applications to public schools have dropped by eight percent.

If those application figures hold, observers say, they represent a dramatic and unanticipated reprieve for many of the nation's 1600 independent colleges and universities.

"We certainly weren't expecting (the increase in applications, and at this point aren't sure what to make of it," confesses Bill McNamara, spokesman for the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities (NAICU).

"We hope it's a good sign," he adds warily, "but early applications aren't really a barometer of what could happen next September."

"Out of all those students who apply, there'll be a lot of no-shows and a lot of cancellations, so it's very difficult to say what will happen in the end," he explains.

Public colleges, which expect their student populations to hold level next year, are similarly baffled by the early applications dropoff of eight percent.

"We aren't expecting any kind of a drop of that magnitude in actual enrollment next fall," says Gary Hudgens, spokesman for the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

Hudgens speculates the decline reflects student reluctance to apply to schools early more than it does a coming decrease in public campus enrollment.

NAICU also plans to stick with its original projections of next fall's private college populations for the time being, McNamara says, "although we'll be pleasantly suprised if those early application figures hold true."

"We're making an effort to be less negative about this year's enrollment than we originally thought," he notes, "especially since financial aid wasn't cut like some people predicted. But once you get a downturn like we had this fall, it's extremely hard to pull out of it in one year's time."

The downturn was dramatic. Private college enrollment fell by nearly four percent since the 1981-82 school year.

Observers attributed the decline to a student migration from the more expensive independent campuses to cheaper four- and two-year public colleges.

The four-year public college population did grow marginally, while community college enrollment jumped by an estimated four percent.

V.U. Teacher Arrested

By LINDA BOND

A Villanova faculty member was arrested April 5 when he crossed the property line of the General Electric headquarters in King of Prussia protesting the company's construction of DSCS II, a satellite which is part of the communications link for all segments of the U.S. Military. Protesters believed the satellite would be used in nuclear warfare.

The associate professor of education, Dr. John H. Durnin, and 44 other demonstrators were charged of criminal conspiracy and criminal trespass, but were released on a $1,500 bail bond which all arrested persons (with the exception of one) signed as a guarantee they would appear for the hearing scheduled today.

The demonstration, by both lay and religious persons in the area, was organized by the Brandywine Peace Community, a group active in sponsoring various protests over the past three years. Demonstrators walked onto the GE property in pairs and in groups of threes carrying the Easter lillies, orgami cranes, balloons, a Hatian air plant (representing the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere), a peace kit saying "No Star War," and a seven foot cross.

According to Durnin, "Some people decided to walk on to speak with the workers and confront them with the issues. Some carried things to dramatize it and were arrested for being on the property.

"I just wanted to make a witness of myself as a human being who was not only against nuclear weapons that destroy life, but destroy civilization, the environment, and orthodox culture around the world.

Senate to Meet Today

The University Senate meets today for the last time this semester at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall with an agenda that features two motions from student senators' requesting changes in academic policies.

A motion from the Senate Executive Committee will be presented by Senator Paul Tufano requesting that the University institute a week-long fall break. Tufano will propose the feasibility of such a break by citing the possibility of starting fall semester classes the day after Labor Day.

Also at the meeting, Tufano, the 1982-83 Student Body President, will speak to the Senate in the traditional presidential farewell address.

Central American Issues Aired

By BOB O'MALLEY

The Campus Coalition for Central America, comprised of representatives from Delaware Valley colleges, has two groups here at Villanova working to educate students on the issues in Central America.

The two groups, the Peace and Justice Program and the newly formed Progressive Coalition for Peace and Justice, started in January, have a small but expanding following.

Progressive Coalition member Fred Slattery explained the reason the Coalition was formed, "In the last year, the problem (in Central America) has really escalated. President Reagan has increased the amount of aid and advisors (to El Salvador). It seems as if they (the Reagan Administration) are preparing for war.

The coalition wants to get involved in activities that will show support for the people in the region, according to Slattery.

"We want direct action to show support of the people in the area" stated Slattery. Actions such as letter-writing, legislative action and demonstrations are planned, as well as coffee houses to raise money for medical aid in the area.

Slattery stressed that they are a student-run group, although they do have a faculty advisor, philosophy professor Dan Regan. Slattery went on to explain some more of the Coalition's goals.

"The Coalition condemns the war-mongering of the Reagan administration and demands the end of military aid to El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras. Stop all covert action and the CIA's so-called 'secret war.' We ask students to disavow the actions of the current United States Government."

Slattery said the Coalition is still small, with only four students at Villanova actively involved, although he says that there are 25 people on a waiting list for a planned newsletter, which he hopes will help spread the word about the group.

The Coalition is involved at several colleges in addition to Villanova.

SEPTA's Future Discussed

to be self-sustaining, but there is not one in the nation that is," said Tucker. He pointed to comparison to other transit services since SEPTA is the largest transit system in the United States but is without a tax base.

"Financially, SEPTA is funded 60 percent from the computers and only 40 percent from subsidies, which is just the opposite as that of Conrail or most other transit systems," said Tucker.

In reference to the P&W line, Tucker felt the line is "remarkable." The line is not as bad as the transit system but has desperately also been neglected," said Tucker. "The new cars are 52 years-old." In two to three years construction is projected to begin on the P&W line for renovations and replacements in cars and tracks.

Complaints were received from Villanova students who usually commute by train about the Lancaster Ave. bus route 71 running off its time schedule. This was the first Tucker had heard about the bus delay and attributed the possible delay to the extra number of passengers the bus is accommodating. Tucker added that he would forward the complaint to the proper authority.

An apparent recent improvement by SEPTA is in the aspect of safety. Increased police patrol has decreased crime by one third to one half, according to Tucker.

"The entire system, servicing approximately one million passengers a day, is down to one felony per day," said Tucker, "which is an improvement and accomplishment.

"The transit future can be run economically once it is restructured at a manageable level," said Tucker.

Other future predictions for SEPTA are continuing strength, rehabilitation, and basic operations on a more reliable schedule.

"Inhibiting these improvements is a fundamental problem SEPTA is continually facing with the City of Philadelphia; 'Who does what?' said Tucker.

It is the city's decision to plan and build an improved and expanded transit system but once completed, SEPTA is responsible for further investments in eventual repairs or renovations.

Tucker directed discussion away from the subject of the current strike but did comment that he felt the strike is "senseless."

Environment Group Forms

By PAULA SOLLAMI

An environmental awareness club has recently been formed on Villanova's campus. Founded by Greg Johnson, Mike Hyak and Dave Guro, the club's first meeting was held before Easter break. The club was formed in order to make people aware of the glaring problems of pollution, toxic waste, depreciation of our natural resources and other hazards to our environment.

The club concerns itself mainly with educating the public about these dangers. Already the club is in the process of booking speakers and slideshow presentations for the upcoming academic year. The group is also interested in holding debates on controversial issues such as the existence of nuclear reactor plants and the abolition of toxic waste areas. These presentations will not be open exclusively for members but for the Villanova community at large.

Greg Johnson, a junior engineer and founder of the club, stated that if the group begins to take definite stands for or against any controversial environmental issue, then the members will not be afraid to publicly state their opinions. Already the group has decided to take a stand against a bill in Congress, the Clean Air and Water Act. This bill, if made law, would lower the national standards for clear air and water in the environment. This would benefit industry. The environmental awareness club has written local Congressman protesting this act with the motto "Vote for people, not industry."

The group is also planning hiking trips and general cleanup projects. Other plans for the future include field trips to nature preserves and camping expeditions.

R.A. staff, let alone the police, and the day continued in a peaceful and joyful manner.

The article states that the University was aware of the upcoming festivities and that it wasn't a complete surprise. If the administration was so against this event, how come less than half the R.A. staff from Stanford Hall was not present to prevent the "acute and explosive situation"? The article also states that a number of students "were reportedly very drunk" by the time the police arrived. I have to question this statement for these reasons: the first kegs were tapped at approximately 12:45 p.m. and the police arrived at 1 p.m. In my years of experience with alcohol, I have never seen or heard of anyone getting "very drunk" in fifteen minutes.

The police were approached by three students, who attempted to figure out what they were going to do about the situation. Apparently the police and the three students solved the problem and the "mob" that posed such a "physical" threat cleared away when the police and the three students asked them to.

From this point on, the students proceeded to continue with the annual event. I was there and I had a very good time and I thought that it was a beautiful spring day to hold the event. When the sun started to set the crowd dispersed and the yard was cleaned up by a number of students. The next day the R.A. staff returned and the back yard was as clean as I've ever seen it.

In conclusion, I have a question for the administration. What is the difference between "Radiation Day" in the spring and the Homecoming tailgates which take place less than 100 yards away in the fall? I would greatly appreciate an answer to this obvious inconsistency.

I hope that in the future your articles concerning such an event as this will be much more accurate and less biased. In my opinion the Administration should allow this annual event to continue. If it is supervision they are concerned about, why not have the R.A. staff moderate it to a degree? They would probably enjoy it as much as we did.

'Radiation 2'

To the Editor:

The Office of Student Life is at it again. I suggest all the people in that "office," if you can call it that, to take a course on "How to Run a University". The reports from the Office of Student Life and the Radnor Police concerning Radiation Day need to be corrected.

First, the students who tried to block the police cars were not "very drunk," nor was the group of students (this, by the way, does not make a "mob") verbally abusive to the police. Dr. Neville should not be disappointed at the way the students responded; he should be disappointed at the conduct of his staff.

Second, the Radnor police did not have to be called by Chris Janosik, the director of Residence Life. If the main desire of the Office of Student Life was to avoid physical confrontation, then why call the police? The students were orderly and behaved; the police did not want to be involved in this situation. If any confrontation occurred with the police, then it would be the fault of Janosik and Neville. The risk could have been eliminated, if the police had not been called.

Finally, when Neville states that "at some level the University was aware of the possibility of the party's happening," he displays an artful way with words (it borders on deception and lying.) In fact, Janosik ordered the Resident Assistants not to try to break up the party. Now, Neville is trying to use the R.A.'s as scapegoats.

I resent the strong arm tactics of Neville and Janosik in calling the police, ordering security to take pictures of the participants, trying to round up the "ring leaders" and attempting to expel these "ring leaders." Is this the way to run a university? This only makes Dr. Richard Neville and Chris Janosik look silly.

Hope Through Negotiations

To the Editor:

Permit me to add a few observations to the dialogue on events in Central America.

At present, the United States is the principal destabilizing force in the region through its promotion and support of a counter-revolution against the government of Nicaragua from Honduras, a phenomenon amply documented in the American press and in direct contradiction of the will of Congress. So far right are these "allies" that the moderate opposition to the Sandanistas, centered in Costa Rica, refuses to have anything to do with them.

El Salvador had a moderate alternative to the extremes of right and left until its leaders were either assassinated by paramilitary forces or forced into exile. They did not participate in the elections because the life expectancy of critics from the left is about two days. Yet the majority of the non-guerrilla opposition, the FDR, is avowedly non Marxist, comparable in U.S. terms to a Roosevelt or Kennedy.

The elections in El Salvador demonstrated little more than the human inclination to take the course of least resistance. Since identity cards, essential for employment and for passing through police roadblocks, have traditionally been stamped at the polling place, a memory reinforced by newspaper ads preceding the election, the large turnout demonstrated good sense more than any political committment.

To be sure, most Salvadoreans are neither Marxists nor thugs. They want peace. I wish defenders of Administration policy could explain to me why negotiations, a policy endorsed by most of the world's democracies as well as all but the most extreme elements in El Salvador, are out of the question. For negotiations offer the best hope not only to end the killing, but also to give the real political center an opportunity to participate in that tragic nation's future.

S.G. Support Disheartening

To the Editor:

I am almost ashamed to admit this, but for three years, I too was ignorant of the function of our Student Government. I believed that its members were do-nothings whose only desire was to compile an impressive resume. Nothing could be further from the truth.

My roommate, Shauneen Murray, has served as a nursing senator for the past year and her experiences have given me quite an education. Shauneen and other Student Government members put forth hours and hours of time and a tremendous amount of effort in order to protect and promote the interests of the Villanova student. While it is true that the administration can, and often has, thwarted their efforts, the important thing is this: the Student Government keeps working and planning in the face of many obstacles.

Sadly, its members do all of this without the support and encouragement of the vast majority of the student body. Nothing is more disheartening than trying to lead only to find that no one is following. Yet, Paul Tufano has put organization, enthusiasm and productivity into our Student Government. He and other members deserve our gratitude, not our ridicule.

It's always easier to complain about problems than to attempt to solve them. Perhaps, if those who criticize Student Government would take the time to understand its functions and the obstacles that it must overcome to achieve its goals, they would feel differently. Because of their hard work and dedication the Student Government members have won the respect and admiration of the Administration. This is the only instance in my memory where the administration has been so right and the students have been so wrong.
